HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 29, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House, the House will now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 10100, to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. SHERMAN, will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 10100, to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and in accordance with the previous order of the House the Clerk will read sections 27 and 28 of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

LOANS.

SEC. 27. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States the sum of $500,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor, at not less than par, coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form as he may prescribe, and in denominations of $50 or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in coin at the pleasure of the United State after ten years from the date of their issue, and payable twenty years from such date, and bearing interest payable quarterly in coin, at the rate of 3 per cent per annum; and the bonds herein authorized shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That the bonds authorized by this section shall be first offered as a popular loan under such regulations, to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, as will give opportunity to the citizens of the United States to participate in the subscriptions to such loan; and a sum not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, issuing, and disposing of the same.

SEC. 28. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow from time to time, at the market rate of interest, not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, such sum or sums as, in his judgment, may be necessary to meet public expenditures, and to issue therefor certificates of indebtedness in such form as he may prescribe and in denominations of $50 or some multiple of that sum; and each certificate so issued shall be payable, with the interest accrued thereon, at such time, not exceeding one year from the date of its issue, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the amount of such certificates outstanding shall at no time exceed $100,000,000; and the provisions of existing law respecting counterfeiting and other fraudulent practices are hereby extended to the bonds and certificates of indebtedness authorized by this act.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to strike out section 27 and insert in lieu thereof the proposition of which I gave notice yesterday; that is, to insert in lieu of the bond proposition an income-tax proposition.

Mr. DINGLEY. As printed in the RECORD?

Mr. MCMILLIN. As printed in the RECORD, with this exception: The RECORD print fails to include two changes which I made. The first change strikes out $4,000 and inserts $2,000 as the amount of the exemption allowed, and the other change increases the rate of taxation on incomes from 2 per cent to 3 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee proposes to strike out section 27 and insert what the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. That from and after the 1st day of January, 1899, and for each succeeding year thereafter, there shall be assessed, levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income received in the preceding calendar year by every citizen of the United States, whether residing at home or abroad, and every person residing therein, whether said gains, profits, or income be derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, or salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, a tax of 3 per cent on the amount so derived over and above $2,000, and a like tax shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income from all property owned and of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States. And the tax herein provided for shall be assessed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and collected, and paid upon the gains, profits, and income for the year ending the 31st day of December next preceding the time for levying, collecting, and paying said tax.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to discuss his amendment?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not at this time. I occupied yesterday rather more than my pro rata of time.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] in opposition.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I desire to offer an amendment to section 27.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has been recognized in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I wish to offer an amendmend to section 27 as it stands.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is now pending; and while that is pending another amendment can not be offered except as an amendment to the amendment. The gentleman may have his proposition read as a portion of his remarks.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I want to be recognized on this question. If I may be indulged for a moment, let me say that we have now before us the great war measure of this war—of more consequence than any other measure that will be presented here. And this most important measure is to be hurried through in this manner without being criticised or debated. I want to say to this House that the issuing of bonds in the manner here proposed will be approved of, as the gentleman on my right says, by the bankers of this country. But we are legislating for the people of the country [applause], and if this bill goes through with the bond provision in its present form, it will, in my judgment, cost this people from twenty to fifty millions more than if it goes through in proper form. I desire a chance to be heard upon this question, and heard upon the amendment which I wish to offer whenever it may be in order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DALZELL. I suggest to the Chair that an amendment to the section takes precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] to strike out the section and insert a substitute.

Mr. McMILLIN. While I am not engineering the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I was just going to say that my amendment is a substitute for section 27, and, that being so, an amendment to the original text is in order, my substitute still remaining pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. If he has offered a substitute, the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is in order. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts moves to amend by striking out at the end of line 9, section 27, on page 44, the words "ten years from the" and all of lines 10 and 11 and the words "3 per cent per annum" and inserting the following words:

"One year from the date of their issue and upon the expiration of three years, or bonds payable after three years and upon the expiration of seven years, or bonds due on a certain day within three years from the date of such bonds, as the Secretary of the Treasury may elect, such bonds to bear interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent per annum."

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am probably the only Republican who (from any indications I have had) proposes to take issue with this bill, or at least with two or three sections of it. As I have had no opportunity to discuss this measure in the general debate, I ask that I may now be allowed by general consent to proceed for fifteen minutes. I think the House will recognize that I am justified in this request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed without interruption for fifteen minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that we have bonds coming due in 1904 to the amount of $100,000,000, and in 1907 to the amount of $559,640,650. It is now proposed to issue bonds to the amount of $500,000,000 more, to become due in 1908. It is thus proposed to crowd the payment of all these $1,100,000,000 bonds into two years.

It is proposed, furthermore, that we raise $100,000,000 of revenue not needed to carry on this Government in ordinary times. It is hoped that this war will not continue more than a few months. Certainly there is no probability that it will last more than two or three years. What are you going to do with your $100,000,000 of increased revenue? Unless this $100,000,000, mounting up possibly to four, five, and six hundred millions, is deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in the banks of this country where it can be used by the people it will wreck the financial system, and by the Committee on Ways and Means. [Laughter and applause.] And the chairman of that committee knows it, if he will consider this proposition.

What are you going to do with this surplus revenue after the war closes? I ask the second member on the committee [Mr. PAYNE], or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], Will you meet this question, or will you not? Has it come to this—that when the Committee on Ways and Means presents a proposition to this House, we must follow that committee like sheep and vote for the proposition, right or wrong? [Applause.] I hope there will be no applause—not a sound. I am speaking to the bill. It is too great and serious a matter to be trifled with, even by applause.

A MEMBER. Well, you need not expect any on this side.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Have we ceased to be led? It has been proclaimed by a very able and honest and impartial and distinguished gentleman I admire above any man in the country that this House has ceased to be a deliberative body. Is it true that we have also ceased to be a legislative body? Shall we cease to be led and be commanded? Are we to be punched up in line by saber from behind and slapped on the stomach in front and wheeled into any line that may suit the powers that be? [Laughter.] I ask whether the members of this House are to be warped and swayed from their judgment in their action in great legislative enactments by anything of that kind? It is a shame that on this great measure we can not have even a reasonable time for debate.

I say now that this measure ought not to be voted upon until next Monday at 4 o'clock. That would give us a little time for fair debate. Shall we pass it to-day and send it over to the other end of the Capitol, to be kicked about there for two, three, or six months? Had we not better take time to discuss this most important of war measures?

Mr. Chairman, with the amendment proposed by myself the Secretary of the Treasury can issue his bonds so as to have them become due from 1908 on, an equal amount each year, and we will pay them from that date in equal amount until 1908 if we choose. With the bonds we now have due in 1907, in connection with those that become due in 1904, he can take his own time for their payment, according to the provisions of the amendment, refunding as many as necessary. Is not that common business sense? Is there a business man on the floor of the House who would make all of his notes come due on the same day—$100,000,000 in 1904; $559,000,000 in 1907; $500,000,000 in 1908? Would he not average the amount over each year of the ten? And yet to pay them we are to have an income of $100,000,000 a year between those years——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand this bill, it is a proposition to issue a ten-twenty-year bond, which bond can be paid by the Government after ten years—in 1908—if it so desires, and then, if it does not choose to pay them at that time, can pay them at any time within the next ten years thereafter. Is that not a fact?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Certainly. But what will you do with the hundred million dollars of revenue that you are receiving all the time between now and 1908?

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman from Massachusetts, as I understand it, because I am seeking for information, as no doubt the gentleman himself is. I understand, in the first place, that we have entered upon a war. I understand, in the second place, that this bill is calculated to raise an annual revenue of about $100,000,000. In 1904 you will have $100,000,000 to pay, in 1907 in the neighborhood of $600,000,000 to pay, without counting the intervening obligations. I understand, in the third place, when the war ceases, that it will be the duty of the general Congress to immediately—when we have no longer need for these revenues—to repeal the law. [Applause.] That is what I understand.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I am glad the gentleman has made the suggestion, and thank him for it. The proposition of the gentleman, or his suggestion, is in accord with the action we have seen on the floor of various members of this House, who have attempted to make it impossible for us to pay the honest debts of the Government to our own citizens, upon the ground that we have not sufficient revenue, and I think the gentleman himself was one of the opponents of such payments.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Chairman, we will discuss the question of claims when they are up for consideration. But when the question of the prosecution of this war is up, let us drop all other questions and devote our entire consideration to that. The gentleman and myself, as he knows, will not agree about these claims.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Then let us make, like sensible men, proper provision for the pending war.

I want to say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the people of the United States will never consent to repeal a solitary one of these taxes until we have paid the last dollar of the honest private claims due the citizens of this country and until we have paid every dollar of the bonds which have been issued and are due by the Government of the United States because of this war. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. If you will extend my time, I would be very glad to yield to the gentleman for any colloquy.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to any extension the gentleman may want. But I suggest that there is not a man here who is in favor of voting for the legislation now pending who supposes that it will be intended as a revenue devoted to the purpose of paying private claims or anything else of that kind.

It is strictly and exclusively a war-revenue matter. I can not, therefore, agree with the gentleman in respect to his criticism of myself or the committee.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I am in favor of such legislation as will pay the last dollar that the war costs before it is repealed. I do not mean to refuse to the Government anything that is necessary in that regard. For the purpose of fighting the war, a system of taxation; and when peace is declared, instead of repealing that law it is our purpose to allow it to remain permanently upon the statute books until the last dollar of war debt is paid.

I want to say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as well as to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that the Government and the finances of the Government and the principles of taxation vary absolutely and differ absolutely from those provided for the conduct of private citizens in income and expenditure.

Every dollar of interest that we continue is a tax on the people to pay, and unavoidably so, as there is no possible way for the Government to recoup it; but a private citizen can invest his surplus funds and use them in his business or lend them. You will find when you get on the stump after this war closes that you have got to meet this proposition of selling long-time high-interest bonds. When the Government allows a debt to stand for a single moment it becomes an additional burden of taxation on the people, as I will show you, but which the Secretary of the Treasury that we now have does not seem to realize. He fixes his eyes upon selling a given amount of bonds.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me one question?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman think that the taxes levied by this bill are in excess of what will be necessary to prosecute the war?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Not at all; and I would make the total amount more rather than less; but I want the taxes so collected, and used to pay the debts of the Government as fast as they are collected, precisely as a private person would do, and not to put into the banks, to which the people object, or store them in the Treasury, a hundred millions a year, until it amounts to five or six hundred million dollars, disorganizing our whole financial system.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Where does the gentleman expect that money which is to be laid up to come from—the sale of the bonds?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Not at all. We have got to sell our bonds to run the war, but when the war closes we will have a hundred millions of revenue surplus per annum over what should be used in the meeting of the ordinary expenses of the Government, and that should at once be applied to the payment of the war bonds.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The point I am trying to get at is, where is this surplus to come from that the gentleman thinks is to be laid up?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The chairman of the committee on Ways and Means says this bill will produce a hundred millions per annum of revenue more than we need for ordinary expenses. That is where it is to come from.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Well, but I ask the gentleman——

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Now, please let me go along, for my time is running.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to this, in illustration of what I say. From 1888 to 1891 this Government paid $361,686,065.02 of the bonded debt of the United States. Why? Because they must get surplus Treasury money into circulation, or it would have ruined our financial system. What did it cost to do that? It cost $56,268,649.78 in premiums on these bonds bought that went into the pockets of the bondholders, and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee now propose in this bill to repeat that experience over again.

Furthermore, let me say, Mr. Chairman, that the bonds that were sold in the last Administration, when the credit of the Government was at its lowest point, were sold under conditions which those who bought the bonds took into consideration, the same as money lenders do, justly and properly, and will in war times. I am not criticising them at all. But when we put out this large amount of bonds in war times we shall sell them at about par at 3 per cent. For the bonds that we put out under the last Administration, the face value of which was $262,315,400, we received $293,388,040.33, and the bondholders had in their pockets, had they sold their bonds on January 1, 1898, a clear profit of between $40,000,000 and $45,000,000, $40,812,817 at the least.

That is precisely what the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations are inducing this House to do again. Rates of interest paid does not always indicate wisdom. A government had better pay 6 per cent for two years and then pay its debt than 3 per cent for five years and then pay. I submit that as a proposition to be acted upon and to be approved by this House; this bond feature is not justified at all. In 1889 our bonds sold to pay an income of only 2.09 per cent; in the three years, 1887, 1888, and 1889, of 2.29 per cent; in the eight years from 1883 to 1892, of 2.46 per cent. Within a year after the war closes we can refund our debts at 2½ per cent interest or less. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word with reference to the Secretary of the Treasury. It is assumed that after having secured the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury we must obey and vote these bonds. Why, I saw a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury the other day approving a financial scheme drawn by an eminent citizen which I know if it were enacted into law would make a crisis in this country compared to which the crisis of 1893 was as a morning zephyr to a Western cyclone. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman tell us what it was?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. No, sir; it is nothing that concerns this House—now at any rate.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say furthermore that the Secretary of the Treasury came before the Committee on Banking and Currency and made a statement with reference to the exchanging of certain bonds. To read the whole thing would be quite amusing to this House—the questions I asked him and the answers he gave. And when he got through asserting that there would not be a dollar more of total taxes collected and total principal and interest paid, and when I told him it could not possibly be so, he thought I was an exceedingly ignorant fellow who was hardly worthy of his consideration, as he waived me aside with a very gentle——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I ask that I may continue for a few minutes.

Mr. HARTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Massachusetts have ten minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. I object if the attack on the Secretary of the Treasury is to be continued.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. I do not object if the gentleman wishes to discuss the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I propose to discuss this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, when it came to be investigated he was found to be $74,000,000 out of the way, as his proposition would have increased the public debt in interest and principal $74,000,000. Now, I have this to say of him: That in my judgment no man ever sat in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury that administered the Treasury of these United States with any more safety and ability than the man who now sits in the Treasury Department of the Government, but I want to say further that I have never seen a man in that high office that would give his opinions offhand on important measures so carelessly as the present Secretary of the Treasury. [Laughter and applause.]

The plain people do not object to taxation. The wage earners are entirely willing to pay fair taxes. I have had a little experience in trying to save money in salaries in the legislature of the State of Massachusetts, to save people from taxation, and in every case I have met the condemnation of the rank and file of the party and the people. What the people demand is work, work, work, and when necessary for the administration of the Government, the necessary taxation. The generosity, the public spirit, the patriotism of the masses of the people increase as you go down from the top, from beginning at the most wealthy until you get to the honest, industrious men at the bottom; and you will find the men at the bottom most free to sacrifice their lives, if the nation needs it, and their substance, if the nation needs it, to the town, the county, the State, or the nation.

We ought not to accept this bill as it is; and I hope it will be recommitted—recommitted to the committee, which I shall vote for when the motion is made. Every Republican ought to vote to recommit, that it may be perfected on proper lines. We have no right to put in any bill the most vexatious and perplexing and annoying tax that could be devised. How will this bill work all throughout the sparsely settled South and Northwest and the agricultural sections of this country? How will it work to the common people? A man wants to give his note to his neighbor, and before he can give a note he has to go 10 miles to get a stamp. Our farmers and our mechanics can not go about the country carrying an assorted lot of stamps in their pockets ready to put on notes, receipts, etc. Tax the rich. The rich do not object to taxation any more than the poor. Put the tax where they will be bound to pay; but do not make a tax that will be an annoyance.

Ah! but the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DINGLEY], and probably the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON], says: "The banks and corporations will print the stamps on their checks and other legal papers." Certainly; and about two-thirds of the tax will be collected without especial annoyance; but the other third will to collected with an annoyance such as no legislative body has a moral right to put on the people. The principles on which this Government are founded are constantly ignored, viz, that "a wrong to the meanest citizen is an injury to the whole community." Have we got to annoy and to invalidate legal instruments and cause excessive and unnecessary loss to a large number of men comparatively poor in order to get the necessary amount of taxes? We ought to put a tax on tea and coffee. The people would hail with approval the putting of a war tax on tea and coffee; and I am told that it would yield $27,000,000. We ought to pass the Loud bill, and save anywhere from $6,000,000 to $12,000,000 by that bill. [Laughter and applause.]

I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means if they considered that bill and the saving of that amount of money in the expenditures? I was told when a boy that a penny saved was a penny earned. I think it is true now, and I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has gone over the expenses of this Government to see if we can not save a few millions here and a few millions there. Why not put an import duty on silks, and the same duty on all manufactures of silks? Silk is manufactured in large establishments in a few localities, and it could be very easily done. Why not tax luxuries instead of these taxes of annoyance? [Applause on the Democratic side.] We want the work done, and we ought to pay the taxes. All over this country men will have to throw away all the blank money-instrument books they have, all the check books, etc.

I wish to say that I want to vote for this bill. There is no man who wants to vote for it more than I; but when the end comes the people will want to know why we provided long-time bonds. The people will want to know why we repealed these taxes, if we do repeal them before the war bonds are paid, rather than pay the bonds; and when the people ask us why we issued these long-time bonds in such a manner as to compel us to repeal this tax law before they could be paid, when we go upon the stump and we undertake to answer them, what are you going to say about it? I want to say that nearly all the people of this country demand that these taxes be levied and that they be kept on until the last dollar of the bonds of this war and of the country are paid; and I am with them.

Mr. GRIGGS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Yes, certainly.

Mr. GRIGGS. Has the gentleman's attention been called to the fact that this bill will cost every cotton farmer of the South 25 cents on every cotton bale?

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is 1 per cent.

Mr. GRIGGS. It will cost them $3,500,000 on a crop of 10,000,000 bales.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. No; it is impossible for me to say what it will cost. A few features were so objectionable I have not analyzed it all the way through. [Laughter and applause.]

[Mr. TODD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, the war with Spain is at last upon us and the sinews of war must be instantly provided. Let us not, in the enthusiasm of our praiseworthy patriotism, however, rush blindly into legislation which will soon turn to our discomfiture and dismay. Let us not, under pretense of freeing the Island of Cuba, further enslave the producing classes of our own beloved land. There is little in the present measure that commends itself either to my judgment or my sympathy.

The limited time allotted me prevents an analysis of the bill at this time. Of it generally it is enough to say that it is ill advised, sectional, uneven in its burdens, and unlimited in its reign of terror. In the masquerade of a patriotic war measure Shylock's voice is heard in every sentence, and "long, felonious fingers" are reaching through it into the "pockets of posterity."

The majority of the Ways and Means Committee, in preparing this revenue bill among themselves, seem to have had an ear attentive to the popular demand for war, while both hands were active in forging chains with which to manacle our working classes in times of peace. There is neither patriotism, sense, nor judgment in issuing at this time the enormous interest-bearing debt of $500,000,000, or any part of that sum.

The boasted high-protection Dingley bill did not and could not raise sufficient revenue to meet the ordinary and current demands of the Government in time of peace, and you are taking advantage of war conditions to impose under false pretense an enormous tax, which more temperate tariff burdens would have avoided, to pay war expenses and meet at the same time our daily required payments.

As another excuse for issuing these bonds the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in explaining the measure, attempted to show and did assert that our Treasury was virtually bankrupt. The Treasury is not bankrupt, as I shall presently show; but even if it were, that circumstance would not justify this cruel tax. Mr. DOCKERY, of Missouri, an able and experienced member of the Committee on Appropriations, in answer to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], clearly showed to this House, and boldly challenged contradiction, that the Treasury had, aside from the one-hundred-million gold reserve, over $75,000,000 ready on demand to meet extraordinary expenses.

In addition to this the Treasury holds, in round numbers, forty-five million in silver bullion on which certificates could easily issue. There being no other crying need in a war with Spain for the one-hundred-million gold reserve, this sum could easily be used as a further exigency asset, thus giving two hundred and twenty million ready in the Treasury for instant use. No man on this floor during this whole debate has ever dared estimate our war expenses at any sum above twenty-five million per month. The sum on hand, as I have shown, would easily pay all expenses of war up to the 1st day of November next. Your present bill, aside from the bond issue, it is estimated, will produce one hundred million a year.

From now till November, then, it should bring into the Treasury an additional fifty million, which would conduct the war with all necessary means to the 1st of January, 1899. Then, I ask, Mr. Speaker, what, in the name of all the heathen gods, do we want to issue any bonds at this time for? Congress meets in regular session the 1st of December next, and could then, if war continued, make proper provision for its energetic prosecution.

Mr. Chairman, in this holiest war of all time, I would not lay a straw in the way of our Army or Navy. I glory that my country is willing to endure another baptism of blood that this continent may be free from Spanish oppression or European control. I would give every dollar necessary to our valiant volunteers, our Army, and our Navy, that our flag might be upheld and our national honor maintained. These inspiring sentiments entertained by us all and doing honor to us all is being, it seems to me, used as dazzling light to blind our eyes to the future effect of this proposed legislation on our own country and the future prosperity of its people.

In this rapid succession of events and amid the whirl of war preparation let us pause long enough to get our bearings. What obligations are we assuming? You propose in the bill now under consideration to issue $500,000,000 in interest-bearing bonds. You have already appropriated $50,000,000, and the internal-revenue taxes provided for will reach, as estimated, one hundred million more each year, and this makes a grand total of $650,000,000 provided for at one session of Congress, the full half of which is unnecessary except for purposes which, with your patient indulgence, I will attempt to unearth and examine.

Did you notice how slow our Republican friends were in taking action in the Cuban matter? All the powers of earth and air and sea could not get a move on them. They refused for a year to permit a vote on Cuban belligerency and prevented as long as they could a vote on Cuban independence, and when, finally, under a question of privilege, Mr. BAILEY, of Texas, offered a resolution declaring the independence of Cuba it was ruled out of order by the Speaker. An appeal from the decision of the Chair was promptly made, and the question of recognition of Cuban independence depended on whether the ruling of the Chair should be sustained.

The Republican side, with a few honorable exceptions, voted with the Speaker, and Cuban independence was defeated. War is somewhat dangerous to trade and commerce. The money power, intrenched as it now is in this country, can get along well enough in time of peace. That power was interested in maintaining peace, and peace prevailed. The pride of our Navy was foully blown to death in the peaceful harbor of Havana, and peace was so much desired by the Administration that it was actually treated as a mere incident, accident, or side issue. How your tears flowed for Cuba, while your peaceful hands were folded over the few remaining Government bonds unpaid. You wondered what effect war would have on their sale, while your lamentations over your suffering neighbors were launched toward heaven.

I hate hypocrisy and double dealing. Why do you not come out from your cover like men and meet the minority in open, plain, truthful debate? Why do you not tell us plainly the real reason for asking six hundred million taxation to defray the expense of less than a three hundred million war? You never consented to war until humanity and patriotism, outraged at your homes, began shaking your seats beneath you here.

When driven by those to whom you look for future preferment, and forced on by the patriotic minority to some proper action in the line of Cuban freedom and humane, civilized warfare on that island, you seem to have taken counsel of the power that put you here, you seem to have advised with the money sharks, stock gamblers, bond syndicates, and devised ways and means for waging war and at the same time protect the "money interest" and the "sound business principles" and the "prosperity" of this set of Molochs who would barter patriotism for pelf and sell their country's honor for gold.

In obedience to the interest, if not at the command, of these public plunderers, you consent to issue, and over our protest you will authorize the issuance of five hundred millions of 3 per cent 10-20 bonds. This gives a safe harbor in which capital may anchor. It makes all the stronger those ties which, during the whole of your unhallowed ministry, have bound this country in partnership with favored private interest and pushed farther from our hope the ideal of our fathers, who attempted to frame and thought they had built a government of equal rights and privileges to all under the law—a government, in fact, of the people, by the people, and for the people. I had, in my view of present conditions confronting my country, as soon pay tribute to foreign power as to any domestic syndicate.

The danger to this Republic lies right here. You levy an imposition on the people that the bondholder may prosper and withhold, by refusing to use means clearly in your reach, the proper amount of money to transact, under most favored conditions, the ordinary business of life. You thus double the wealth of one and the poverty of the other and draw a broad, dangerous line between classes in this country. Let me appeal to you, my countrymen, in the voice of patriotism, to avoid this wicked legislation. There are at hand so many easier, better, and quicker means of raising the necessary revenue, and no brood of ills and woes and heavy burdens will follow in their train.

Our first duty now is to strike out of this bill the whole section providing for the issuance of interest-bearing bonds and pass in lieu thereof an income-tax law. Ah, but you gentlemen on the other side seem to fear such tax. Did you ever notice how easy it is to frame a bill laying taxes on the poor, and at the same time the most experienced statesmen, erudite lawyers, and able legislators are unable to draft a bill or suggest a means reaching the income of the rich.

For a hundred years the Supreme Court held an income tax constitutional. It remained for the Supreme Court as then constituted, only a few short years ago, by a bare majority of one to declare such law unconstitutional. This last decision is at variance with all other decisions of that court on that question and is in direct conflict with sound principles of judicial reasoning. I will not here attempt an analysis of this decision or make an effort to expose its error.

The masterly argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has made clear the fallacy of reason adopted in that decision, and has made equally clear to us all the wisdom of again forcing another and better—yes, a correct—decision of this most important question. The personnel of that court has changed since that decision. There are two new judges on the bench. The case was decided by a majority of 1. The people still have hope, if you will only have patriotism and courage. We submit an income tax to you instead of a bonded debt.

Not one of you will dare attempt to meet us in debate upon the merits of the amendment, which is simply a right to tax the rich as well as the poor, or, as said by Mr. NORTON of Ohio, "to impose a burden on the champagne of Shylock as well as on the beer and tobacco of the people." This you meet with sneers, and cry, "Pray, let us be manly; let us issue bonds." Bonds it will be. You have already settled that—settled it, probably, before war was declared. It was probably necessary to settle with the money kings in order that you would heed the people's demand that you free Cuba and avenge the Maine. It was probably the condition paramount on which you were permitted to vote for war.

When we present to you an income-tax amendment, you cry out "we need money right away;" "the court will decide the amendment unconstitutional," and "we will receive no revenue from it." When we offer to coin the silver in the Treasury or to issue certificates on the unpledged silver, you say it is money issued on nothing and is worthless, as there is no value in seigniorage, and no such thing as silver seigniorage. When we offer, as we do offer, to issue one hundred and fifty million Treasury legal-tender notes, in holy horror you scream "inflation," "inflation," and begin at once to paint a doleful picture of poor people suffering from having too much money.

Your ways and ours are different. We believe in issuing in emergency cases like this money instead of debts. We do not fear your cry of "inflation" and "cheap money." Money had better be a little cheap than to be so dear as to become unattainable. The issue of even $200,000,000 instead of doing injury would really benefit the whole country, encourage trade, foster enterprise, and put new life in every branch of legitimate business. No war was ever fought, and no great war will ever be successfully fought, as you are trying to fight this—on the gold basis.

But I refuse to permit myself to be led now into the question of free-silver coinage, no matter how great my temptation is, to reveal the danger which besets our country from the constant contraction of the circulating medium. It is enough here for me to know that with you if you will, but without you if you will not, we will in the beginning of the near century elect an Executive and a Congress that will restore the money under which the expiring century so auspiciously started our Republic on its grand march of triumph. With free coinage of silver and gold alike the Government can safely issue many hundred millions of dollars, with redemption promised in coin—easily enough can thus be issued to carry this war to a speedy and final victory for our side.

The whole inspiration of the proposed bond issue is to make somebody—yes, nearly everybody—pay heavy taxes in the way of interest for the benefit of the few who neither sow nor spin. As I have attempted to show that the bonds are not necessary, I will beg your indulgence to the consideration of certain facts which will convince any reasonable man of our ability to issue coin notes and keep them at par with the best money in the world. My attention has been called to the facts by the able speech of the Hon. W. C. JONES, of Washington, one of the ablest free-silver Republican bimetallists in public life. He lays down the undeniable premise that the amount of money necessary to any people is dependent on the business energy of that people, or, in other words, the producing and consuming power of a people measures the money necessary to the exchanges involved in their business.

An intelligent answer to the question how much silver, or paper based on silver, could we use, makes it necessary first to inquire into the volume of business transacted by us compared with the volume of business in the other parts of the world. It is evident, however, that the power of any nation to create a demand for money is measured by the volume of business transacted by the people of that country. The Hon. THOMAS B. REED, of Maine, present Speaker of this House, and in my opinion far the ablest Republican living to-day, on February 1, 1894, made a speech in Congress and presented the comparison thus:

> We produce one-third and the rest of the world, England included, two-thirds. The population of the world is 1,500,000,000, of which we have 70,000,000, which leaves 1,430,000,000 for the rest of mankind. We use all our manufactures, or the equivalent of them. Hence we are equal to one-half the whole globe outside of ourselves, England included, and, compared as a market with the rest of the world, our population is equal to about 700,000,000. I repeat, as compared with England herself as a market our people are equivalent to 175,000,000. As compared with the rest of the world, England included, we are equal as a market to 700,000,000. These figures more than justify the adjectives of the Englishman, and the cold facts of mathematics surpass the spasms of rhetoric.

This same Mulhall cited by Mr. REED presented to Public Opinion, in issue of June 6, 1895, an article measuring the nations by the number of foot-tons of effective energy daily devoted to the creation of wealth, and these are his figures:

United States	120,300,000,000
Great Britain	66,110,000,000
Germany	45,580,000,000
France	34,580,000,000
Austria	22,510,000,000
Italy	11,300,000,000
Spain	10,640,000,000

Measured in this way, twelve Spains would lack a fraction of equaling the United States in energy and productive power, and, of course, in demand for money to transact its business. How many Indias would it take to equal us, yet she alone by closing her mints caused silver to drop 17 cents in four days.

Mulhall further says, in comparing the productive power of different nations:

> An ordinary farm hand in the United States raises as much grain as three in England, four in France, five in Germany, or six in Austria, which shows that an enormous waste of labor occurs in Europe, because farmers are not possessed of the same mechanical appliances as in the United States.

And in commenting on these figures Mr. JONES, of Washington, in the Chicago Record, said:

> It takes six times as much money to handle the product of an American farm hand as that of the same kind of laborer in Austria. How many in India? And still our sages talk about per capita circulation as though the number of people in a country measured the amount of money required in the transaction of its business. If the United States were inhabited by 70,000,000 aborigines, instead of 70,000,000 progressive, industrious, intelligent, and civilized people, a gold circulation of $20 per capita instead of meaning an increase of business would mean that every redskin, papoose and all, would have a $10 gold piece hanging from each ear.
> Let my gold-standard friend consult the World's Almanac for 1895, or any other standard authority, and he will see that the people of this country produce the following proportion of the world's product:

	Per cent.		Per cent.
Cotton	64.00	Iron ore	28.00
Copper	40.00	Pig iron	35.19
Lead	35.00	Steel	38.47

> Nay, let him study one of the books his children use in school (Rand & McNally's Grammar-School Geography, last edition) and he may possibly realize how much better informed his children are than himself. On page 61 he will find the following:
> "The wonderful prosperity of the United States and the importance of its domestic commerce are indicated by the following facts: With one-twentieth of the population of the earth, it consumes one-fifth of the earth's entire production of sugar, three-tenths of its coffee, one-third of its iron, one-third of its steel, three-tenths of its copper, one-third of its lead, one-fourth of its cotton, one-third of its wool, one-third of its rubber, three-fifths of its coal, and one-half of its tin. The tonnage which passes through the Detroit River during the eight months of the year when it is clear of ice is greater by millions of tons than the entire clearances from the two greatest ocean ports of the world—London and Liverpool—during the whole year.
> "The American railroads transport annually about 620,000,000 tons of merchandise, valued at nearly $14,000,000,000. Each year this country produces and consumes five times as much manufactured material as Great Britain makes and exports to all the world. The entire exports of Great Britain, whose foreign commerce is greater than that of any other nation, amount to less than half of the domestic commerce which crosses the Apalachian Mountain system."
> But production and consumption do not alone measure the volume of a people's business. Where producer and consumer are neighbors, their exchange of commodities can be effected with comparatively little money. Not so when they are thousands of miles apart. The money needed to reduce their products to a common denomination is in use a considerable length of time, and freight and insurance in transitu demand a large addition to first cost. This increased demand is measured approximately by the transportation of a country. Mr. Chauncey Depew presented this feature of the case in a recent speech as follows:

"The whole of the tonnage on the oceans of the world last year was about 140,000,000 tons, while the tonnage of the railways of the world carried 100 miles was about 1,400,000,000 tons. There are 400,000 miles of railroad in the world, of which 180,000 are in the United States. Of the 1,400,000,000 tons carried 100 miles last year on the railways of the world, 800,000,000 tons were carried by the railways of the United States. You take the 600,000,000 tons carried 100 miles on the railways of the world outside of the United States, and then you add to it 140,000,000 carried on the ocean in the commerce of the world upon the seas, and we still have in the 800,000,000 tons carried on the railways of the United States 60,000,000 tons more than on all railways of the world outside of the United States and in all the ocean commerce of the world put together. This internal commerce of the United States makes it the most wonderful market on the globe."

In the face of these facts, can our opponents say we are lunatics for asserting that this country transacts one-half as much business as all the rest of the world combined, or that we are capable of giving employment to one-third of the world's standard money? And will they explain to us why a nation which transacts one-third of the world's business can not sustain and employ one-third of the world's silver without embarrassment?

In view of these facts, why do we stand hesitating and doubting our ability to use all the silver we can mine, all the gold we can get, and maintain our paper money at par? This war, with the frightful horrors which may attend it, will be an unmeasured blessing to our country if, perchance, through it we break away from the single gold standard, release the grip of corporate greed from the throats of the people, and restore our finances as well as our patriotism to the purity of our earlier days.

I sincerely hope no Democrat or Populist or Silver Republican will vote for the bond issue of this bill. All who do it will one day regret it when they see, as they will see, its effects when peace shall be restored. The provision is more in the interest of banks than it is in the requirements of patriotism. The many will pay; the few will receive.

We offer our lives, our treasure, as a freewill offering to our country's call, but we demand that our patriotism be not trampled under foot at the demand of greed. In giving Cuba independence, let us ourselves break away from financial slavery, and in the happy hour of that victory which awaits our arms on sea and land let our people rejoice with exceeding joy at their liberation from conditions which have well-nigh bound them hand and foot. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, we have the history of no century of time in which the common people, ever in love by nature with freedom, have not appealed to arms that human rights might be respected and liberty enthroned in the seat of despotic power. From century to century this mighty struggle has gone on, and the star of human hope has alternately arisen and gone down in darkness until it was at last forever fixed in righteousness over the great Republic of the West.

This Republic was called into existence that truth, liberty, and justice might never pass away and hope never die in the bosom of enthralled nations. Taught by the lessons that corrupt and tottering empires, kingdoms, and republics had impressed, the fathers laid deep the foundation of this Government on the rocks of eternal justice. Impartial law, commanding uniformity and equality in taxation as the only safe means of defense against slavery, was charged with the guardianship of human rights. Standing alone in the world as the champion of liberty and protesting against the divine right of kings, we have taught the doctrine of the equality of men and that government can lawfully exist only by the consent of the governed; that taxation without representation was tyranny, and that revolt or rebellion against a parent state that denied these just principles in the conduct of human affairs was patriotism and a God-given and inalienable right.

We have said that when kingly power was broken on American soil it should never be reestablished, a doctrine essential to the protection of human liberty and the perpetuation of the principles of republics. When in behalf of humanity it shall become necessary that the principles of right and justice be enforced, the conscience of a sincere and enlightened people will not be satisfied with the intimation that we are not concerned in the affairs of other people; they will not tolerate the doctrine that we are not our "brother's keeper." Impressed as no other people on the earth have ever been with the essential justice of these views of government, we have called the world to witness the sincerity of our convictions. In the pulpit, at the bar, through the press, on the hustings, behind the counter, in the shop, in the mine and the field—everywhere that the voice of an American was heard—the truth of this cardinal doctrine has been promulgated.

A little beyond our borders, over a narrow neck of water, is the land of Cuba, a colony of the Kingdom of Spain, a monarchy 3,000 miles away. With a rich soil, clear water, and a beautiful sky, surrounded by all that nature could give to her children, the Cubans are still a race of slaves to barbarous Spanish masters. For years they have plead in vain for freedom from unjust taxation and for the recognition of some of those rights which even despots concede. Failing, they resisted. Spain has answered their supplication with torches and fire, dungeons of torture, death, and the grave. She brought to death by the sword and enforced starvation in less than three years 400,000 of noncombatants in Cuba, or nearly one-fourth of the entire population.

Aged men and women and innocent children have fallen victims of Spain's unrelenting wrath, and young women made subjects of the hellish lust of her barbarous soldiery. These scenes of wretchedness are enacted on American soil and almost in sight of our shores to perpetuate a foreign despotism destructive in its nature of republican institutions. Amid this ruin and woe we have been told that the Government of the United States must not intervene to restore justice and peace; that Spain has the right to inflict the death penalty on all of her helpless colonists who complain of her despotism and the infamous exercise of unwarranted power. To end all this unequal contest, to stop this work of assassination, to quiet our shores, and to protect our commerce and the interests of our people in Cuba we had a right to demand of Spain that she stop this reign of rapine and bloodshed. She answered our overtures for peace in the Island of Cuba with haughty denial of the right of intervention.

We sent on a peaceful mission a vessel of our Navy to the harbor of Havana. Spain anchored it over a submarine mine. It was lost by explosion, with the lives of 266 of our sailors. It was then that the majority of this House recognized for the first time the bleeding form of Cuba as she knelt at the altar of American freedom and begged that we might not permit her to be destroyed because of the prayers to liberty we taught her to lisp. Then the lethargy of the majority in Congress was aroused. It was then seen that war was inevitable. It was then known that if Congress and the President had heeded the advice of the minority and recognized the rights of the Cuban people more than a year ago the Maine and her brave men would be sailing the sea, that Cuba would have been free by her own exertion and the aid that such recognition would have secured, and the United States Government would not have been involved in a war which she could not now avert and be true to the principles of right and justice, law, and humanity.

But whatever may have been the part of wisdom, however easily real statesmanship and diplomacy might have averted the disaster of war, however ruinous the consequences of the neglect of duty deferred, the conditions have become such in the last few months that this Union of States could not avoid the conflict without dishonor. We are in the midst of war. Not a war for territorial aggrandizement, nor for treasure or revenge, but in vindication of the cause of the weak in the right against the powerful in the wrong. Our law says to the private citizen that he may use such force as is necessary to prevent one neighbor from unjustly taking the life of another, and, if necessary, that force may extend to the taking of the life of the assailant.

The United States denies to Spain or to any other country the right to enter on American soil and put to death her colonists for belief in the principles of republican government, and she has declared her intention to resist such methods by peaceful means, if possible; by armed intervention—which is war—when necessary. This war is a battle for freedom. Spain has offended the sense of justice of all mankind. We make no war for the material benefit of our posterity. We make no war for the preservation of the constitutional rights of our people. We come as the willing, conscience-bound allies of a wronged and oppressed people.

Our own sense of right has been outraged. The war is just, but it is essentially a war of and for the present generation. Posterity can have no interest in it and can obtain no benefit from it, except in the perpetuation of the evidence of a noble and just ancestry. This is all that coming generations can obtain from the struggle. To protect the integrity and the honor of our own times it would be cowardly to entail the expense on our children and our children's children. The sinews of war should be supplied by this generation. To bequeath a bonded indebtedness to our children to cover such expense would belie our glorious pretension. Our greatest danger is not in actual war. It lies in the disposition in such times to yield our conviction of duty to the masses of our own people to the apparent exigencies of the hour and in trusting to the future to extricate ourselves from the consequences of a departure from the true principles of taxation in raising a war revenue.

Gentlemen of the House all are loyal to the cause of the country. Revenue to prosecute the war must be raised. Congress must provide the ways and means. But the principle of uniformity and equality in taxation must not be departed from. It was unjust taxation that brought helpless Cuba to her condition. Let us not enslave our common people with a bonded indebtedness issued in the cause of Cuban freedom. I would rather see Cuba in bondage than to enslave the common people of my own country.

I would rather Spanish despotism would desolate every foot of her soil than to give $500,000,000 of bonds to enslave the present and coming generations of our own people. We need no measure of this character to successfully prosecute the war with Spain. The bill, by a tax on articles of consumption, carries more than $100,000,000. We have appropriated $50,000,000. We have available $100,000,000 more. This sum is sufficient for present purposes and those of the near future. Congress can remain in session, if necessary, to meet the call of the Administration for any additional revenue for war purposes. Let us make haste slowly when we begin to tax the people.

Mr. Chairman, this is a war peculiarly of this generation in all of its motives and consequences. Let us pay for it. I object to the proposition in this bill to issue $500,000,000 in 3 per cent bonds or any other amount of bonds at any rate of interest. We are asked, Why the opposition to bonds? We answer, They are unnecessary. Next, a bond is the evidence of the Government's indebtedness. That indebtedness can not be contracted unless the Government has credit. The Government can have no credit unless its right to tax the people to raise revenue when constitutionally exercised will produce the revenue necessary to pay the debt or bond.

The realization on the bond depends, therefore, on the ability of the people to pay. The holder of the bond necessarily becomes the creditor of the people and the labor of the people is pledged not only to the payment of the bond, but of the interest on the bond. The bond represents a proportion of the wealth of the country. By law this bond is not taxable. The holders, therefore, of the $500,000,000 of bonds would lock up this much of the wealth of the country in nontaxpaying property, while the means of the people who pay the bonds would be the subject of taxation. Thus the wealthy would pay nothing of this tax and the common people would pay it all. The issuance of bonds results in the creation of nontaxable and nonproducing classes; bonds make slaves of the common people and idle aristocrats of the wealthy.

Again, if the Government has sufficient credit to float a large interest-bearing indebtedness, that same credit will enable it to float a noninterest-bearing indebtedness to the extent at least to which its revenues may reasonably be calculated within a limited period to extinguish that indebtedness, without withdrawing any of the wealth of the country from taxation by placing it in nontaxable bonds. The issuance of Treasury notes would accomplish this purpose. These notes would form a part of the circulating medium of the country, and replenish a currency already contracted beyond the point of toleration.

It is idle to say that these notes in this form would depreciate, so long as the people entertained any confidence in the ability of the Government, any quicker than the interest-bearing bonds would depreciate, for both are alike based on the credit of the Government. The bond bears interest and the Treasury note does not. That is the only difference on the face of the paper, but it is a portentous difference in the ultimate result of the two issues to the people. With little plausibility it is said that because the Treasury note does not bear interest it would not readily circulate.

The history of the past teaches otherwise. When we consider the fact that only 4 per cent of all our business is done with foreign countries, and that, therefore, gold is necessary only for actual use in 4 per cent of all our trade, and that when all the munitions of war must be purchased at home, and that none of the money to be raised is to go beyond our own confines for expenditure, it is apparent that the absence of an interest-bearing provision in the paper will not affect its value as a circulating medium so long as the United States is solvent. The Government is strong enough, in my judgment, to invest such money with full legal-tender power, and maintain it at par with gold as a permanent circulating medium. When the war is over, this proposed immense issue of bonds would be used as the basis of the formation of additional national banks of issue.

The whole currency of the country would more effectively be placed in the permanent control of the national banks, with unlimited power to expand and contract the same at their will, and the gold standard would be fixed forever, with all its infamous and corrupting influences, in the affairs of the Union; so fixed, indeed, that the sovereign power of the Government would be gone from over its currency, and nothing but revolution and bloodshed could restore constitutional rights to the people and arrest decadence in our institutions. We would then be in the condition in which Cuba is to-day—brought about by more insidious methods, and yet as intolerable.

A liberty-loving people would make the same choice between bonds and a noninterest-bearing paper currency that the Christian would make between eternal death and eternal salvation. Let the franchises of the great corporations of the country be taxed; let all men bear equally the burdens of taxation in proportion to their taxable property, and then there will be no deficiency in war revenues.

I might consent to taxation of almost any lawful form, for I would not agree that the Government for one moment shall need the means of prosecuting the war so long as there remained a single object of taxation; but there are no circumstances under which I would ever vote for the issuance of bonds—the unseverable links in the chain of human slavery.

Let us not mortgage the unborn generations. Let us not forget the sons of toil, who must pay this debt. Let every man of to-day do well his part, and our flag shall float in the Island of Cuba until every Spaniard is driven beyond the seas; the forests shall bend their lofty crests to kiss the silken folds of the emblem of freedom; the last remnant of a redeemed people shall come from the mountains, the hills, and the valleys of Cuba, and standing on the borders of Havana's harbor to celebrate the birthday of the new-born Republic, they shall "remember the Maine," and with tearful eyes turned to heaven, thank God that truth, justice, and liberty can never pass away so long as He shall permit the American Republic to live.

[Mr. MERCER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

[Mr. MADDOX addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can add anything new on the question before the House. I voted for the appropriation of $50,000,000, and in doing so believed it was the proper thing to do to help the starving people of Cuba to gain the liberty which they have fought for under adverse conditions.

I have voted for the resolutions demanding the withdrawal of the Spanish forces from Cuba and Cuban waters. I have voted for the resolutions declaring war, and I stand ready to vote for this revenue bill, in order that the necessary funds may be made available to properly back the resolutions passed by Congress. We tried to obtain the desired end by peaceful methods, but it looks as though by war only can it be attained. Well, if it takes war to free Cuba, let us have it, and let us provide the necessary funds to carry it on. We have waited long enough. The starving of helpless women and children must stop.

I want to say that the voting of $50,000,000 in this House for war was an act that I never expected to witness. I was in the Union Army during the war of the rebellion, and from the time that war closed in 1865 until now I never thought I should see war declared by the United States again; but I tell you, Mr. Speaker, it was worth every dollar of that fifty million to see on the floor of this House men who had met in bloody conflict—some in blue and some in gray—stand here side by side, shoulder to shoulder, and vote as a unit to maintain our national honor. I hope we will again stand here and vote as we did then to provide the money to carry this war to a successful and speedy end.

The great city of Chicago, a part of which I represent, has sent to the State capital nearly 4,800 of her citizen soldiers, who are not only ready and willing, but anxious to go, not for the $16 per month, but for humanity's sake, to free Cuba from the yoke of Spain, and to avenge the destruction of the 266 lives and the noble ship of war, the Maine, in a so-called friendly harbor in the silent watches of the night by the Spanish officers of Morro Castle. The silent victims of this unequaled treachery can not speak for themselves, but their mute lips need form no words. We do not forget them; their spirits are with us, and their names will be borne in the minds of the people long after their treacherous assassins have been driven from the American Continent forever.

I thank God that we have commenced the war and fired on their forts, and that we will soon land our forces in Cuba with arms and food for the patriots. I hope for an early termination of this war, and that we will be again at peace with all the world, and with a new Republic of Cuba added. When these things have come to us, if our Democratic friends can show that an income tax (which has been declared unconstitutional by our Supreme Court) is proper, it can be carefully considered and acted upon; but do not at this time of need try any doubtful schemes of taxation, for, as one of their apostles has said, "A condition, and not a theory, confronts us."

If the war is to go on, money must be provided as quickly as possible and by certain methods—taxation on things which can be gotten at readily and by the sale of bonds. The uncertainty of an income tax can not fill the measure of our immediate and pressing need. Let us put politics aside for the time and accept the measures which will bring us certain and prompt returns.

We can issue bonds and get the money quickly and cheaply, because the credit of this country is beyond the question of a doubt, and because we have always paid our bonds in honest money that is worth its face in any part of the civilized world.

I trust that the vote upon this bill will be unanimous and that the money will be in the Treasury when it is needed. Then we can feel that we have done our full duty, and victory over the oppressors of the unfortunate Cubans will be assured. The men now at the front and those preparing to go will feel that Congress is backing them and has confidence in their valor and patriotism.

I hope they may be able to return soon to their homes with honor to themselves and to their country, and with the feeling that they have done full duty to the country and to their fellowmen.

Long may they live and be remembered as brave and true sons of the great Republic of the United States of America.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, at the risk of being "branded as unpatriotic," which, judging from the air of lofty scorn with which it is usually mentioned, must be a very distressing operation for the brandee, I am constrained by a sense of my duty as a Representative to record a protest against the bond provision of the measure under discussion. It is a favorite method with the advocates of a weak cause to endeavor to discredit opponents whom they can not answer; but a humble member of the party that has been called an aggregation of cranks, calamity howlers, anarchists, socialists, lunatics, etc., ad nauseam, should not object to a continuation of the tactics which have proven ineffectual to stop the rapid growth of reform sentiment or check the steady progress of our nation in the direction of a more complete financial and industrial emancipation. It is a grave indictment to charge a man with being unpatriotic in a great national crisis; but it has been noted in human experience that the man who most loudly vociferates "stop thief" has not always the high standard of morals that he would have the public believe.

The United States is at war with Spain, and the record of individuals and parties will show which has conceded most of partisanship for the achievement of patriotic ends. There will also be a record in the future by which every truly patriotic member who desires the best interests of his country can afford to be judged, no matter what present clamor may be raised against him.

A nation of more than 70,000,000 people, producing about one-third the wealth of the world, with the accumulated property of thirty-three years of industrious peace, and possessing, as has been stated by the gentleman from Maine, "almost the highest credit of any government on the face of the earth," is going forth to do battle with a nation of 17,000,000 people who for many centuries have been in a state of almost continuous internal and external conflict, and who are practically without resources, capital, or credit. Spain has not been able in thirteen years' warfare to subdue a few thousand Cuban insurgents, though it has had the advantage of greatly superior numbers, possession of all fortifications and military stores, and has spent in the effort more borrowed money than the Cubans ever possessed. In this unequal struggle the weaker power is 3,000 miles from its base of supplies and coal has been declared contraband of war.

Unless grossly mismanaged, such a conflict can not be serious to our Government. A bill has been introduced which provides for taxation and bonds that will, together with cash now available, provide an immediate war fund of nearly $800,000,000, and we are asked to adopt it in toto on the pleas of "emergency legislation" and the "exigencies of war." In event we refuse to comply, we are charged with lack of patriotism and "an attempt to find an opening for demagogic experiments through the necessities of the Government."

Now, what should a prudent and careful Representative do under such circumstances? I agree with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that it was the part of wisdom for his committee to have "recourse to the legislation of the period of the civil war when so large an amount had to be raised," and be guided by the methods they found most effective in the time of trial. Not only should this be done in the matter of taxation, but if it be found necessary to raise a larger amount than can be produced by emergency taxation we should adopt the policy of our Government in the days of its greatest former crisis, and prefer an issue of legal-tender money to placing an additional bonded debt upon the nation.

The same high and correct motives that induced our Committee on Ways and Means to have recourse to the legislation of the civil war, the same faith that they evince in the wisdom, patriotism, and statesmanship of the founders of the Republican party, should animate all who are familiar with the success of the means adopted for providing adequate revenue during the war of the rebellion. The same conservative judgment that fears to make innovations upon their plan of taxation should guard us from the mistaken policy, which was early abandoned by the statesmen of that period, endeavoring to conduct war upon borrowed money.

Members of the minority are threatened with execration if they introduce and attempt to force the adoption of such campaign measures as the free coinage of silver, the income tax, and the coinage of the seigniorage in time of the nation's peril. Republicans are certainly culpable if they stand for a bond issue that, taken in connection with the late vote of the House of Representatives upon the Teller resolution, means nothing less than an endeavor to rivet the gold standard upon the United States beyond hope of deliverance. What more infamous attempt to place partisanship above patriotism could be imagined? It is true there has been an effort to thinly disguise the design and effect of the measure, but both are apparent to every reading, thinking citizen.

I know not whether declarations that indicate Falstaffian courage and Pecksniffian purity will mislead voters of the Eastern and Middle States, but in the Fourth district of Nebraska, which in this emergency furnishes about one-fourth of the quota of volunteers for the entire State, and which will play its full part in the great drama to be enacted, there is too high a standard of general intelligence to be easily swerved from their usual custom of construing present utterances in the light of past records. If it is wrong for the minority in time of public peril to seek an advantage for silver or the income tax, it can not be right for the majority to hold up before us the fear of national defeat and humiliation, and by such means to curse our country with a bond issue for the real purpose of strengthening the cause of gold.

In the name of common honesty, why should the majority demand a standard of patriotism to which they can not measure up? Why would it not be fair and right to postpone the settlement of past differences and conduct this contest to a successful conclusion by the issue of Treasury notes, against which there is no platform declaration of any party extant? The greatest speakers and writers of the Republican party have defended such a course as a war measure and questioned the patriotism of all who opposed it. Though the Republicans have been in power at various times since the civil war, $346,000,000 of non-interest-bearing currency, issued during that period, still remains in circulation as evidence that Republicans have never abandoned the greenback policy.

The kind of money that sustained the sires in fighting for freedom and Union from 1861 to 1865 will be loyally accepted by their sons while maintaining the honor of our flag and assisting to secure liberty for Cuba. The whole problem of providing adequate revenue without bringing partisanship into question can be solved by striking from the bill under consideration the sections providing for the issue of bonds and certificates of indebtedness and inserting in place thereof the following, which, though submitted by RICHARD P. BLAND, a Democrat, reenacts the war policy of ABRAHAM LINCOLN, a Republican, and would, in my judgment, receive the hearty support of every Populist and Silver Republican in Congress:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be engraved and printed United States Treasury notes to the amount of $150,000,000. Said Treasury notes shall be a legal tender in the payment of all debts, public and private, and be issued in like denominations as is now provided by law for United States notes commonly called "greenbacks." That the Treasury notes herein authorized shall be covered into the Treasury and paid out from time to time in the discharge of public expenditures as the exigencies of the Treasury may require. That a sufficient sum of money is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry this section into effect.

The amount of the issue as above provided is ample for present emergencies, and Congress should remain in session to assist the Executive in every way possible, and be ready to "vote all necessary means to successfully prosecute the war." Section 7 of the Constitution of the United States provides that—

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

When the relative standing of the two nations is considered, it will be seen that it is unwise to incur unwarranted expenditures or make needless preparation for a struggle which may not be greatly prolonged. It is an evidence of weakness, not strength, for us to exhibit undue haste or willingness to mortgage our patrimony. What farmer having an illness in his family would consider it reasonable to create a large interest-bearing debt so long as physician, druggist, and merchant were glad to extend to him credit upon open account? Would he not prefer to meet liabilities as they came in, to rushing headlong to folly and ruin by mortgaging his homestead for a far greater sum than it was probable he would need, trusting to circumstances to find use for the residue, in order to make a display of his resources.

To vote this enormous amount of money, and place it in the hands of the Executive, and go home to fix political fences, would seem a very desirable course to some members who discourse very loudly of patriotism just now, but to me it does not seem a brave or manly thing to do. I can not see that we are justified in voting a certain sum of money and going home if our services are needed here. I am satisfied that the people of the district which I have the honor to represent can make choice of a Representative in Congress without any suggestions or influence from the man upon whom they have bestowed present honor.

No member should desire a reelection if his labors have not been satisfactory to his constituents; and if they are pleased with the record, he has nothing to fear. If by remaining in session, Congress can avoid a $600,000,000 bond issue, I, for one, would gladly stay at my post, intrusting my personal interests to the people I am trying to serve. We are charged by the Constitution with the especial duty of guarding the expenditures of the country, and we will be held to no light accountability if we provide a lump sum largely in excess of necessities and shift our responsibility to other shoulders by going home and saying to the Executive, "Use as much of this as may be necessary."

If the people desire that monarchical powers be given the President of the United States, they will take proper steps to confer them upon him. It is no disrespect to the Supreme Court to resent an encroachment by that body upon the domain of the National Legislature. It is no disrespect to the Chief Executive for us to live our own lives, do our own duty, and refuse to delegate any of the powers conferred upon us by the Constitution. As I view it, we are no more justified in the course proposed than the cashier of a bank in time of panic would be warranted in taking a vacation, borrowing and turning over to the president of the institution enough resources to conduct operations during his absence, but leaving him to fill both stations during the emergency.

It may be that some citizens of the United States who are and have been in the receipt of fixed salaries, do not realize the full meaning of an issue of $600,000,000 in bonds and certificates of indebtedness, but the farm owners, home owners, and wage-earners of this country know what debt and interest mean. They know how the currency would be contracted and business affairs limited by the operation of a popular loan, and, despite the fact that a portion of the appropriations is paid to soldiers, they realize that these payments will be made in such small amounts as to be ineffectual to prevent the congestion of currency incident to the large military expenditures of war.

As a result of bitter experience, they fear currency contraction, concentration of wealth, and the cumulative power of interest. They are convinced that the struggle necessary to free our country from the bonded debt proposed will be far more arduous than any contest with Spanish soldiery. They have an object-lesson in the $346,000,000 of legal-tender money that has for thirty years rendered a service equal to—yes, even superior to—gold, as there has been no attrition. The people of this country have the intelligence to see their rights, and will have the courage to maintain them.

There is a belief that there may be a sinister motive in the proposition to issue so large an amount of interest-bearing obligations at this time; that when negotiated the war may suddenly be brought to a close and the remainder of the bond issue utilized to retire the present legal-tender notes, substituting interest-bearing obligations for the non-interest-bearing currency now in circulation. No party can be properly charged with such a scheme, but the emissaries of Shylock can always be depended upon to do his will. If this be true, we are beset by traitors from within as well as foes from without. It is not putting the case too strongly to say that in this event we will have to fight Spaniards in front and goldites in the rear, and that the latter will prove the more artful and dangerous from being nominally with us in the struggle.

In the language of a recent editorial utterance of the New York Commercial, "It would be one of the most atrociously unpatriotic and distinctively harmful actions that has yet been seen in an American Congress" to make class capital of the patriotic desire to protect the nation.

I maintain that the remedy suggested by Mr. BLAND, with a continuous session of Congress, is equal to any emergency, and so believing, I will cast my vote against any and every effort for the present increase in our bonded debt, no matter what epithets are showered upon me. Labor, which in the ultimate pays all interest, has rights which should be protected, and I must vote in accordance with my convictions.

Fully recognizing the responsibility which is upon each and every one of us, and desiring to measure up to the highest patriotism, I affirm that the course of action which I have suggested is to my mind and conscience entirely practical, for the best interests of our people and for our flag.

> No tyrant hath claimed that flag for his own;
> Its bright folds were never unfurled
> To flatter or shelter the glare of a throne;
> That banner was born for the world.

I hold with Commodore Decatur: "Our country. In her intercourse with foreign nations may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong."

Thank God, in this contest she is right, eternally right.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of patience to the discussion upon this question in a great many long and tiresome speeches in the day and some very bright and brilliant ones in the night. Mr. Chairman, if I had to express an opinion, I believe the small artillery at night has done more effective work than the large guns in the daytime. I am among the small guns—not physically, but I suppose so considered on account of the brief experience I have had on the floor.

I would gladly support the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER]; I would with still greater pleasure support the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN]; but I would still rather support a proposition to strike out the twenty-seventh section of the bill as totally unnecessary. The twenty-eighth section, carrying $100,000,000 of 3 per cent certificates, and the $75,000,000 well ascertained to be at the disposal of the United States Treasury will provide for the maintenance of this war upon the extravagant basis suggested for the next seven months, or until Congress returns in December. There is a striking similarity between the amount of the bonds carried in this bill, $500,000,000, and the late suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury that he wanted $500,000,000 for the purpose of retiring the greenbacks and putting the country more firmly upon the basis of the single standard.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the magnitude of this war, in my judgment, has been greatly exaggerated. Gentlemen upon the other side talk as if we were going into a contest with some of the great nations of the earth. Why, gentlemen, Spain is well represented by Don Quixote and Sancho Panza, and whenever they come in conflict with the United States of America they will find themselves in the condition that Don Quixote was when he struck the windmill. They had one little taste of it day before yesterday when three of the squadron were able to silence one of their best cluster of batteries near a city of 45,000 inhabitants.

I have no question that if the Government would take the reins off from Sampson he would reduce the city of Havana in two days, and the war would be at an end. Why do we want to provide an amount of money to put into the United States Treasury at this time that would carry on a great war for two years? I see no necessity for it whatever. Take the reins from Sampson's fleet. Take the reins from Dewey, on the coast of China, and the Philippine Islands will fall before to-night. Turn loose the fleet of Schley and let them strike a stunning blow. The Spanish navy to-day is crouching on their own shores, afraid to come out, and yet we are talking about going into a great war. The matter has been greatly exaggerated, and while we are pursuing a dilatory process we are defeating the very object for which this Government embarked in war. While we are acting upon this policy the reconcentrados are, no doubt, dying in the Island of Cuba by hundreds.

We are amply able to whip Spain, and the war can not last, in my judgment, ninety days unless we get into a complication with other powers; and if Germany or some other power wants to make common cause with Spain, it will be time enough to make appropriations for that when the time comes. It will be time enough then to pull out our roll and say: "Boys, we have got plenty of money." You can not scare anybody by simply raising $500,000,000 by this bill. If that is the case, let us raise $1,000,000,000 and say, "Here, we have more money than we need," and frighten the world.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The gentleman forgets that there are members on the other side who believe that a public debt is a public blessing.

Mr. BERRY. That will do for some people, but I do not think anybody really believes it. We do not need this money. If any question has been elucidated on the floor clearly, and has been asserted by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, it is that this war, on the most extravagant estimate, will not use more than $25,000,000 a month. Now, we have $75,000,000 in the Treasury and $100,000,000 raised by the 3 per cent certificates authorized in this bill, and there we have a preparation for seven months of war, and that will take us up to next fall, when the flag will be waving over Cuba, the Philippine Islands will be in our possession and Puerto Rico will be in our possession. We can take them in two weeks. Take the reins off from the fleets, and in six weeks Puerto Rico, Cuba, and the Philippines will be under the American flag. What is the use of talking about a great war? [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say a word touching this bill. I will be frank with the gentleman from Massachusetts and with the House and say that I am not in all particulars pleased with this bill. If I had supreme power, I could not myself draw a bill with which I would be in all particulars pleased, if it levied taxes—war taxes or peace taxes. It is not practicable to make any such bill entirely satisfactory even to him who frames it. Taxation is not a pleasant thing to me, nor is it a pleasant thing to the country; but it is a necessary thing in order to sustain the Government in peace as well as in war; and we must so legislate as to distribute the burdens to the best advantage of all the people and with the least friction in the collection of the taxes.

I cast about inquiring to see whether I could propose an amendment to this bill. If I had the supreme power, I would strike out all stamp taxation except upon proprietary articles and insert something else. But I could not get a baker's dozen on the other side and probably not two dozen on this side who would agree to strike out stamp taxation except upon proprietary articles and put the burden upon some other articles.

Mr. GAINES rose.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman must not rise. I have only five minutes. I talked about this matter among members and found that such a proposition did not meet with favor. Upon the whole, the sentiment in favor of stamp taxation is quite as strong in this House—on both sides of the House, so far as I can ascertain—as the sentiment in favor of any other form of internal taxation. So I have addressed myself as best I could, not being a member of the Ways and Means Committee, to making such suggestions as would get this bill into the proper form; and wherever

I had anything substantial to propose I have been met in a kindly spirit.

Now, one word touching the borrowing provision of this bill. Gentlemen say—notably the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY]—that we are to have $100,000,000 increase of taxation. Yes; but that is not enough. He says we are to have $100,000,000 of one-year certificates. True; but that may not be enough.

Mr. BERRY. I will ask the gentleman——

Mr. CANNON. I have only five minutes.

As either or both of these provisions are not enough, or may not be enough, what is the wise thing to do? To adopt such legislation that we can adjourn later on—toward the 1st of July—and go to our homes, leaving the Executive to perform his legitimate functions? In this view it is proposed to give him authority to borrow $500,000,000. Gentlemen seem to assume—notably the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] in his remarks on the day before yesterday—that this $500,000,000 was necessarily going to be borrowed. Not at all. Not one dollar of it will be borrowed unless the occasion for borrowing it in order to carry on the operations of the Government should arise.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky rose.

Mr. CANNON. My friend will recollect I have but five minutes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I should like to suggest——

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. It is stated in the press—and I have seen no denial of it—that the plates upon which to print these bonds are already prepared.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know as to that and do not care. The bonds will not be issued unless we enact this law, and they will not be issued unless your Government and mine needs the money to defend it.

Now, I say again, when anybody says that there is to be $500,000,000 borrowed and piled up in the Treasury he shows that he is ignorant upon the one hand or desires to misrepresent upon the other. Not one dollar will be raised by taxation, not one dollar will be raised by borrowing, except as it is needed. If the war ends in six months, as the gentleman from Kentucky thinks it will, then we shall be in position six months from now to repeal this taxation. It is very easy to find fault. It is very easy to criticise.

Now, in my judgment, the gentleman from Maine is right when he says that there ought to be authorized an issue of $500,000,000 of 10-20 bonds, payable in ten years at the option of the Government and with twenty years to run to final maturity. If we negotiate these bonds, we can begin paying them at our option in 1908, and from that on for ten years just as we please. We shall have $650,000,000 to pay between this time and 1908, which, I think, under any wise system of taxation, will take all the surplus that we ought to raise from taxation.

A gentleman near me suggests that the bonds will sell above par, and, if so, we ought to get the best prices for them that we can.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I send to the desk an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment. [After examining the amendment.] The amendment which the gentleman sends up appears to be an amendment to another portion of the section.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I think the suggestion of the Chair is correct. My amendment deals more directly with the section; but I would like to have it considered as an amendment to the amendment and to submit what I wish to say upon the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized for five minutes and can have his proposition read as a portion of his remarks. He can offer it at a later period.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Very well.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 44, line 11, after the words "quarterly in," insert the words "standard gold and silver;" so as to read: "payable quarterly in standard gold and silver coin."

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have observed in the public press that the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury when asked in the presence of a select conclave of bankers, meeting in the private room of Mr. Conrad N. Jordan in New York, whether these bonds would be payable in any other money than gold, replied that it was not exactly wise just now to agitate that question—that no political divisions ought now be opened by any assertions upon that point.

I rise now for the very purpose of agitating that question. It is an all-important question in this connection. If it is the purpose of Congress to pay these bonds only in gold, then the people of this country should know that fact, that their Representatives, being duly advised on the subject, might act accordingly on the proposition before us. If it is the purpose of the managers in charge of this matter to delude the people into the fanciful belief that these bonds are to be paid both in gold and silver by the use of the word "coin," they will not object to saying so unequivocally. If it is the purpose, as past events demonstrate, to provide that they shall be payable exclusively in gold, then let them say so, that we that are against such might oppose it. The people ought to know and we ought to know what is the exact purpose and object of the skillful manipulators.

Let us understand, Mr. Chairman, exactly what we are undertaking to do at this time. It is important to know it in order that we may vote understandingly, and in order to determine what will be the result if the bill succeeds.

We gather from the public records that as a "war measure" this Government sold interest-bearing bonds to the amount of	$2,049,975,700
That this Governments received from this sale only the sum of (discount on coin considered)	1,371,424,238
The profit to the purchaser at the outset was	678,551,462
We have paid as interest	2,538,000,000
Premiums paid for bonds not due	58,000,000
Paid on the principal of bonds	1,756,000,000
Total paid by us	4,352,000,000

The debt was $1,371,424,238. That is all we obtained. Yet by virtue of the premiums and increase of the worth of gold and the corresponding decrease of wages paid labor and the price paid for commodities, we have paid out of the endurances of our people $4,352,000,000—three times the full debt. Yet by force of the Government paying gold and buying it from bankers and paying interest upon it, the debt has so continuously increased that, measured in commodities—the proper standard of value—we still owe the full debt.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And still increasing.

Mr. FLEMING. And our commodities decreasing in price.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, our past Administrations have construed the word "coin" in the bonds to legitimately mean gold—and the option is given to the bondholder in that regard—notwithstanding the law upon the subject has been in the words of my amendment.

Now, sir, if the word "coin" is to receive the construction that has been practically given to the Teller resolution by this House and by the Administration, and make the word "coin" mean that they shall be payable in gold—and this is the purpose of our friends on the other side—if it is, the people shall know it; if it is not, you can adopt the amendment without injury or embarrassment.

We should understand that when the bonds are issued and the time of their payment shall have arrived, the Secretary of the Treasury is clothed with full power and discretion to say whether they shall be paid in gold or in silver, shall have the direction by this House that he shall not discriminate against silver and increase the bond debt of the people by making them buyers of gold at premium to pay a double interest to the holders—the interest on the bond, the price of the gold, and the interest upon that gold.

Mr. Chairman, let us not be buoyed off upon an imaginary patriotism to wrong the people by deluding them and then robbing them. Sir, the time of war has ever been the pat time for the pilferers of public confidence and the plunderers of the public Treasury to do their destructive work. They are cool, calculating, and determined. The people are confused or enthusiastic beyond reason. They are readily the subjects of prey to garnished thieves. This is the experience of every government—the credulous imposed upon, the trustful defrauded, and the truly patriotic surrendered in time to their enemy. We must watch this, aye, guard it, with a jealous eye, and place our public protest against it—by our vote condemn it. This scheme is a fraud. It is to provide bonds for those who could not have obtained them in the calm judgment of thoughtful people, and the man who votes for this provision of mortgaging their own people, placing the future generation in bondage, will for the remainder of his political life be seeking forgiveness from the people he wrongs, and for all his days be the conscious enemy of the country, the oppressor of the weak and defenseless.

In order, therefore, that there may be no repetition of past infamies under the guise of a flexible law, let us construe this one according to the professed intent of those who have tendered this bill. If they are false, they must be condemned before the nation.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a single word in reference to the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

If we had no outstanding bonds that would mature during the next six or eight years his suggestion would be entirely practicable and to the point. But we have bonds maturing to the extent of $650,000,000 within that time, bearing the high rate of interest of 5 per cent on $100,000,000 and 4 per cent on $550,000,000.

Now, in view of the fact that we have bonds maturing within six years and eight years bearing this high rate of interest, it seemed clear to the Committee on Ways and Means, it seemed clear to the Secretary of the Treasury, it seemed clear to every expert consulted in reference to the matter, that we should proceed to call in, either by purchase or redemption at maturity, all of those high interest-bearing bonds first, and that if we had bonds bearing 3 per cent interest maturing in the intervening period it would be for the interest of the Government to pay first the 5 per cent bonds and the 4 per cent bonds which would mature after this bill had been enacted into law.

Therefore the committee, Mr. Chairman, came to the conclusion the bonds existing bearing these high rates of interest should be paid first, and nothing could be gained, so far as the interest of the Government is concerned, by making the new bonds redeemable in three or five years. The objection to making them redeemable in three or five years was that there was grave doubt—and there is grave doubt, in the judgment of every expert consulted in the matter—as to whether, being now in a state of war and the credit of the Government necessarily somewhat affected by the prevailing conditions of war, a bond redeemable within three years could be placed at par, especially if first offered to the public.

And in view of the unanimous opinion, not only of the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee, not only of the Secretary of the Treasury, but of all the experts in the Treasury Department and of all experts who have had anything to do with bonds in the past, that we would run grave risks in offering to the public as a popular loan a 3 per cent bond, payable within three years, it seemed clear to the majority of the members of the committee that we ought not to incur so grave a peril when we had 4 and 5 per cent bonds that could either be purchased or paid at maturity in sufficient amount to cover any possible surplus that there could be in the Treasury prior to 1898.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Before the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee takes his seat, I desire to ask him a question, not exactly in the line of what he has been saying, but I want to ask it for my own information. Did it occur to your committee that it would have been a thing possibly not unbearable to the people to have raised by means of taxation twice as much as you have provided for in the present revenue measure?

Mr. DINGLEY. It was thought by the committee that $100,000,000 of additional taxation was all that in justice ought to be laid upon the people at the present time. An exigency may arise in the future, although I hope not, when some other method of additional taxation may have to be had. I hope not. I believe to-day that it will not arise; but a hundred millions additional taxation seemed to the committee about the amount that ought to be laid at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING] is recognized.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I should like——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It did not occur, then, to the committee that the best thing to do was to resort now to taxation, leaving the issuing of interest-bearing bonds to meet possible future exigencies?

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, as I have only five minutes, I can not let other gentlemen take my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I had very much desired to have the opportunity of submitting to the House an argument in support of that feature of the pending measure which provides for an income tax. It would be impossible, however, to make that argument with any satisfaction to myself in less than three-quarters of an hour or an hour; and not being a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, of course I foresaw that I would have no opportunity to have that time placed at my disposal. I will therefore take advantage of the privilege given by the House to print my argument in the RECORD within the next few days. For the present I will content myself with stating very briefly some of the propositions which I think I have been able to prove or will be able to prove in that argument.

The first proposition is that the income tax is the fairest and justest and the most philosophical tax that has yet been devised as a scheme of taxation. I say that proposition is true, whether you test it by abstract reasoning, or whether you test it by the practical experience of the leading civilized nations of the world.

My next proposition is that while it was supposed for a hundred years that the Constitution of the United States was the embodiment of political wisdom, yet if this recent decision of the Supreme Court invalidating an income tax is correct and must stand, the Constitution of the United States is fatally defective in a vital point necessary to the proper administration of a civilized government. I make that statement because the decision of the Supreme Court, while leaving in the power of Congress the abstract authority to levy a tax upon wealth, yet, as a matter of practical procedure, absolutely strips the American Congress of any and all power to levy a tax upon the wealth of this country and confines it within the limits of a tax on consumption.

Why do I say that? There are two kinds of direct taxation to which I shall refer. One is a tax on land, which we have still the abstract authority to levy. Let us look at that for a moment. I have gone back to the records and done some figuring on this. Under the land-tax law of 1861, if Rhode Island had paid her tax according to her land values, she would have paid fourteen one-hundredths of 1 per cent on her land values, and Missouri would have paid forty-nine one-hundredths of 1 per cent on her land values, or three and a half times as much. In other words, the farmer's real estate in Missouri would have been taxed three and a half times as much as the farmer's real estate in Rhode Island.

Coming again to the income tax that was levied upon all incomes from 1861 to 1870, the Supreme Court now say you can not levy it in direct proportion, as it was levied then, but you must apportionate it according to the population. Take the income tax of 1866, which averaged about 8 per cent on all incomes. If it had then been laid as the Supreme Court now say we must lay it for the future, the State of Massachusetts would have paid 2.8 per cent and the State of Minnesota would have paid 32.9 per cent upon the incomes of its citizens, or eleven times the amount which the citizens of Massachusetts would have paid.

In other words, if you levy a tax on the wealth of the country by means of an income tax in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court, the people of one State will pay eleven times what those of another will pay on the same amount of income; and if you levy on land, they will pay three and a half times what the citizens of another State pay, for similar inequalities would be found to exist now as existed in 1861 and 1866. What is the result? It is that for all practical purposes we are stripped of the power to levy a tax either directly on wealth or indirectly on incomes. Therefore this great Constitution, which we thought embodied deep wisdom combining fundamental principles which might be applied for all time to come, is greatly defective at a vital point, if that decision is right.

I say that decision is not right. I say it is bad law. Nine times the Congress of the United States passed an income-tax law or passed a law amending one that had already been passed. Seven times the Supreme Court, by direct decision or by strongest implication, said that such a tax was legal. This last decision is a legal anomaly, a political anachronism, and an economic blunder.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. FLEMING. I will print my argument in full in the RECORD in a few days.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I would like to know whether it is in order to discuss other features of the bill while this special section 27 is under discussion? If that be true, I would like to be recognized myself. These gentlemen are all speaking on all parts of the bill, while by unanimous arrangement only section 27 is to be considered, and, as I understand, five minutes allowed to either side.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HEPBURN). The Chair is unable to state. The present occupant of the chair was not present when that agreement was made.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts be closed in five minutes.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I think I am entitled to be heard on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has been recognized.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to have some limit, otherwise we will make no progress. I will wait until the gentleman is through.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend the Committee on Ways and Means for bringing this bill in such a form as to eliminate political discussion. The question as to whether the bonds shall be paid in gold or silver has been expressly ignored by using the old word "coin," which has so long been included in all our bonds. Yet, notwithstanding this fact, I find some gentlemen have been unable to restrain their partisan zeal, and have insisted on discussing the financial question. I am reminded of an occurrence which took place last fall in Kansas. There was a funeral going on; a large audience had assembled, and the preacher happening to be a little late, one of the brethren arose and said he would like to utilize the time by talking about free coinage for a few minutes. That seems to be the situation that some gentlemen have found themselves in on the present occasion. The disposition, however, in the main has been to treat this subject from a nonpartisan standpoint. I am gratified to find that feeling in this House. We ought to have but one motto, and that should be, Let us join together and pulverize the Spanish power upon this hemisphere and then once more fight in peace and harmony among ourselves. That is the spirit in which this whole question ought to be discussed; and in the main I believe the country will be gratified to know that that method has been adopted. The old straw of an income tax is certainly not a proper subject to be thrashed over now. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] moves as an amendment that we shall collect the money to pay our soldiers and sailors by an income tax; in other words, to mortgage the fruits of a lawsuit, a lawsuit not only certain to come, but certain to be adversely decided against the Government of the United States.

The Supreme Court has already determined the question. A lawsuit would be a poor asset with which to wage war. It takes money to buy guns and powder. It is always safe in such emergency to borrow money. The worst thing that could happen to us is to be compelled to pay it back. Money borrowed at once to meet our necessities is the best thing with which to fight a battle. The $90,000,000 or $100,000,000 that is to be raised by this bill will take a year to collect; and if we are to believe the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY], the war will be ended before that time. He says we will get through with it in three months. Every man in this House certainly hopes that his prophecy may prove to be a true one; but if it is to be finished in three months the most successful way to do that is not to hamper the Government in its credit. It would not be safe to lay in a supply of powder for only three months. It would be much wiser to provide supplies for six months or a year; and so also with money.

There is nothing that would rejoice the hearts of the Spanish Government like the announcement that we have refused to authorize the borrowing of money to carry on this war, and that we have resolved to enact a law for the collection of the funds for its prosecution through the slow process of a tax on incomes, which the Supreme Court of the United States recently declared that we have no power to levy.

This bill has been carefully drawn. I think there are some provisions which ought to be slightly changed, and I hope during the progress of the debate that some amendments may be adopted by the House; but surely we ought not to waste time in the discussion merely of political ideas, academical in their character, and some of them, such as the income tax, having passed beyond the domain of legislative discussion.

There are only two methods of obtaining money to conduct the war. One is by the levy of taxes and the other is by borrowing it. This bill provides for both methods. Taxation is a slow process, whilst the borrowing of money is speedy and will at once supply the means with which to prosecute the contest with vigor, and to make the war short it should be pressed with the utmost energy.

Some gentlemen propose an issue of greenbacks instead of bonds, but they lose sight of the fact that the greenbacks are a promise to pay on demand, and to maintain their parity it is necessary at all times to be ready to redeem them on demand, and the coin for that purpose can only be obtained by taxation or by the issue of bonds under the resumption act, under which the bonds must bear a higher rate of interest than that provided in the present bill. Experience has taught us that Treasury notes remain at par so long, and only so long, as prompt redemption is provided for.

If the redemption of the notes is provided for by the sale of bonds, then the result will be the issue of bonds after all. If the Government should refuse to redeem the notes on demand, they would go to a discount, as they did from 1861 to 1879.

If the notes should be at a discount, the cost of the was would be increased at least to the extent of the discount, so far as they should be used in the purchase of supplies. The sailors and soldiers at the front, of course, would receive their pay in a depreciated paper at par, as they did in the civil war.

It would be a great mistake to enter upon this war by the expedient of a depreciated paper currency.

In 1861 we could not help ourselves, but experience has taught us that the plan greatly increased the cost of that conflict.

When our paper was only worth 38 to 40 cents on the dollar, all of our munitions of war cost more than double what they would have cost had we been able to maintain specie payment.

We all want to make this war short, sharp, and decisive. To do this ample means must at once be provided, and the present bill fully answers that purpose.

No one likes to pay taxes, but war can not be carried on without great expense, and an honorable and free people will always recognize the necessity of sustaining the honor and integrity of the nation.

The American people have counted the cost, and will not only fight the battles by land and sea, but will bear with fortitude, as they have in the past, the increased taxation that the war will of necessity impose upon them.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts shall close in five minutes, three minutes of which may be used by the gentleman from Massachusetts and two minutes by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] on behalf of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that debate upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts be closed in five minutes, the gentleman from Massachusetts to have three minutes and the gentleman from New York to have two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Chair state the request?

Mr. DINGLEY. It is simply on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BAILEY. On the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts? I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MAXWELL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MAXWELL. Mr. Chairman, I objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman until he had recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the gentleman from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, did not touch the proposition that I made at all. I do not object to the bond sale. I approve of it. But let me call his attention to the fact that this Government funded in 1891 $250,000,000 of its bonds at 2 per cent, since paid down to about $25,000,000. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say again, our bonds were sold in 1889 to pay only 2.09 per cent income. They sold from 1887 to 1889 at 2.8 per cent income. They sold in the eight years previous to 1898 to pay 2.46 per cent income.

Now, my proposition is that we ought to put out short-term bonds, so averaged in amount as to have the same amount come due each year up to 1907, as provided in my amendment, and the Government can then fund them a year after the war closes at 2½ or 2¼ per cent. Ought we not to do that? What does the proposition of the gentleman from Maine come to? It comes to this: That in the years between now and the time when the bonds become due we shall not accumulate any money to pay these bonds. Until the year 1904 we shall not accumulate anything, but then we shall put on taxes and pay the $100,000,000; and we shall then reduce taxes and not accumulate any money until 1907 to pay for the bonds due at that time, and then we shall pay by taxation the $500,000,000 of bonds then due; that we shall not raise any money to pay the bonds of 1908, and then we shall raise in that year $500,000,000 by taxation.

My proposition is to raise the same amount each year until the bonds come due and have the same amount of bonds come due each year, just the same as any business man in the country would do in his business. I borrowed one pleasant morning $60,000 at the rate of 1½ per cent flat. There was no commission, and it did not cost me over 3 per cent in the last ten years that I was in business; but by no means on the principle that this bond business is to be done under this bill, but on the principle that I have asked, this power to be incorporated in this bill that the Government should put out its debt to it will come due on an average from now until the close of 1908.

Now, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] gets up I would like to have him state that this is not good business sense—a good business proposition. The plan is so outrageous to me that I could not under ordinary circumstances vote for the bill containing this bond clause. It is too unbusinesslike and unfair to the people.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Massachusetts would not allow the question of the gentleman from Illinois, I would like to call attention to the fact that the 2 per cent bonds are at a discount in the market. The proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts is that we provide here for a set of bonds that would be payable in three years, because, he says, he wants to continue these war taxes and pay these bonds. The proposition of the committee is that when the war is over we cut off the war taxes [applause], and that we pay the bonds as we paid the bonds of the late war, out of the usual and ordinary taxes of the Government. I want to say another thing to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that when the war of the rebellion ended we not only had a bonded debt, but we had another large outstanding debt which it took years to pay—a debt, including the pension roll, that amounted to as much as the bonded debt at the end of the war. We want to be prepared to pay this debt also when this war closes.

I greatly fear, Mr. Chairman, that there will not be revenue enough to pay even the $100,000,000 that becomes due in 1904. I shall think the country is very fortunate if we do happen to get the $100,000,000. If we do happen to get that $100,000,000 and more, how easy it is to go out in the market and buy the bonds drawing the interest of 5 per cent and stop that interest. If we have more than that, we can buy in the $550,000,000 of bonds and stop that interest of 4 per cent. Now, when the war is upon us, when we want to borrow the money, when we must have the money, and can not have any peradventure about it, as a business proposition, I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, it is sound sense, it is common sense, to make these bonds so that they will surely sell at par, so that we may have the money to prosecute this war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAXWELL. Mr. Chairman, there are many persons who believe that an income tax is not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. It is true that in Pollock vs. Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, some two years ago, the Supreme Court, as then constituted, by the change of opinion of one of its members and by a bare majority—5 to 4—declared such tax to be in conflict with the Constitution and therefore void. There are strong dissenting opinions in that case by very able members of that court, and it seems to me the reasons stated by those dissenting judges in favor of the validity of the law are much stronger than those of the majority.

I entertain a very high respect for the court as a whole, and of its members individually; but all human tribunals are liable to err, and this fact is recognized by the tribunals themselves. Hence, motions for a rehearing are filed under their rules and with their consent, and in many cases are sustained, there being probable error in the former decision. In view of the former decisions of the Supreme Court, which I will presently call attention to, we may treat the question in Pollock vs. Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, 157 United States, page 429, and 158 United States, page 601, relating to the income tax, as not finally determined, briefly review the matter and the authorities bearing upon it.

The sections of the Constitution to be construed read as follows:

Section 8, Article I, provides that—

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, and to pay the debts and to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Section 2, Article I, provides that—

Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound for service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons. The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of Congress of the United States and within every subsequent ten years, in such manner as they shall by law direct.

Section 9, Article I, provides—

That no capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

Section 9, Article I, also declares that—

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

The fourteenth amendment declares that—

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

The question arises at the outset, what are "direct taxes"? This question in substance was asked by Rufus King, of New York, in the constitutional convention of 1787, and no one seems to have answered. (5 Elliott's Debates, 451; Pollock vs. Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, 158 U. S., 640.) No system of taxation of that kind seems to have been in force at that time, nor had the term any settled legal meaning. This becomes important, because the Supreme Court of the United States has many times construed the term "direct taxes" and what were not, and we will now refer to those decisions.

In 1794 Congress passed an act imposing a duty or tax upon all carriages for the conveyance of persons, etc.

It was contended that this was a direct tax, and the case of Hylton vs. United States, 3 Dall., 171, presented the question squarely whether or not this was a direct tax. The court held that it was not.

In the able dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan in Pollock vs. Farmers' Bank et al., 158 U. S., 648, he quotes from the diary of Mr. Justice Iredell, one of the judges who, in 1796, decided the case of Hylton vs. United States supra. It is said:

This was a very important case, as it involved a question of constitutional law. The point was the constitutionality of the act of Congress of 1794. If a direct tax, it could only be laid in proportion to the census, which has not as yet been taken. * * * The court unanimously agreed that the tax was constitutional, and delivered their opinions seriatim.

Mr. Justice Patterson presented a very plausible and apparently correct explanation of the object of the term "direct taxes." He says:

The provision was made in favor of the Southern States. They possessed a large number of slaves; they had extensive tracts of territory thinly settled and not very productive. A majority of the States had but few slaves, and several of them a limited territory well settled and in a high state of cultivation. The Southern States, if no provision had been introduced in the Constitution, would have been wholly at the mercy of the other States. Congress in such case might tax slaves at discretion or arbitrarily, and land in every part of the Union at the same rate or measure—so much a head in the first instance, and so much an acre in the second. To guard, then, against imposition in these particulars was the reason of introducing the clause in the Constitution which directs that Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the States according to their respective numbers.

By the acts of Congress of July 14, 1798, August 2, 1813, January 9, 1815, and March 5, 1816, direct taxes were laid upon "lands, improvements thereon, dwelling houses, and slaves, and apportioned among the States." The reason slaves were the subject of a direct tax is explained in a later case.

Slaves were proper subjects of a capitation tax, which is described in the Constitution as a direct tax, as property; they were by the laws of some if not most of the slave states classed as real property descendable to the heirs. (Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, 8 Wall., 543.)

In the case cited, the principal question was whether or not a tax of 10 per cent on the notes of a State bank used for circulation was a direct tax. The court held it was not, and that the tax was valid. The opinion was delivered by Chief Justice Chase, who said in substance:

In construing the term no valuable light had been elicited as to the sense in which the direct taxation was used in the Constitution. That personal property, contracts, occupations, and the like have never been regarded by Congress as proper subjects of direct tax.

In Pacific Insurance Company vs. Soule (7 Wall., 453), the question presented was whether or not under the statutes the duty upon the incomes of insurance companies from whatever source was a direct tax that could only be laid by apportionment among the States. The court held that it was not a direct tax and was valid. The opinion, which was unanimous, was written by Justice Swayne, one of the ablest judges that ever sat on the bench. He cites with approval the case of Hylton vs. United States, supra, and says the views expressed therein were entertained by Chancellor Kent and Judge Story. In Scholey vs. Rew (23 Wall., 321–346), the question presented was whether or not a tax upon the succession to real estate was a direct tax, and it was held that it was not. In that case the statute declared that the term "real estate" should include all lands, tenements, and hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal, and that the term "succession" should denote the devolution of title to any real estate. Pollock vs. Farmers' Loan and Trust Company (158 U. S., 654). The question was again before the court in Springer vs. United States (102 U. S., 586–602), where the validity of the income-tax law of 1864, as amended in 1865, was involved. This act imposed a duty upon gains, profits, and income derived from every kind of property and from every trade, profession, or employment. It was contended by the appellant that this was a direct tax and could only be levied by apportionment among the States according to the number of people as shown by the last census. The tax was held by a unanimous court to be valid and not a direct tax.

It is said "it does not appear that any tax like the one in question was ever regarded or treated by Congress as a direct tax." Mr. Justice Harlan says:

The question what is a direct tax is one exclusively in American jurisprudence.

The text writers of the country are in entire accord upon the subject. [Applause.]

Mr. Justice Story says that all taxes are usually divided into two classes—those which are direct and those which are indirect.

Under the former denomination are included taxes upon land or real property, and under the latter taxes on consumption. (1 Story Const., 950; Pollock vs. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co., 157 U. S., 557–558.)

It is also said in Springer vs. United States, supra:

Our conclusions are that direct taxes, within the meaning of the Constitution, are only capitation taxes, as expressed in that instrument, and taxes upon real estates; and that the tax of which the plaintiff in error complains is within the category of an excise or duty.

In Pacific Insurance Company vs. Soule (7 Wall., 444), Judge Swayne reviewed at length the decisions upon the question of direct taxes. He says:

What are direct taxes was elaborately argued and considered by the court in Hylton vs. United States in the year 1796. One of the members of the court, Justice Wilson, had been a distinguished member of the convention which framed the Constitution. It was unanimously held by the justices who heard the argument that a tax upon carriages kept by the owner for his own use was not a direct tax.

In the majority opinion in the case of Pollock vs. Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, on rehearing no discussion is had of the decisions above referred to except that of Hylton vs. United States. When the Supreme Court has construed a provision of the Constitution, and particularly where the construction has been made by a unanimous court soon after the organization of the Government and followed by such court unanimously up to the year 1894, Congress and the country have a right to rely upon such construction as the correct one and act accordingly. The decision, in fact, becomes a rule of property, and if changed, should be by amendment of the Constitution and not by judicial mandate.

In Pollock vs. Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, supra, the Chief Justice says:

It is evident that the income from realty forms a vital part of the scheme for taxation embodied therein. If that be stricken out and also the income from all invested personal property, bonds, stocks, investments of all kinds, it is obvious that by far the largest part of the anticipated revenue would be eliminated, and this would leave the burden of the tax to be borne by professions, trades, employments, or vocations. (Page 636.)

And in the judgment (page 637) Chief Justice Fuller said:

First, that * * * taxes upon real estate being indisputably direct taxes, taxes on the rent or income of real estate are equally direct taxes; second, that * * * taxes on personal property or the income of personal property are likewise direct taxes.

The majority of the court seem to overlook the fact that when rent of land is paid to the landlord, it ceases to be attached to the real estate and is simply moneys in possession—in other words, income—and therefore liable to an income tax. The second proposition, that the taxes upon personal property or taxes on the income of personal property are direct taxes, if applied to many of the items in this bill, would probably result in holding that the duty thereon was a direct tax, and therefore void. If this decision should be adhered to, our Government may find itself handicapped by its own courts reversing the decisions of a hundred years and depriving it of the money needed to pay its expenses and preserve its credit or even to pay the salaries of the judges themselves. Such an unnatural construction could not have been contemplated by the framers of the Constitution. But it is said we should not criticise the decisions of the highest court in the land. The answer is, the judges are public officials, paid out of the public Treasury, and their acts are publicly performed and are of a public nature. If a mistake is made, the judges themselves, presumably, will be anxious to correct it.

For this purpose a motion for a rehearing is filed and must state some cause for a rehearing which a sensitive judge might construe as a reflection on himself. Yet it is not so intended, and a capable, conscientious, and fearless judge will try to correct an error if a material one is pointed out to him. The decision in question was rendered by five judges, while four judges have dissented and filed strong dissenting opinions. Under these circumstances, it is the duty of everyone who believes the decision to be wrong to protest against the same in a respectful manner.

I do not question the integrity of the judges or the honesty of their purpose, but I believe a great error has been committed in overturning the unanimous decisions of the court made by able and distinguished judges and assented to by the ablest lawyers and text writers in the nation for one hundred years, and by reason of which decisions the recipients of great incomes, those most able to contribute a reasonable amount to the support of the Government, are permitted to evade their just obligations and dues. With the utmost respect for the court, and believing that its members feel bound by the decisions of their predecessors without a break for a hundred years, I respectfully insist that an income tax is not a direct tax and is valid, and we trust the court will not by a forced construction of the Constitution deprive the Government of its just revenue necessary to carry on its business. [Applause.]

In the very able dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan, he says: "By its present construction the court, for the first time in all its history, declares that our Government has been so framed that in matters of taxation for its support and maintenance those who have incomes derived from the renting of real estate, or from the leasing or using of tangible personal property, or who own invested personal property, bonds, stocks, and investments of whatever kind, have privileges that can not be accorded to those having incomes derived from the labor of their hands or the exercise of their skill or the use of their brains. Let me illustrate this.

"In the large cities or financial centers of the country there are persons deriving enormous incomes from the renting of houses that have been erected not to be occupied by the owner, but for the sole purpose of being rented. Near by are other persons, trusts, combinations, and corporations, possessing vast quantities of personal property, including bonds and stocks of railroad, telegraph, mining, telephone, banking, coal, oil, gas, and sugar-refining corporations, from which millions upon millions are regularly derived. In the same neighborhood are others who own neither real estate nor invested personal property, nor bonds nor stocks of any kind, and whose entire income arises from the labor of their hands or the use of their brains.

"And it is now the law, as this day declared, that under the Constitution, however urgent may be the needs of Government, however sorely the Administration in power may be pressed to meet the moneyed obligations of the nation, Congress can not tax the personal property of the country nor the incomes arising either from real estate or from invested personal property except by a tax apportioned among the States on the basis of their population, while it may compel the merchant, the artisan, the workman, the artist, the author, the lawyer, the physician, even the minister of the gospel, no one of whom happens to own real estate, invested personal property, stocks, or bonds, to contribute directly from their respective earnings, gains, and profits, and under the rule of uniformity or equality, for the support of the Government." (Pollock vs. Farmers', etc., Company, 158 U. S., 672-673.)

I have voted for both men and means to carry on and bring this war to a speedy and successful termination, and shall continue to do so until victory perches upon our banners and an honorable peace is secured, but I am not willing to vote a mortgage upon this nation at this time for half a billion dollars when it is not necessary to do so.

"The available cash balance, including the gold reserve," as stated in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, on April 28, 1898, was $218,814,956.53. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee estimates the war expenses to be $1,000,000 per day. This being so, there is enough money in the Treasury without touching the gold reserve to conduct the war for nearly five months.

The estimate of the same chairman as to the income from the revenue bill under consideration is $100,000,000 per annum, and this probably is too low by many millions. Hence, the revenue from that source for five months would exceed $40,000,000, sufficient to prosecute the war for nearly seven months at least. A fair income tax, placing the exempt income at $2,000, it is estimated, would produce one hundred millions or more. And there are many other sources of revenue that have not been touched upon in this bill. A bond issue at this time is not only unnecessary, but it withdraws from circulation and business large amounts of money and permits it to remain idle in the Treasury for years, perhaps, while the people of the nation are suffering from the already contracted circulation. [Loud applause.]

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing among all the institutions of our Government that should be held more sacred than the Supreme Court of the United States. If that court should become corrupt, it would be the greatest calamity that could happen to the institutions we have organized under our Constitution, and hardly less fatal would be a general distrust of its members. As an humble member of the bar of that court, I feel that its honor should remain untarnished. Alike as a citizen of the United States and as a member of this body, I certainly entertain the same opinion. I read in the RECORD of the 27th instant, on page 4325, remarks made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. KNOWLES] upon this floor, in which, speaking of the judges of that court, he used this language:

The probate court which recently settled the estate of a deceased member of the Supreme Court found members of his family loaded down with Bell Telephone stock, which had been made valuable by a decision of that court.

Without alluding to the other most remarkable charges made by the gentleman at the same time, I think it is due to the country, I think it is due to this House, that any member of this body who makes such a charge as that should stand upon his feet and say what judge it was. I ask of the gentleman from South Dakota the name of the judge of that court whose family was loaded down with Bell Telephone stock.

Mr. KELLEY. Does the gentleman deny it?

Mr. EVANS. I do, and I call upon the gentleman to name the judge.

Mr. KELLEY. It would not be parliamentary.

Mr. EVANS. It would be parliamentary, especially as the judge is not now on the bench, but is dead. The gentleman need not skulk behind any objection of that kind when the reputation of the Supreme Court of the United States is at stake, and certainly not after manifesting no hesitation in making the charges he did last Wednesday night, when parliamentary scruples were much more demanded than now.

Mr. KELLEY. My colleague is not here.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think when the gentleman comes in he will meet the objections and the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. EVANS. I appeal to him as a matter of justice, alike to the House, to himself, and the country, that he state who the judge was whose family he says was found after his death to be loaded down with Bell telephone stock.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the informal amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. RIDGELY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "borrow," in line 3, and insert the words "issue and pay out;" strike out all after the word "par," in line 6, and insert the words "full legal-tender United States money;" strike out the word "States," in line 7; strike out all after the word "of," in line 8, and insert the words "one, two, five, ten, twenty, and fifty dollars."

Mr. PAYNE. I make a point of order against that amendment. In the first place, it embraces four or five different amendments, which the gentleman undertakes to offer at the same time. In the second place, the proposition is not germane to the pending section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] raises a point of order against the amendment. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY] desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. BLAND. What is the point of order?

Mr. RIDGELY. I will withdraw that amendment for the present and will offer it later as a substitute. I now move to strike out the last word of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that amendment will be withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment which has been read is to prevent the issue of interest-bearing obligations to be paid by the people of this nation. My amendment would leave the section reading as follows:

SEC. 27. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue and pay out, on the credit of the United States, the sum of $500,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor, at not less than par, full legal-tender United States money in such form as he may prescribe and in denominations of one, two, five, ten, twenty, and fifty dollars.

That would be a substitute for the entire section.

Now, before entering upon any discussion of this proposition, I wish to read a letter, which has just reached my desk, from one of the largest labor organizations of the United States, and one, too, which I believe voices the wishes and judgment of 90 per cent, if not 100 per cent, of all the laboring people of this country. The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 23, 1898.

To the Members of Congress:

GENTLEMEN: I write you in behalf of the members of the Order of the Knights of Labor, many of whom reside in your district and voted for your election. The war-revenue bill (H. R. 10100) is now before the House of Representatives, and is to be voted on Friday next. The tax features of the bill are perhaps necessary, and I have no wish to place any obstacle to taxation that is just and equitable. Sections 27 and 28 propose to increase the interest-bearing debt to the enormous sum of $800,000,000, that must be paid sooner or later by labor, to the impoverishment of their wives and children and to the babies that are yet unborn. Are the bond sharks, both native and foreign, forever to have a mortgage on this people and none to say them nay? We beg of you to help prevent the passage of this iniquitous measure. The roll of those who vote for it will be branded with the mark of the beast—the money power—that colossal and imperial despotism that toil not neither do they spin.

Those who vote against this bond issue, though they may not prevent it, will be heralded as the friends of labor. Labor, at its task, is not unpatriotic in asking this. Tax beer, tobacco; tax the clothes we wear and the shroud we will sleep in, but until the last extremity, in God's great name, saddle us with no more bonds. There are over $200,000,000 now in the Treasury; $100,000,000 more will be raised by the taxes of this bill, and yet the insatiate maw of the money power cries, "Give!" "Give!" and is never satisfied. The nation is not in danger; we are not fighting the world, but only a very small and decrepit corner of it. If our Navy can not protect our shores, the proceeds of these bonds can not build another in time to save us. No Spaniard can land on these shores, for if he did labor would rise as one man to defend their homes and country without money and without price.

Vote for it, and we may say with John Boyle O'Reilly:

"Take heed of your civilization,
Ye on your pyramids built on quivering hearts!
There are stages like Paris in '93,
When the commonest men played terrible parts."

Very truly,

JNO. W. HAYES,
General Secretary-Treasurer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish again to offer my protest against all bonds, and I do it most earnestly. I say that the day will come when the people of this country will forever stop the issuing of bonds by the Government. There is no need for such issues. We can carry on war for twenty years or any other number of years without them. So long as we have men and materials within the boundaries of this nation there is no need of the Government issuing interest-bearing obligations to the extent of a single dollar. We know from our experience that we can issue the credit of this nation in the form of legal-tender money and purchase therewith the services of the soldiers and the materials necessary for supplying our armies and to conduct this war for years and years without the necessity of borrowing a single dollar from any source whatever.

And the people of this country are rapidly reaching the resolution that the taking advantage of them in time of war to saddle them and their posterity with interest-bearing obligations must and will be stopped. Those who vote for this bond measure and the party that is responsible for it will be "called down" by the people of this country, and that in the near future. You are [addressing the Republican side of the House] only preparing for yourselves at the hustings a weak point in your legislation that will "down" you as sure as you carry through this bill. Issue and pay out the money first, then the people can pay the taxes you levy by this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. RIDGELY. I desire to offer this as a substitute for, not as an amendment to, the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] is recognized.

[Mr. BRUMM addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the pending section and all amendments thereto be limited to half an hour—thirty minutes longer.

Mr. SIMPSON. I object.

Mr. BRUMM. I want to know whether this is coming out of my time?

Mr. DINGLEY. I thought the gentleman had concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and amendments be concluded in thirty minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri, Mr. SIMPSON, and others objected.

Mr. DINGLEY. Can there not be some arrangement as to time? Otherwise there will be danger that other sections of the bill will not be reached, because the afternoon is running.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I realize that there are other sections which are important, and I would suggest to gentlemen around me that this amendment applies only to the issuance of bonds, and the one providing for a temporary loan, whether Treasury warrants or otherwise, is to come later. I have abstained from taking any time myself, in order that those who have not had time may be heard.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will not the gentleman suggest some time limit on section 27?

Several MEMBERS. One hour.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Gentlemen around me suggest one hour.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the discussion on the pending section and all amendments thereto be limited to one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending section and amendments be limited to one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to object, but I desire to have five minutes of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUCKER. Pending that request, a parliamentary inquiry. What time is set for taking the final vote?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Half past 4.

Mr. DINGLEY. Four o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. COONEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine desire the floor?

Mr. DINGLEY. Has that request been agreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. That has been agreed to. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COONEY] is recognized.

Mr. COONEY. Mr. Chairman, let us lay up no Spanish war debt against this Government. We are unanimous in the prosecution and support of this war; let us pay as we go. There are many other methods of raising the revenue than by issuing bonds. An issue of bonds should be the last resort of statesmanship, not the beginning of it.

Nothing would force a speedy and successful conclusion of this war so much as a declaration by this House that we will raise millions for those who fight the battles on land and sea, but not a dollar for the bondholder. Such a declaration would sound the hour when the fogs of politics, diplomacy, and delay that now hover over the acts and purposes of the Administration would have to disappear and actual war commence.

Sir, we have not yet been able to reach out and come in contact with the Spaniard before we are surrounded by and in the clutch of an enemy that bears a more sinister aspect. The President has just issued his call for 125,000 volunteers to free the Cubans; and now with undue but thrifty haste comes Shylock and issues his call for $500,000,000 in bonds with which to enslave the American people.

We ought to crush the Spaniard and end this war in two months; but if Shylock is to share our councils and attention, then the respective strength and character of the two contending nations do not furnish any reasonable basis of prophecy as to when this war will be ended. It throws us into a dual conflict, with the Spaniard in front of us and Satan in our rear, and the war will not terminate until the American lemon is thoroughly squeezed.

I know that liberty is the dearest, as it is the choicest, thing on earth, and it is never secured only as it is paid for inch by inch in blood and money. The American people have undertaken to pay for Cuban liberty in that kind of coin; but they will mete out just punishment to those who place them in bondage to Shylock for twenty years for the liberties of any foreign people.

The reason given in the report that accompanies this bill for the issue of bonds to the amount of $500,000,000 at this time is the necessity of impressing the great powers of Europe with an exhibition of our unity and vigor. Sir, we have not entered into this war for holiday parades and exhibitions, but to pluck the "Gem of the Antilles" from the crown of Spanish despotism and place it upon the brow of Freedom. If our Army and Navy proceed about that at once and do it quickly, we will impress the great powers with a deeper respect for us and at much less expense and sacrifice to the American people than if we enter upon vain and useless spectacles of our power.

The issuing of bonds at this time is a declaration of our want of confidence in the people's willingness to meet the burdens of a war which they have themselves demanded. Their enthusiasm is so earnest, their resources are so great, and our opportunities for levying the sinews of war are so many and excellent that all other means for carrying on this war should be exhausted before we add another dollar to our national debt.

If we can not diminish, let us at least hold our national debt where it is, and pluck that flower of safety out of this nettle danger.

The man who has the means at hand to pay his debts, but prefers to sign a bond for their future payment is a fool, a speculator, or a knave; nor can that government be honest which passes by and ignores the wealth and means within its reach for carrying on an enterprise, but prefers to force upon its citizens an issue of bonds that will be a burden upon them and a curse upon their children for generations afterwards.

I do not impute dishonest motives to gentlemen who adhere to the method of raising revenue adopted by this bill. It is their method; it is their faith; for the political shrine at which they worship is consecrated only by the unction of the bond. But we believe that the means for this war can be raised without issuing bonds.

We believe that national bonds, even when issued in a crisis of necessity, become a source of national corruption; that they create a monopoly that fattens upon the people, that locks up the sources of their prosperity and industry and impoverishes them. That is why, through all the stages of this Cuban question Democratic sense and sensibilities have been more easily aroused in behalf of Cuban freedom than that of Republicans.

The disease of Cuba, her poverty and misfortunes, that have cried aloud to us and high heaven for redress, were bred by Spanish extortion in colonizing $500,000,000 Spanish bonds on that island for the purposes of lust and robbery. That is Democratic faith, and by and through that faith we were able, before Republicans, to comprehend the deplorable situation of the Cuban, and first to extend to him the glad hand of sympathy.

That is still our faith, and in maintaining it here against this bond issue we do so on the highest plane of consistency with all our acts and principles touching this great subject.

From the beginning we have labored for a free Cuba—not that miserable freedom which would still compel it to gnaw its life out on the bone of debt and drink from the bitter cup of a hope deferred, but a freedom full of life and light and joy, a freedom disenthralled not only of Spanish sovereignty but of Spanish bonds.

When we stand against this proposed bond issue, we are but defending the American people from the identical evil which has induced them to so generously espouse the liberties of the Cubans. Slowly but surely it is dawning upon the gaze of mankind that he who fights against national bonds is fighting the battle of human freedom everywhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, no district in the country will have to make a greater sacrifice under this bill than the one which I have the honor to represent upon this floor; and if patriotism is self-sacrifice for the country's good, the people of the Tenth district of Missouri will be the most patriotic in the land. We are all agreed that nothing other than a great national emergency, that war alone can justify these additional burdens; and it is the general understanding, I believe, that our people will be relieved from them as soon as peace is declared, and as soon as the conditions of the Treasury will justify it. With this understanding, I will support the pending bill.

I am frank to admit that it does not embody my ideas of taxation. I would lay all direct taxes upon wealth rather than want, upon incomes rather than consumption; but in the midst of a great crisis, in the midst of a war for the liberation of a neighboring people, there is no time for either experiments or litigation. The three things necessary for conduct of war—namely, first, money; secondly, money; and thirdly, money—had better be secured and found along the pathways of previous experience and by the means by which we were enabled to pay over $2,500,000,000 of old war debts.

I am, however, constrained to ask the House for one concession. I ask it in the shape of an amendment which I propose to offer if opportunity is given, an amendment which provides for an increase of the rebate allowed on malt liquors from 5 to 7½ per cent. As the representative of the largest beer-producing district in this country, I ask this as a proposition of plain justice, and will briefly explain the reasons why this amendment should be adopted. For thirty-odd years there has been levied a tax—a war tax—upon beer at a rate of $1 a barrel. It was imposed with the express understanding that as soon as the war should be over and the condition of the Treasury would justify it, it would be taken off and abolished. It has never been taken off, and the brewers of this country have ungrudgingly and patriotically paid it for more than a generation. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this fact alone entitles them to some consideration. Now it is proposed to even double that war tax. Under the circumstances it might have been expected that the interested parties would come here and bitterly oppose this enormous increase. Instead of that, Mr. Chairman, they patriotically came to the front——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask five minutes more. This is the first time I have occupied the time of the House in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CASTLE. I do not object, but I would like the gentleman to keep to the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. They came patriotically forward, I say, Mr. Chairman, and were the first to declare before the Committee on Ways and Means that if these additional burdens would be fairly distributed all over the country they would be willing and ready to bear their full share. It may be said that they did this because they could afford to do it. But, Mr. Chairman, that is not the fact. I do not deny that many of them are rich men; but their wealth consists mainly in the great investments in their manufacturing plants, which are nowadays necessary to carry on production. The price of beer has gone down from $14 to $6 a barrel, and I am reliably informed that to-day the profit on a barrel is not higher than $1. If, then, the Government steps in and takes that dollar, is it reasonable to say that they can afford to pay it?

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. SIMPSON. I desire to ask the gentleman whether, in his opinion, the consumer or the producer will pay the tax?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. For the purposes of my argument it makes no difference. Undoubtedly the brewer pays a part of it and the consumer pays a part of it. But I am merely asking that the brewers be exempted from taxation upon that part of their product not really used, and not really sold, and therefore the question raised by the gentleman does not enter into my proposition.

Mr. SIMPSON. I should like to get the opinion of the gentleman whether or not the brewer or the consumer would pay the tax.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I answer the question of the gentleman by saying that if the committee should vote to grant the additional rebate of 7½ per cent, the consumer would be benefited, because brewers are in the habit of giving percentages to the retailers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when the brewers were before the committee, they asked for this one concession, and their readiness and willingness to assume the additional tax was upon the express condition that 7½ per cent, and not 5 per cent, rebate should be granted. It is not asked as a donation, nor even as a reduction of the proposed taxation, but it is merely intended to reimburse the producer for the loss of merchandise to which revenue stamps have been attached and which is returned and for which he has received no equivalent whatever.

The committee has recognized the justice of this claim by allowing a rebate of 5 per cent, and the reduction was made on the plea that improved processes of manufacture and transportation had considerably reduced the losses thus sustained. I speak with a full knowledge of the facts when I say that the real losses sustained on this account amount to from 10 to 12 per cent, and therefore, in view of the great increase of this tax, in view of the fact that beer is the national drink of the masses of American people to-day, and not only their drink but their food, I ask you to grant this increase of rebate and to pass my amendment, and I trust that I may have the opportunity to offer the same.

[Mr. BARTLETT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 1495. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Anton Ernst;

S. 2474. An act for the relief of Thomas F. Rowland;

S. 2693. An act for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence, deceased;

S. 3675. An act to examine, determine, and report the facts necessary to the establishment of free public highways into the Yosemite National Park, and appropriating moneys therefor;

S. 3799. An act to correct the military record of John Shelton;

S. 4168. An act for revising and perfecting the classification of letters patent and printed publications in the Patent Office;

S. 4317. An act to provide for the opening of lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, elaterite, and kindred substances in the State of Utah;

S. 4422. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Gould; and

S. R. 141. Joint resolution regarding the holding of a Pan-American Exposition in the year 1901 upon Cayuga Island, between the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls, in the State of New York, to illustrate the development of the Western Hemisphere during the nineteenth century.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5511) granting to the Chattanooga Rapid Transit Company the right to cross with its track the Dry Valley road to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 2691. An act to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to grant to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;" and

H. R. 5880. An act to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia control of street parking in said District.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

WAR TARIFF.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to-day with such patience as I could command to peace advocates and greenback advocates and beer advocates, and I realize now that every weakling in this House has some ground upon which to oppose legislation which is presented for the purpose of raising revenue to carry on the war with Spain which we all ought to favor. On the Democratic side of this House three weeks ago every man was yelling at the top of his voice for the recognition of the Cuban Republic, and he wanted war "right off"—immediate war. Now that we have war, many want peace and deplore war; some say there is not going to be any war of consequence, or if there shall be war, they do not want any war tax levied, because it is unnecessary.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] was on his feet advocating the issue of greenbacks to pay war expenses; and he referred to the days of 1861, and said we should repeat that experience. What are greenbacks? Mere promises to pay, at the best. If I give you my note payable a year hence, it will not pass at 100 cents on the dollar, but will be discounted from the very beginning, unless it is due at once or an agreement to pay interest is written in the bond. Should we issue greenbacks, they will be discounted from the very beginning. Therefore, even if we have unbounded confidence in this Government and its willingness and ability to pay some time, we do not want any issue of greenbacks. Let us be manly. Let us issue bonds. Let us say that we will pay interest; that we will pay principal and interest at a fixed date.

Mr. RIDGELY rose.

Mr. RAY of New York. I have only a limited time. I do not wish to yield.

Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House is an extraordinary measure to provide extraordinary revenues to enable us to prosecute a war with Spain which was precipitated by the extraordinary conduct of the Democrats on the floor of this House. I do not say that the war is not a just and a necessary war, for I believe it is, but I do say that it was precipitated by our Democratic friends, many of whom now not only condemn it as unnecessary and unwise but oppose the enactment of wise legislation necessary to raise the money with which to prosecute it. For months they clamored for the recognition of the belligerent rights of the so-called Republic of Cuba and then for the recognition of the independence of the Republic of Cuba. Either course would have involved the United States in war with Spain if such policy had been followed by an honorable course toward the citizens of Cuba.

The Republicans wisely and justly have seen fit to recognize the independence of the people of Cuba, that they "are, and of right ought to be, free and independent," and have coupled that declaration with a demand that Spain evacuate the island and leave its people to establish a free and an independent government of their own. This course was also supported by the Democrats in this House. This was made necessary by the cruel and inhuman conduct of the Spanish Government toward her subjects in Cuba—a course of conduct not tolerable and not permissible. For three years a war for freedom has been waged by the people of that island lying within sight of our shores and almost under the shadow of our flag. Beaten in fair battle, Spain resorted to a policy of extermination of a people she could not conquer. Men, old, helpless men; women, weak and feeble; children, innocent and helpless, were herded and penned and surrounded by a guard of pitiless soldiers and left to starve.

Fruitful fields were laid waste and turned to deserts. Homes were burned and murder was legalized. By the decrees of that infamous butcher, Weyler, 250,000 helpless human beings were killed by sword or bullet or starvation within twelve short months. Commerce was interfered with, our commercial interests destroyed, our citizens deprived of property and unjustly imprisoned, and, finally, to crown the acts of infamy being committed in the Western Hemisphere, a magnificent war ship of the United States Navy, on a friendly visit to a supposed friendly port, was treacherously destroyed and 266 of our sailors and marines, reposing in fancied security, were hurried into eternity.

The President counseled a conservative course; he foresaw the unwisdom of hasty action. Having participated in one war, he knew the horrors of another, and especially did he know the expense that would necessarily attend the prosecution of hostilities between the United States and Spain. Of necessity we are the attacking party in the pending conflict. We can not stand on the defensive and drive Spain from Cuba. Spanish armies will not evacuate that fair island at our bidding. Force must be used, and now that the die has been cast, that the ultimatum has been pronounced, the Government of the United States must see to it that Cuba is free. It has been predicted that there will be no conflict, no clash of arms, no roar of guns, no shedding of blood, no loss of life.

I heard such senseless claims thirty-six years ago, when war clouds hovered on the horizon. Four years of war followed. Hundreds of thousands of men met in mortal combat on hundreds of battlefields and death and desolation and ruin were abroad in the land. Not millions, but billions of dollars were required to maintain the conflict. The credit of this nation was strained to the utmost, and a depreciated currency constituted our only circulating medium, while bond issues were absolutely necessary to procure current funds with which to procure the supplies and munitions of war actually necessary to a maintenance of the conflict.

Mr. Chairman, the indications are that we have entered on a conflict not of days or months, but of possible years. Spanish territory is not contiguous. The Kingdom of Spain lies 3,000 miles over the sea, and Cuba is a hundred miles over the water from our nearest land. We have fighting men, but so has Spain; we have a magnificent Navy, but so has Spain; we have resources, but so has Spain. When Cuba is free and the last Spaniard is driven into or over the sea, the war is not necessarily ended. We may have to conquer a peace at the Canaries or possibly at the gates of Madrid. We should remember that when the eagles of France were planted on every flagstaff in every town in Spain she was not conquered, but finally repelled the invaders. Let us not belittle the work we have undertaken.

No patriotic or brave man flinches or hesitates. The call for men has gone forth, and nobly and patriotically has it been answered. But brave men and noble women, magnificent war ships and first-class guns can not alone win this fight. The soldiers must be fed and clothed and paid. We must have coal and powder and shot and shell. Patriotism is grand, but war is hell. If we would win, if we would save Cuba and make her people free, if we would avenge the Maine, if we would honor our flag and bring an honorable and a speedy peace, we must have money and hundreds of millions of it. We must have the sinews of war if we would strike quickly, strongly, and effectively. Shall we pay our soldiers with an irredeemable paper currency? Shall we confiscate property? Shall we wage this war with wind and mere promises? No, sir. We must resort to special extraordinary taxation to raise money. We must pay as we go, but we can not tax our people beyond their power or capacity to pay. We must have for immediate use millions of dollars; and when we ask the use of these millions, we must promise their return, and the dollars that we return must be the equal in every respect of those we borrow. And if we are honest, we will return these dollars with a reasonable interest. The money we want now does not belong to all the people, but to individuals of the nation; and when it is asked for the common good of all, then all will join to return it with a reasonable compensation for its temporary use. Then interest-bearing bonds are a necessity and the only security upon which we can obtain the money we want and must have.

Men will not loan their money in large sums and on long time without having something to show for it, without a reasonable interest to compensate them for the loss of its use while employed by other hands. The idea once advocated, and which still is popular with some, that this Government can manufacture money with ink, paper, and a printing press finds few advocates at the present time. As well might we attempt to reduce Morro Castle with popguns and paper wads as to attempt to purchase in the markets of the world guns, munitions of war, powder, shot, and shell with a mere paper currency. We have had experience in this matter and know better than to repeat our bitter experiences. The loan proposed by this bill is so shaped that every patriotic citizen having $50 or more to loan at a low rate of interest may find a safe, nontaxable investment.

We are told that the extraordinary taxes will be burdensome; that they are unequal and unjust. That they are and will be burdensome all will admit. All taxation is to an extent and in a sense burdensome, and all special war taxation is of course an extra burden. An extra tax is placed on beer, wines, liquors, cigars, cigarettes, and many other articles. I know of no articles more worthy of special taxation than these. Those who let them alone will bear none of the burden imposed by such taxation; those who use them will pay the extra tax voluntarily and, we trust, cheerfully. No one will for an instant claim that the habitual use of intoxicants or narcotics is necessary to promote health or prolong life. The proposition to tax tea and coffee has been wisely abandoned. But should the war be prolonged, should it prove more expensive than we suspect, such a tax may be added without exciting much adverse criticism. Every patriotic man and woman, every toiler in the shop and factory and upon the farm, will take pride in helping "Uncle Sam" drive Spanish misrule from the Western Hemisphere. That the taxes proposed by this bill are unequal or unjust I deny. They reach the rich, the corporations, the luxuries. True, they may reach the poor, but they are very lightly burdened by this bill.

For political effect, and for no other purpose, the cry is raised here that we should resort to an income tax. The Supreme Court is assaulted with bitterness for having decided that such a tax is unconstitutional. But, say some of our Democratic friends, we should again enact such a law and let the matter again be brought before that court, for perhaps it will reverse the former decision. The author of that brilliant scheme, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], has no confidence in the learning, ability, and integrity of the gentlemen composing that court. Instead of advocating the raising of money by legal and constitutional methods, instead of teaching respect for and confidence in the legally constituted authorities of the land, instead of massing our forces and equipping our sailors and soldiers for battle speedily and effectively, he would halt and quibble and inaugurate a petty war with our highest court. Mr. Chairman, what we now want is a united people; a system of taxation we know we can enforce—not one we have every reason to believe we can not execute. We want money, and victories over the enemy, not vexatious lawsuits, inefficient laws, and bickerings among the people.

Our fleet is before Havana; the booming of cannon has been heard at Matanzas; the prizes are coming in; our Army is concentrating; the beat of the drum is heard, and the boys in blue from every State in the Union—North, South, East, and West—are marching. In little Cuba the patriot army is waiting for our promised aid, and the thousands on thousands of her starving people are crying for food. Daily they fall and die for want of bread. This is no time for hesitation, for bickering, for a dilly-dallying policy. This is not the time for experimental legislation, for the enactment of revenue legislation, we have every reason to believe, would not be effective.

We must pursue an energetic course and act promptly. The eyes of the nations of the world are upon us. Our national honor and prowess are at stake. Can we move together and strike as one man; can we furnish the money at call, pay as we go, and command and merit respect among the nations? are the questions of the hour. Shall our Army and Navy be fully equipped and ready for battle at once? is the question. It is not a question as to what we may or can do next year, but what we can and will do now. Let us get ready to-day, move quickly, strike heavily and effectively, and the victory is won. But if we hesitate and quarrel at home, our armies will lie idle, our Navy will do nothing, the Cubans will starve, and we shall deserve the contempt of all civilized peoples. This is not the time for long speeches or wars of words, but for action.

It is what we do, not what we say, that will meet the approval or disapproval of our citizens. The heavy, well-equipped, and quick-moving battalions win the victories. Our cause is just. The cries of a suffering, oppressed, and an outraged people have gone up to God, and He has put it in the hearts of the American people to give liberty to a race and establish a new Republic. It is through the instrumentality of the United States of America that this is to be accomplished, and every consideration of patriotism and of selfish interest demands that we act speedily and effectively. [Applause.]

Therefore it is that the views of particular individuals should be subordinated to the opinions of the great majority. Advice is not to be spurned or suggestions disregarded, but unity of action is imperatively demanded. In union there is strength, in disunion destruction. Therefore it is that we appeal to all classes, to all men of all parties, to unite on this bill as one calculated to bring revenues speedily, fill the Treasury, and insure a speedy and decisive victory.

Those who try to use this war for partisan purposes, political success, or personal aggrandizement will only deserve and receive the contempt of their fellows. It is a war in the interest of humanity and is waged to conquer a peace, a lasting and a glorious peace. We would restore to cultivation the devastated and barren fields of the Island of Cuba, send her starving people to their homes, drive Spain across the sea, and teach her to respect our flag.

I have been astounded to hear a few Democrats on the floor of this House state that if we had recognized the independence of the Republic of Cuba one year ago there would have been no war between Spain and the United States and that peace would now reign on that island. How such recognition would have produced such a result is not pointed out, and no reason for such a statement can be given. Such remarks fall only from the mouths of those who would wage war with their mouths and would flee from the face of an armed foe. Such men would sacrifice their fellow-men, but would not give one drop of their own blood. Such men take every course and advocate every policy that produces war, but when war is on they cry peace, peace. I am happy to be able to state that but few, very few, make such statements.

Mr. Chairman, the hour is fast approaching when we are to give our votes on this measure, and I trust that no gentleman will be against it.

Within the next hour we are to vote. I could wish to change some features of this bill, for it falls heavily on some interests in my district. But for the common good of all I am willing to proceed now to enact this bill into law for delays are dangerous.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], who is a banker, is opposed to putting stamps on checks for more than $20, and other papers of that description. He says it will be inconvenient. Mr. Chairman, all taxes are inconvenient. It is many times inconvenient to do the things we ought to do and must do if we would live long, honorably, peacefully, and prosperously. No man regrets the necessity for this war and this consequent taxation more than I, but it was unavoidable.

I regret the inhuman and beastly atrocities of Spain, but I glory in the fact that in my day and while I live the possibility of their repetition on this side the globe is to be ended. I am willing and I know the people of the United States are willing to put their shoulders to the wheel of the car of progress and see it move forward. They are willing to deny themselves luxuries and even necessaries, to suffer inconvenience, that freedom may triumph and the character and dignity of our nation be maintained.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, again will our people unite in the battle hymn of the Republic:

> In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
> With a glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me.
> As he died to make men holy let us die to make men free > While God goes marching on.

[Applause.]

I admire the spirit of this people; I admire their patriotism. We are ready for whatever may come. But let not gentlemen oppose this bill upon the ground that the war is to be a short one or that an immense amount of money is not required. We can stop taxation at any time, but we can not stop the war. We will not stop the war until the victory is won, whether we have to cross the sea to win it or not. We must remember, as I have already stated, when dealing with Spain, that even if we have navies, so has Spain; if we have armies, so has Spain; if we have resources, so has Spain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAY of New York. I ask leave to continue my remarks for two minutes.

Mr. SIMPSON. I want to give notice that after this I shall have to object to these requests, no matter how disagreeable it may be to do so, because there are so many members wanting to speak on this bill who have not had the opportunity to do so. I do not object to the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RAY of New York. If we have resources, so has Spain; if we have patriotism, so has Spain; and I believe (though I will not predict) that she will fight, and fight long and bitterly.

Let us, then, act wisely here to-day; let us stand by the policy adopted, the declarations made, and the flag of the Union; let us vote war taxes upon the assumption that we have before us a long and a hard war. If we do this, we shall act patriotically and wisely. And when we borrow money, let us borrow it as we would of our individual friends, pay at the proper time, and in the meantime wage war as a serious and an expensive business. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to consume a moment's time of the committee more than seems to me necessary to put myself in a proper position on this question. And before I proceed I ask (if anybody wants to object I will submit cheerfully) that I be allowed ten minutes on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMPSON. I object.

Mr. COX. Then, Mr. Chairman, with great respect to my Populite friend, I decline to proceed; but I will hold the rope on him from now on. [Laughter.]

[Mr. BRADLEY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my colleague's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his colleague's time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMPSON. I object.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Chairman, coming as I do from that portion of New Jersey which in the Revolution was all trodden over by the soldiers of the patriotic forces and those in opposition, coming as I do from a State that sent to the late war many thousands of soldiers beyond her quota, and in all ways manifested its patriotism, it seems to me useless to assert that I represent a patriotic constituency—a liberty-loving people. It is my joy to know that nine-tenths of its people favored this war, if it were necessary, for the purpose of bringing about the independence of Cuba. So I do not feel that it is necessary to defend the patriotism of the people of the Seventh Congressional district of New Jersey.

I take the floor, however, to say that they are willing in any way to bear their proportion of the expense necessary to carry on this war; but I believe I am speaking as they would have me speak, when I say that they are against the issue of bonds, if it can be avoided, and most assuredly I am of the same opinion. I am convinced that there is a way to avoid it, if time and thought were given to devising means for that purpose. I oppose the issue of bonds for one reason, to refer to no others for lack of time, and that is that the rich get the interest on the bonds and the poor have to pay that interest. The rich profit from the war and the poor bear the burden. Therefore I am against the issuing of bonds, if that can be avoided.

But it would not be right or considerate for me to declare against the issuing of bonds if I had no way to suggest by which revenue could be raised for war purposes, both speedily and with certainty. How would I avoid it? First, I would suggest that a constitutional income tax be imposed. It is possible to devise an income tax that would be constitutional and that could be imposed and collected without the objectionable features of the last one. I stand here in defense of that system with greater firmness than I would do otherwise had it not been that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] had declared that he, too, would favor and vote for the enacting of a proper, constitutional income tax, as he and I have so seldom agreed on any question of economics. England and other European countries have the income tax, and surely a republic ought to have one. However, if it be found that such a law can not be passed in this House, after the amendment for an income tax has been voted down then I would vote for an amendment reducing the amount of bonds that this bill authorizes down to two hundred millions. This would carry us to the next Congress, and, if needed, more then could be issued.

We know very well that when bonds are issued by the United States Government no tangible security is given, as in the case of railroad bonds. Then, if we were now to issue $200,000,000 of bonds, the price we would get for an additional issue, if we found it necessary to make one, would not be any less than we would get for the first amount that might be issued, if that amount were five hundred millions.

If, however, this House votes against a constitutional income tax, and also against reducing the amount of bonds to be issued, then I shall, under moral duress, for the purpose of carrying on this war, vote for the bill under consideration; but I do hope that some means will be found whereby we can avoid the issuing of bonds, which I think at this stage is unnecessary and reprehensible.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am one of the nineteen members of this House who voted against the original war resolution. I have always had the greatest feeling of sympathy for the Cubans. I have been enthusiastic for their cause, but I have always thought that if we went so far as to declare for the recognition of the independence of Cuba by this country, it would be all that would be necessary, and that in time Cuba would obtain her independence, and this country would be saved from the necessity of war. But that is all past. The war is now on, and it is the duty of all the 75,000,000 people of the United States to be patriotic.

Especially is it the duty of this Congress to be patriotic, because it was this Congress that voted for a declaration of war against Spain. Therefore, it is the duty of this Congress to be patriotic and provide the means and money to carry on this war. There are two necessary forces for the successful prosecution of a war. One is the men and the other is the money. We have the men and we can raise the money. The question is how we shall raise that money. The majority of this House have submitted two propositions to us. One is a revenue-stamp tax and the other is interest-bearing bonds. I have always been bitterly opposed to bond issues, but I believe of the two evils the bond issue is better than the stamp tax.

We all remember some years after the civil war the nuisance of the revenue-stamp tax, not merely the cost of the stamps, but often the inconvenience of getting them, and the severe penalty for the neglect or oversight to use them. This bill means the same trouble; in fact, it is drawn from and on the line of the last war-revenue bill. You claim that you will raise ninety to one hundred million dollars by the stamp tax. In my opinion, it will take one-half that amount in expenses and pay to the officers to collect it, and the inconvenience, trouble, and time taken to get these stamps can not be estimated.

The number of people who will violate this law through oversight and error, thereby subjecting themselves to prosecution, would be great. Then why this stamp tax? As usual, you burden the poor man most. You double the tax on his tobacco. It is true you tax notes and other obligations, but who must stamp these notes? Of course the maker of them must stamp them. You also require 2 cents on each bank check, but is this a tax on the bank and its capital, or its deposits? No; the drawer of the check must stamp the check; therefore the banking capital is free, as all the rest of the wealth of the country is.

It is unjust to burden the country with $500,000,000 of 3 per cent interest-bearing bonds. My party is especially opposed to any bond issue in time of peace, and will bitterly oppose them even in time of war so long as there are other ways of raising money so advantageously, and ways that, if the people are burdened, the burden falls on them all more equally. Bond issues mean just two things, the owner of them reaps the harvest and the other fellow produces it. However, this does not always apply, for individuals and enterprises can afford to be bonded at times for the reason that the money can be used to better advantage. But I can not believe that an established government, with credit and resources ample to coin, issue, and by just, proper, and equal taxation secure what money it may require, should issue bonds, which are manifestly in the interest of the owners of money and a burden on the producers of wealth.

But, Mr. Speaker, war by a nation means many sacrifices to its people, and the burdens of war should be as equally distributed as possible. If this conflict proves to be at all serious and lasting, then there must be burdens. We now see and feel the effects of the present war. The Southern cotton farmer has reduced his cotton crop for the fear of no market next fall. The manufacturer must run his factory on shorter time. The laborer will not find steady employment. The merchant's trade is curtailed. The brave volunteer who goes to the front will certainly make a great sacrifice.

But by the issuance of $500,000,000 of 3 per cent interest-bearing, nontaxable bonds you pay a tribute to the money controller and owner. They can invest their money in these bonds and fold their hands and grow rich while the war rages and distress and sacrifices are seen around everywhere. Yes, they can invest their money in the safest and best security that this country can afford, be relieved of all taxes, and can sail around the world free of care and return when the war is ended to claim their profits.

The Democratic party have proposed various other means for raising revenue, and I think better and juster plans. We have proposed the free coinage of silver; we have proposed the income tax; we have proposed the issuing of certificates against the seigniorage now in the Treasury, and we have proposed to issue United States legal-tender notes. I believe that with only two or three of these important measures enacted into law we could raise enough funds to carry on the war. Now, I propose to be liberal. I am willing to vote enough money to carry on this war, but the amount you ask for, $700,000,000, is at this time more than is necessary; yet I think it is better in time of war to have too much money than too little.

I would suggest to the committee that the best plan to raise the necessary money would be: First, to issue $42,000,000 of certificates against that amount of seigniorage now lying idle in the Treasury. Second, an income tax of 2 per cent on all incomes of over $2,000. This would give us, say, about $58,000,000. Third, use the money now in the Treasury, $100,000,000. Fourth, issue $100,000,000 of United States legal-tender notes. We will then have a total of $300,000,000, which will be sufficient to carry on a most vigorous war for the next ten or twelve months. In the meantime we will meet here in December next, when we can provide for further means, if it then be necessary.

As I say, I am against bonds, because I do not believe that bonds are necessary; but I am for a victory in this war, and if it becomes necessary in future I am willing to go on record and to cast my vote for bonds, although I am bitterly opposed to them at all times and certainly do not believe them necessary at this time. In fact, a war between the United States and Spain can not require any very great outlay of money. It will certainly be an unequal war. Spain has only 17,000,000 of people; she has a bonded indebtedness of nearly $2,000,000,000; she is already exhausted by her recent continued wars; while this country, which has been free from war for a third of a century, has 75,000,000 of fresh, patriotic people.

We have only half as much indebtedness as Spain, and in addition to that we have the insurgent Cubans to help us in the fight; consequently it ought not to be a long-continued war, but should soon terminate with victory on our part. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] this morning uttered my sentiments when he said we ought to be aggressive, that our war ships ought to go to fighting, and we ought to bring this war to a close. I am for peace. I am a peace man, but when war is on it is not the proper time to talk about peace. We should use all the energies and vigor we have to bring the war to an early and victorious end. This country has never known failure; it has never known what it was to go down in defeat, and I trust that time will never come. The present war can not mean a great deal, but it certainly means victory on our part. Let it be said that we do not care who our opponents are, we are ready to meet them, and the result will ever be victory for our arms. [Applause.]

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that altogether too much prominence is being given to the proposition contained in section 27, which, to my mind, is really beyond debate. The proposition is whether we shall authorize the President to issue $500,000,000 of bonds, at 3 per cent interest, in denominations of $50 or multiples thereof, so that they can be within the reach of small investors: and whether, also, in making the loan the President shall give the people a chance to take it.

Now, it is simply this sort of a bond that this section provides for, instead of the bond which may be issued under existing law, which, as is well known, is a 4 per cent bond and which the President is not compelled by the law to offer to the people at all, but may, as was done by President Cleveland in all his issues but the last, be put on the market through syndicates of capitalists, to which the foreigner even was obligingly admitted and allowed to share in the enormous profits of those several transactions, to the great scandal of the Administration and the greater disgust of the American people. I repeat, the question raised by this section is whether we will give the President authority to issue a loan at a lower rate of interest and compel him to give the people a chance to take it, or whether we will leave that optional with the President, who, like the late occupant of the White House, may have a taste for doing the business through syndicates.

The President already has, and ought to have, authority to raise money by the sale of bonds, and what objection our Democratic friends or anyone else can raise to substituting this provision for the existing statute I am unable to understand. It is good not only now but hereafter; not only in this emergency, but in any and every other emergency that may arise.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Does this operate to repeal the act that is now existing law?

Mr. GROUT. Very likely it does by implication; but whether it does or not, it would put the President under such restraint that he would not think of issuing another bond under the provisions of the old law.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Would the majority accept a provision repealing this section?

Mr. GROUT. I am not authorized to speak for the majority. I am not in charge of the bill. I turn that inquiry over to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to answer.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Then this will be available for use after this war is over.

Mr. GROUT. The provision is a general one and without limitation, and would clearly be operative until repealed.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Then it is both a peace measure and a war measure to issue bonds?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly; the Democratic party, with its free-trade tariff under the last Administration, which failed to produce revenue equal to expenditure, found it necessary in time of peace to issue bonds to meet the current expenses of the Government; and a similar calamity may again overtake us, but let us all hope we may be saved from it.

Mr. Chairman, this bond provision is all right. It has my hearty approval, and I wish I could say as much of all the provisions of the bill.

All the taxes in the bill are levied in one form or another upon our own products; and unless we increase the duty on imports of like articles from foreign countries to an equal extent we shall be taking away to the extent of the tax levied the protection now given to these products by our present tariff, and I do not think anyone on this side of the House is willing to admit that the tariff duty on any of these products is any too large now. Hence, instead of multiplying these internal-revenue taxes, thereby making necessary a largely increased force at great expense to collect them, and that, too, to the great annoyance of the people, I would levy a duty on tea and coffee, which could be collected with but little, if any, increased expense. The consumer would in this instance have to pay the tax, but he would not be constantly annoyed by its collection. Besides I think the people were expecting and are willing to pay a little more for their tea and coffee till Cuba is free; and would very much prefer to meet these war expenses in this way than to go so extensively into the "adhesive stamp" business as this bill carries them.

But I must not criticise the bill too much, for I am going to vote for it, even though no opportunity be given for amendment, as now seems will inevitably be the case. Of course we are all in favor, on both sides of the House, of raising the money necessary to prosecute the war, and I am in favor of most of the provisions of this bill. I am certainly in favor of the increased tax on tobacco and beer and all other stimulating drinks, and am willing, in fact, to tax almost everything; but it does seem to me that it will be crowding the temperance people a little to put a tax on water, as proposed on page 41 of the bill. The proposed tax is to be levied not alone on mineral waters, but on "all other waters," which means the sparkling spring water that flows so abundantly from the green hillsides of Vermont. Here is the language of the provision:

Mineral and all other waters, and beverages not otherwise subject to internal-revenue taxes, imported or domestic, bottled for sale, upon each bottle containing one-half pint or less, one-half of 1 cent.

Upon each bottle containing more than one-half pint and not more than one pint, 1 cent; upon each bottle containing more than one pint, 2 cents.

Mr. Chairman, if this paragraph is reached, I shall propose to strike out the words "all other waters." I shall also move to reduce the tax on mineral waters one-half. A moderate tax on mineral waters would not seem to be out of place. But up in Vermont, under the salutary influence of our prohibitory law, we have substituted ordinary spring water for stronger drinks, which when a little colored and flavored and served in a bottle, is equally satisfactory to those who have the bottle habit, while those without that habit are content to take it straight.

Now, it is only natural that the dealers in spring waters in our State should feel that this proposed tax upon it is not only likely to injure their business, but that it is at the same time contra bonos mores; and as the result I have heard from them. The following are some of the protests I have received:

BARNET, VT., April 30, 1898.

W. W. GROUT:

We wish to enter protest against proposed tax on mineral and other waters as being very excessive, also unjust, unless same tax is placed on similar drinks drawn at soda fountains; otherwise will drive all bottlers out of the business, and desired revenue will be cut off. Please use your influence along this line.

E. H. BLOSSOM,
President Crystal Spring Bottling Company.

BRATTLEBORO, VT., April 28, 1898.

W. W. GROUT, M. C.:

Proposed tax on ginger ale and other mineral waters in excess of all others. See that reduction is made.

C. H. EDDY & CO., Bottlers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent for a couple of minutes more.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

[Mr. CUMMINGS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I was about to take the last five minutes to close the debate on the part of the committee, but I will not use it, and I will ask for an immediate vote.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

Mr. DINGLEY. The committee desire to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DINGLEY. What does the gentleman from Missouri want?

Mr. BLAND. I want to offer an amendment, and I want to say a word about it. I will send the amendment to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be engraved and printed United States Treasury notes to the amount of $150,000,000. Said Treasury notes shall be a legal tender in the payment of all debts, public and private, and be issued in like denominations as is now provided by law for United States notes, commonly called "greenbacks." That the Treasury notes herein authorized shall be covered into the Treasury and paid out from time to time in the discharge of public expenditures as the exigencies of the Treasury may require.

SEC. 2. That a sufficient sum of money is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry this act into effect.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that in order that the gentleman may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BLAND. I understood, Mr. Chairman, that I offered the amendment in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine was recognized and had the floor.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Very well, Mr. Chairman; I do not care how I get it. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment as a substitute for the bond provision. I do not believe the time has come for the issuing of bonds, when the credit of the Government can be extended so as to increase the currency, stimulate enterprise and production, and in that way enable the people of the country to pay the $100,000,000 levied upon them without further crippling their interests. I am aware that the provision I have offered as to Treasury notes would, no doubt, under existing law to preserve our paper and other money at par, be considered as redeemable in coin, which now means gold according to Treasury construction. But I have left out the redemption in coin, because it means gold as now construed.

Mr. Chairman, I am in no hurry at this time to increase the debt of this country, or any of the obligations of this Government to be redeemed in coin, until the mints of this Government are opened for the purpose of producing the coin.

Now, this amendment, together with the $75,000,000 in the Treasury, will give $225,000,000, and with other amendments that are proposed here will give to the Administration over $300,000,000 of ready money to proceed with this war. All that we have promised in our declaration of war is to take the Island of Cuba and to give the people of that island the right of free government. Why that should cost $500,000,000, or one-half that amount, is astonishing to me. It does seem to me that within the next six weeks that island can be turned over to the people armed and equipped, and with the aid of our Navy the people there can maintain their independence. I say six weeks ought to end the war without any great cost. At least, Mr. Chairman, I shall protest against any interest-bearing debt until the extreme emergency for it may arise. Now, as to the point of order reserved by the gentleman from Maine. The point of order can not lie, for this is a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not an amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, but a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, which is now pending.

Mr. DINGLEY. I make no point of order on the amendment, but upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri did not offer an amendment to the section; he offered a substitute; and there is one substitute pending. Several gentlemen desire to offer amendments to the section. Those should be offered and disposed of before either substitute is voted upon.

Mr. BLAND. I do not desire to offer my amendment now, but will offer it when other amendments have been voted upon.

Mr. HANDY offered the following amendment:

In line 4, page 44, after the word "of," strike out "five" and insert "one;" so as to read: "The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States the sum of $100,000,000."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to offer an amendment on behalf of the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, page 44, strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read: "in denominations of $25 or some multiple of that sum."

Mr. DINGLEY. The object of this amendment is that these bonds may be issued in denominations as low as $25.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment pending which I should like to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment was not offered. Does he offer it now?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "quarterly in," in line 11, page 44, insert the words "standard gold or silver;" so as to read "payable quarterly in standard gold or silver coin."

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division (called for by Mr. LEWIS of Washington)—ayes 108, noes 136.

Mr. BRUCKER offered the following amendment:

In line 28, page 44, after the word "same," insert the following:
"That all of the bonds issued under and by virtue of this act are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in either gold or silver at the present legal ratio of 16 parts silver to 1 part gold."

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division (called for by Mr. BRUCKER)—ayes 111, noes 135.

Mr. SHAFROTH offered the following amendment:

Strike out the words "in coin," in line 8, page 44, and insert in lieu thereof "one-half in gold and one-half in silver coin;" so that the clause will read "redeemable one-half in gold and one-half in silver coin at the pleasure of the United States," etc.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING offered the following amendment:

In line 4, page 44, strike out "five" and insert "two;" so as to read "$200,000,000."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VINCENT offered the following amendment:

In line 12, page 44, strike out "three" and insert "one;" so as to read, "at the rate of 1 per cent per annum."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RIDGELY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the section so as to read:
"SEC. 27. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue and pay out, on the credit of the United States, the sum of $300,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue, at not less than par, full legal tender paper money in such form as he may prescribe, and in denominations of one, two, five, ten, twenty, and fifty dollars."

Mr. DINGLEY. I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment would not be in order at any rate, except as a substitute; and one substitute is already pending.

Mr. CASTLE offered the following amendment:

In line 8, page 44, strike out "coin" and insert in lieu thereof "lawful money of the United States;" so as to read "redeemable in lawful money of the United States at the pleasure of the United States."

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is offered as a substitute for section 27.

Several MEMBERS. Let it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute has already been read. Without objection, it will be read again. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question on agreeing to the substitute). The noes appear to have it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 118, noes 142.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers on this vote.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. DINGLEY as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 123, noes 143.

So the substitute was rejected.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the substitute I sent to the desk for this section.

The substitute was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be engraved and printed United States Treasury notes to the amount of $150,000,000. Said Treasury notes shall be a legal tender in the payment of all debts, public and private, and be issued in like denominations as is now provided by law for United States notes commonly called "greenbacks." That the Treasury notes herein authorized shall be covered into the Treasury and paid out from time to time in the discharge of public expenditures as the exigencies of the Treasury may require.

SEC. 2. That a sufficient sum of money is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry this act into effect.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri is not germane to the section now under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BLAND. I desire to state only, Mr. Chairman, that one is a proposition for interest-bearing obligations, issued on the credit of the people of the United States, and the other is an obligation that bears no interest. Both are war measures intended to raise money for the support of the Government in time of war. Both are designed to furnish the sinews of war; and inasmuch as the amendment is strictly germane to the subject under consideration, no point of order can be legitimately raised against it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have simply to say with reference to the point of order raised by myself that the section of the bill under consideration provides for the issuance of interest-bearing obligations of the Government, whereas the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Missouri as a substitute for the pending paragraph is to issue Treasury notes with legal-tender powers, and is therefore a provision for the issuance of currency, a subject entirely different from that under consideration by the committee and embodied in the pending bill.

Mr. VINCENT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VINCENT. I would ask if this is an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri or a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a substitute for this section of the bill.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say simply, on the point of order, that the proposition embodied by the committee in the pending bill is to issue interest-bearing bonds; and that being true, certainly a proposition to issue noninterest-bearing obligations for the same purpose as that contemplated by the bill would be in order as a substitute. It simply eliminates the interest-bearing proposition.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to add, on the point of order, that an examination of the records of preceding Congresses with reference to legislation to obtain funds with which to carry on the late war demonstrates the fact that the same bill carried both kinds of obligations, one noninterest and the other interest bearing obligations.

This proposition, as the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Missouri have stated, is a proposition to obtain means to carry on a war. The difference between the pending proposition and the one in the bill is simply that one bears interest and the other does not.

It strikes me, therefore, that it is clearly germane and in order.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, this question of the germaneness of an amendment or a substitute is one that is capable of a very great deal of stretching.

It would be utterly impossible to reconcile the decisions made on points of order of a similar character which have been delivered either in the Committee of the Whole or in the House since I have been here as a member. I have heard all sorts of decisions on the subject, some of them good and some bad, and no man need ever attempt to reconcile them.

But it does seem to me that when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] proposes to rule out the amendment now pending on a question of order on the basis that it is not germane, he has gone a "bow shot beyond" any other man who has raised a similar point of order in this House.

What is the situation? Here is a clear, clean proposition to strike out a provision in the bill providing for the issue of $500,000,000 of interest-bearing obligations of the United States in the shape of bonds for the purpose of conducting a war in which we are now engaged, and to substitute for it the issuance of $150,000,000 of noninterest-bearing obligations for the same purpose—that is, for conducting the war.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, I desire to call his attention to the fact that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri is not only an amendment which authorizes the issuance of Treasury notes, but it makes such Treasury notes legal tender. It is therefore an assumption of the currency power and an entirely different matter from that proposed by the bill, and therefore out of order.

Mr. FLEMING. That is a mere incident to the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri. The gentleman from Maine provides that his bonds shall be payable in coin. That is an incident of his proposition. The gentleman from Missouri provides that these obligations which he issues shall be a legal tender. That also is an incident.

Now, if the House wants to vote down the proposition, let us do it in a manly way, and not seek, by parliamentary tactics or parliamentary rulings, stretching all precedents, to rule out a substitute which should be voted upon by the House and determined openly by its members.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard for just a minute on this point of order. The bill which we have under consideration is entitled "A bill to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures."

One of the ways and means suggested for the raising of revenue for war expenses is the issuing of interest-bearing bonds. The substitute which is offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] provides for the issuing of noninterest-bearing obligations which shall have the quality of legal tender. Suppose, as a matter of fact, he should offer as an amendment the issue of noninterest-bearing obligations without the legal-tender provision.

The gentleman from Maine admits that it would be a germane amendment, and consequently it would be in order. It would therefore be in order, Mr. Chairman, for an amendment to be made to section 27, provided that Treasury notes should be issued, if you eliminate the element of legal-tender quality. Then, Mr. Chairman, suppose an amendment to that amendment were offered vesting those Treasury notes with legal-tender power. That would be an amendment that is germane to the Treasury notes, relating to the character of Treasury notes to be issued. Then it seems to me that if those two amendments together were coupled into one amendment it would be germane to the bill. Especially would that be true in view of the fact that the object and purpose of the bill is the raising of revenue.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to a vote being taken on this amendment, and although I believe it to be out of order, yet I withdraw the point of order in order to allow the vote to be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine withdraws the point of order. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLAND) there were—ayes 110, noes 147.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 147.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. BLAND was rejected.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the substitute which is in the hands of the Clerk.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LANHAM. Would it be in order to move to strike out section 27?

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman is recognized, such a motion would be in order.

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman for that purpose. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] to offer a substitute.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope the Chair will recognize me hereafter.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I offer a substitute for section 27, which I ask the Clerk to report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 27, and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

"That all corporations, companies, organizations, consolidations, or associations, or persons owning, using or operating any franchise or franchises shall be taxed to the extent of the full value of the said franchise, to be assessed by the local assessor at such place as the franchise is operated and used, the said franchises to be taxed under the control and regulation of the internal-revenue collector.

"That such tax shall be in the amount of 3 per cent on the 100 of the value of the said franchise.

"That no exemption granted by any State to any corporation, company, or person whatsoever shall be effectual as an exemption of taxation under this bill.

"That all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

Mr. DINGLEY. I make the point of order that that is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. LANHAM. I move to strike out section 27 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] moves to strike out section 27 of the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I was on my feet and asked to be heard on the point of order, and must have been overlooked inadvertently, if I was overlooked. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly if the Chair overlooked the gentleman it was inadvertently.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I appreciate that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled upon the point of order, and yet the Chair will reserve the ruling and listen to the gentleman if he desires to be heard.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask my honorable friend from Maine upon what he makes the point of order; whether he claims the amendment is ungermane, or whether he claims it is a change in existing law?

Mr. DINGLEY. It is not germane as a substitute for this section. This section deals with interest-bearing obligations, and the gentleman's substitute proposes an entirely different subject-matter.

I suggest that it is not a matter of right for any gentleman to speak upon a point of order, and that this point is so perfectly clear that it seems to me time ought not to be taken up in its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems so to the Chair, yet the Chair will not peremptorily refuse to hear the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair is so perfectly clear that the point of order is well taken that no argument would make any change in the views of the Chair, certainly I will defer to that sentiment and not embarrass the House by occupying the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is obliged to the gentleman. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LANHAM. I renew my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] moves to strike out section 27.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LANHAM) there were—ayes 103, noes 132.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out section 27, adding in lieu thereof the following, viz:

"SEC. 27. That there shall be levied and collected a tax of 5 per cent on all dividends in scrip or money thereafter declared due wherever and whenever the same shall be payable to stockholders, policy holders, or depositors, or parties whatsoever, including nonresidents, whether citizens or aliens, as part of the earnings, income, or gains of any bank, trust company, saving institution, and of any fire, marine, life, inland insurance company, either stock or mutual, under whatever name or style known or called, in the United States or Territories, whether specially incorporated or existing under general laws, and in all undistributed sums, or sums made or added during the year to their surplus or contingent funds; and said banks, trust companies, saving institutions, and insurance companies shall pay the said tax, and are hereby authorized to deduct and withhold from all payments made on account of any dividends or sums of money that may be due and payable as aforesaid the said tax of 5 per cent. And a list or return shall be made and rendered to the assessor or assistant assessor on or before the 10th day of the month following that in which any dividends or sums of money become due or payable as aforesaid. And said list or return shall contain a true and faithful account of the amount of taxes as aforesaid; and there shall be annexed thereto a declaration of the president, cashier, or treasurer of the bank, trust company, saving institution, or insurance company, under oath or affirmation in form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that the same contains a true and faithful account of the taxes as aforesaid. And for any default in the making or rendering of such list or return, with such declaration annexed, the bank, trust company, saving institution, or insurance company making such default shall forfeit as a penalty the sum of $1,000, and in case of any default in making or rendering said list or return, or of any default in the payment of the tax as required, or any part thereof, the assessment and collection of the tax and penalty shall be in accordance with the general provisions of law in other cases of neglect and refusal: Provided, That the tax upon the dividends of life insurance companies shall not be deemed due until such dividends are payable; nor shall the portion of premiums returned by mutual life insurance companies to their policy holders, nor the annual or semiannual interest allowed or paid to the depositors in saving banks or saving institutions be considered as dividends.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not germane to section 27.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Chair understands the gentleman from Arkansas desires to offer a substitute?

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, it is not a substitute, but a new section, which I would like to offer between sections 26 and 27, to provide for a tax of 5 per cent on all trusts to pay some of the expenses of this war. It is not a substitute for the pending section.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I understand that under the agreement we have had we are considering both sections?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Then, if there is objection, I will offer the following amendment. I offer to strike out the section and offer this as a substitute, together with another part which I have here.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this a substitute for section 27?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. It was intended as a substitute for section 28.

The CHAIRMAN. We have not reached section 28.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Then I move to strike out section 27 and offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been voted on, and the motion to strike out has been negatived.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I move to strike out section 27 and in lieu thereof insert the following.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask, as a matter of order, whether sections 27 and 28 are not both to be considered together?

Mr. STEELE. That was the order.

Mr. BAILEY. I think section 28 is before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand the order.

Mr. McMILLIN. It was agreed that they should both be considered, as I understand; and if there is any doubt about it, I would ask consent that the order may be so construed.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask consent. That will enable the gentleman to have it considered.

Mr. BRUMM. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRUMM. It is now close to 4 o'clock, and other substitutes and amendments are being offered to this section, and there are other amendments to the body of the bill of which notice has been given. Is there any way by which we may extend the time, so as to have a vote on them?

The CHAIRMAN. Not in committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. I insist on the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the regular order. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that section 28 be now considered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Louisiana offers a substitute for section 28.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. May I ask permission to make one little explanation?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks permission to make a statement. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I desire to state that I have been authorized to submit the proposition which I have sent to the desk, and this other also, by the Democratic minority of the Ways and Means Committee; and as the two are separate and distinct, I desire to offer them separately; but if they should be both adopted, that would cover the point we desire to make, and it is a substitute for the one hundred million of money which is to be available in the certificates of indebtedness required in section 28. I desire to strike out and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. Which substitute does the gentleman first offer?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I first offer the one in regard to the seigniorage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the substitute.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. When order is restored it will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 28 and insert the following:

"That an amount of the silver bullion now held in the Treasury equal to the gain or seigniorage thereof, purchased in pursuance of the act of July 14, 1890, entitled 'An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes,' is hereby set aside to be used for the payment of public expenditures in the manner hereinafter provided.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates upon the silver bullion set apart in this act in amount equal to the coinage value thereof, and to use said silver certificates from time to time, when the revenues of the Government may require it, in the payment of public expenditures: Provided, That the amount of such certificates at any time issued and outstanding shall not exceed the coinage value of the bullion herein mentioned, and that the silver certificates herein provided for shall be of like denominations and legal-tender power, and shall in all respects be of like character, as is now provided by law for the silver certificates authorized to be issued on the deposit of standard silver dollars.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined as fast as practicable into legal-tender standard silver dollars the silver bullion set apart as seigniorage by this act, and shall hold the coin for the redemption of the silver certificates herein authorized to be issued."

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not germane to this section.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I would ask the gentleman to withdraw that point of order, and we will take a vote immediately upon the proposition as it stands. If he does not, I desire to know exactly the reasons for the point of order, that I may be able to speak to them.

Mr. DINGLEY. The point of order is that they are not on the same subject that we are considering in the section before us.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. On that I want to say a word. This House is now considering a proposition to raise revenues for the purpose of conducting this war. There is now in the Treasury of the Government—known to be there by every member of this House and by the majority of the people of this country—forty-two millions of silver bullion which can now be coined and used by the Government in this emergency. This proposition has for its intention and for its end putting the Treasury in possession of this money, so that it can be used for the purposes for which this bill has been introduced. [Cries of "Rule!"]

Mr. BRUMM. I want to offer the following amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. A point of order is pending.

Mr. DINGLEY. I simply desire to call attention to the fact that the pending section is a provision authorizing the borrowing of money. Now, the amendment proposed is to authorize the coinage of silver bullion and the issue of silver certificates, which is obviously an entirely different subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BRUMM. I want to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is another proposition pending, offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The Clerk proceeded to read the second amendment of Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BRUMM. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, under the order the committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10100, and by its order had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire, on behalf of the Committee on Ways and Means, before moving the previous question, to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the entire bill, but making no changes in the bill except certain amendments which have been agreed to by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee, and which have been indicated in a printed bill that has been distributed and is lying upon the members' desks. Before moving the previous question, I desire to call attention to what these modifications are. If gentlemen will take the printed bill that is before them containing the italicized amendments——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve a point of order against this proceeding. No such bill has been read. The Committee on Ways and Means have reported a bill to the House under a special order, and it would not be in order now to submit a substitute.

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill has been reported to the House, and there the order terminates.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was a special order to report a certain bill——

Mr. DOCKERY. With amendments.

Mr. DINGLEY. And there the order terminates.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the previous question is not ordered, that would be in order; otherwise not.

Mr. McRAE. Then I will ask the gentleman from Maine to postpone asking for the previous question until I can have the amendment read.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am not willing to do that.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, we might as well understand in the beginning what the status is. I desire to ask if it is in order for the gentleman from Maine to now move a substitute for the bill reported to the House by the Committee of the Whole House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. BAILEY. And that the gentleman from Maine has a right to submit the motion he has made?

Mr. DINGLEY. The amendments are nearly all verbal amendments.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine desire that the amendment the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] proposes to present, if he has an opportunity, should be read?

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at present, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAILEY. The adoption by the House of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Maine will not preclude our right to move to recommit that substitute?

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. No; it does not interfere with that right.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, it is now 4 o'clock and only two sections of the bill that were read were reached in Committee of the Whole. I would ask the gentleman from Maine if he would object—I will ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole consider the proposed substitute and what other propositions may be offered for one hour, so as to make the report at 5 o'clock instead of 4.

Several MEMBERS (on the Republican side). Oh, no, no!

The SPEAKER. Objection is made; and the gentleman from Maine has the floor.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Maine whether this bill he has proposed as a substitute was ever considered by the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. DINGLEY. It is proposed by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. McMILLIN. But it was never considered by the minority?

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at all.

Mr. DOCKERY. Substantially nonpartisan, I suppose? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it. In the meantime the gentleman from Maine has the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want to take the floor from the gentleman from Maine unless he consents.

Mr. DINGLEY. Having the floor, Mr. Speaker, I want to make a suggestion. I would like——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the substitute never having been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means, it would not be in order to offer it here. It has had no consideration by the Committee on Ways and Means. It has not even been read.

Mr. McMILLIN. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that as far as I am concerned——

Mr. DINGLEY. I offer it as an individual member, but it represents the views of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman will admit that there was no meeting of the committee and that no notice was given to the minority that it was to be presented as a substitute.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is true.

Mr. STEELE. I think you will vote for every one of the amendments, though.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is nothing in it but what every member of the House will vote for.

Mr. BLAND. Will you allow an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that nearly every other member having spoken, perhaps the gentleman having the floor ought to be allowed to speak. [Laughter.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is the right of the House to have the substitute read in full; but it is the same bill that the House has had under consideration in committee, with certain amendments, which have been printed and distributed. Now, without formally reading the bill, which would give no information to members, I can in a few minutes call attention to the proposed changes in the substitute, if it is desired.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do the amendments increase or decrease taxation as a rule?

Mr. DINGLEY. They decrease it in almost every instance.

Mr. BRUMM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has the floor.

Mr. BRUMM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does it relate to the gentleman from Maine having the floor?

Mr. BRUMM. It does not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine has the floor.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the substitute in detail may be dispensed with, and that merely the amendments, as indicated in the paper laid on the desks of members, be read for the information of the House.

Mr. LENTZ. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion? I understand the Senate has adjourned over till Monday. Why can we not read this bill to-night and discuss it to-morrow?

Mr. DINGLEY. I did not yield. I should like to have my proposition submitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to omit the reading of the substitute——

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to make a statement. By objecting I might inflict upon the House what it would not like to hear—portions of the bill which have already been read. But I may be permitted to state in this connection that it is extraordinary to consider in the House a bill of this kind before it has been considered in Committee of the Whole, and to get rid of the action taken in Committee of the Whole by adopting the substitute. If that can be done, you can pass revenue measures without having them considered in Committee of the Whole at all.

Mr. DINGLEY. This substitute embraces the bill which was considered by the committee, in the form in which the Committee of the Whole left it, with certain amendments indicated in the printed bill which has been laid on the desks of members, and a few changes made since that bill and amendments were printed, which I will explain.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the reading of the substitute be dispensed with, except those parts embracing amendments to the bill as already considered.

Mr. BLAND. I shall certainly object to dispensing with the reading of any part of the bill except that which has already been read. There are some amendments which have not been read.

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill was all read.

Mr. BLAND. I do not so understand.

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill was read in full in Committee of the Whole.

A MEMBER. This bill has not been read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAND. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. I offer the substitute. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert what I send to the Clerk's desk; and on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. McRAE. Is it in order now to offer my motion?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Maine surely can not call the previous question on this substitute before it has been read. That is new doctrine, even from the State of Maine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks the previous question on the substitute and on the bill to its passage.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it in order to do that before the reading of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. The bill can not be before the House until it is read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill should first be read. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following:

That from and after the passage of this act there shall be paid, in lieu of the tax of $1 now imposed by law, a tax of $2 on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors, brewed or manufactured, stored or sold, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States, by whatever name such liquors may be called, for every barrel containing not more than 31 gallons; and at a like rate for any other quantity or for the fractional parts of a barrel authorized and defined by law. And section 3339 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended accordingly.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe and furnish suitable stamps denoting the payment of the internal-revenue tax imposed by this section; and until such stamps are prepared and furnished, the stamps heretofore used to denote the payment of the internal-revenue tax on fermented liquors may be stamped or imprinted with a suitable device to denote the new rate of tax, and shall be affixed to all packages containing fermented liquors on which the tax imposed by this act is paid. And any brewer having possession of unaffixed stamps heretofore issued for the payment of the tax upon fermented liquors shall present the same to the collector of the district, who shall receive them at the price paid for such stamps by the purchasers and issue in lieu thereof new or imprinted stamps at the rate provided by this section; and if any packages of fermented liquor shall be sold, stored, or removed for consumption or sale after the passage of this act stamped only with the stamps hitherto used for the payment of the tax upon fermented liquor, and which have not received the imprint or device denoting the new rate of tax, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by assessment or otherwise, cause to be collected the additional tax imposed by this act upon such packages: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act a discount of 5 per cent shall be allowed upon all sales of stamps provided for by this section.

TOBACCO, CIGARS, CIGARETTES, AND SNUFF.

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act there shall, in lieu of the tax now imposed by law, be levied and collected a tax of 12 cents per pound upon all tobacco and snuff, however prepared, manufactured, and sold, or removed for consumption or sale; and upon cigars and cigarettes which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, there shall be levied and collected the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof, namely, a tax of $4 per thousand on cigars of all descriptions made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, and of $2 per thousand on cigars made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand; and a tax of $4 per thousand on cigarettes made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, and weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand; and $2 per thousand on cigarettes made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand: Provided, That in addition to the quantity of tobacco and snuff, in packages, now authorized by law, there may be packages of smoking and fine-cut chewing tobacco containing 1 ounce, 1½ ounces, and 2½ ounces; and in addition to the number now authorized by law in packages of cigarettes there may be packages containing 3 and 16 cigarettes each; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to provide suitable stamps for the payment of taxes thereon.

And there shall also be levied and collected, upon all the articles in this section enumerated and described which have been manufactured or imported and removed from the factory or custom-house before the passage of this act bearing the tax stamps heretofore required to be affixed to such articles for the payment of the tax thereon and which are at the time of the passage of this act held and intended for sale by any person, an additional tax equal to the difference between the tax already paid on such articles at the time of removal from the factory or custom-house and the tax hereby levied upon such articles manufactured and removed from the factory or custom-house after the passage of this act, namely, a tax of 6 cents per pound upon all tobacco and snuff, however prepared; a tax of $1 per thousand on cigars of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, and weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand; a tax of $1 per thousand on cigars, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand; and a tax of $1 per thousand on cigarettes, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, and weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, and of $1 per thousand on cigarettes, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand.

Every person, either as owner or dealer or as a broker, commission merchant, or other agent for the owner or dealer, having on the day succeeding the passage of this act any of the above-described articles in stock for sale, and which have been removed from the factory where produced or custom-house through which imported, bearing the proper stamp expressing the rate of tax payable thereon at the time of such removal, shall make a full and true return of the quantity thereof, in pounds as to the tobacco and snuff, and in thousands as to cigars and cigarettes, so held on that day, under oath and in such form and under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. Such return shall be made and delivered to any collector or deputy collector of internal revenue upon demand, or, if not previously rendered, to the collector of the district within thirty days after the passage of this act; and on or before said day, and before selling or parting with the possession of any article above described after the passage of this act, the owner or dealer or other person having possession of said articles shall purchase and procure from the collector of the district the proper stamps for the payment of the additional taxes hereby levied upon said articles, and shall affix such stamps to the packages containing such articles, and cancel the same in the manner now by law provided for the attachment and cancellation of stamps to and upon such articles or packages. And any such article or package of such articles which shall be removed from such stock or from the place where situated on the day succeeding the passage of this act, or which shall be found after thirty days after the passage of this act, not bearing the stamp or stamps denoting the additional tax hereby levied on such articles, properly canceled as by law required, shall be forfeited to the United States, and the person so removing such article unstamped as herein required or not having the stamp properly canceled, or having such article in stock or possession, exposed or intended for sale, not bearing the stamp denoting such additional tax, properly canceled, shall be liable to the payment of double the amount of additional tax due upon such article and to a penalty of not less than $1 nor more than $100 for each such insufficiently stamped article so removed or held in possession.

Every person willfully failing or refusing to make the required return at the time and in the manner provided by law or regulation shall forfeit and pay double the amount of tax levied by this act and a penalty of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars; and for making a false and fraudulent return shall incur a penalty of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

And for the expense connected with the assessment and collection of the taxes provided by this act there is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be required, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the employment of such deputy collectors and other employees in the several collection districts in the United States, and such clerks and employees in the Bureau of Internal Revenue as may, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, be necessary for a period not exceeding one year, to be compensated for their services by such allowances as shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue: Provided, That not exceeding $25,000 of this appropriation may be used in the employment of not to exceed ten additional revenue agents, whom the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to employ, such agents to be known and designated as internal-revenue agents in addition to the number now authorized by section 3152 of the Revised Statutes as amended; and the existing provisions of law in all other respects shall apply to such agents, their duties, compensation, and expenses.

TOBACCO DEALERS, PEDDLERS, AND MANUFACTURERS.

SEC. 3. That on and after July 1, 1898, special taxes on tobacco dealers, peddlers, and manufacturers are hereby imposed per annum, as follows:

Dealers in leaf tobacco whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000 shall pay $12, and if their annual sales exceed $10,000, shall pay $24.

Dealers in tobacco whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000 shall each pay $4.80.

Dealers in tobacco whose annual sales exceed $10,000 shall each pay $12.

Every person whose business it is to sell, or offer for sale, manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars shall be regarded as a dealer in tobacco: Provided, That no manufacturer of tobacco, snuff, or cigars shall be required to pay a special tax as dealer in manufactured tobacco and cigars for selling his own products at the place of manufacture.

Manufacturers of tobacco whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000 shall each pay $12.

Manufacturers of tobacco whose annual sales exceed $10,000 shall each pay $24.

Manufacturers of cigars whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000 shall each pay $12.

Manufacturers of cigars whose annual sales exceed $10,000 shall each pay $24.

Peddlers of tobacco shall be classified and rated as follows, to wit: When traveling with more than two horses, mules, or other animals, as of the first class, and shall pay $48; when traveling with two horses, mules, or other animals, as of the second class, and shall pay $24; when traveling with one horse, mule, or other animal, as of the third class, and shall pay $12; when traveling on foot or by public conveyance or by private conveyance other than hereby described, as of the fourth class, and shall pay $7.20. Any person who sells or offers to sell and deliver manufactured tobacco, snuff, cigars, or cigarettes, traveling from place to place, in the town or through the country shall be regarded as a peddler of tobacco.

And every person who carries on any business or occupation for which special taxes are imposed by this section, without having paid the special tax herein provided, shall, besides being liable to the payment of such special tax, be fined not less than $10 nor more than $500.

ADHESIVE STAMPS.

SEC. 4. That on and after the 1st day of June, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, for and in respect of the several bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock and of indebtedness, and other documents, instruments, matters, and things mentioned and described in Schedule A of this act, or for or in respect of the vellum, parchment, or paper upon which such instruments, matters, or things, or any of them, shall be written or printed by any person or persons, or party who shall make, sign, or issue the same, or for whose use or benefit the same shall be made, signed, or issued, the several taxes or sums of money set down in figures against the same, respectively, or otherwise specified or set forth in the said schedule.

And there shall also be levied, collected, and paid, for and in respect to the medicines, preparations, matters, and things mentioned and described in Schedule B of this act, manufactured, sold, or removed for sale, the several taxes or sums of money set down in words or figures against the same, respectively, or otherwise specified or set forth in Schedule B of this act.

SEC. 5. That if any person or persons shall make, sign, or issue, or cause to be made, signed, or issued, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped for denoting the tax hereby imposed thereon, or without having thereupon an adhesive stamp to denote said tax, such person or persons shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not exceeding $50, and such instrument, document, or paper, as aforesaid, shall be deemed invalid and of no effect.

SEC. 6. That if any person shall forge or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be forged or counterfeited, any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, or any part of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument which shall have been provided, or may hereafter be provided, made, or used in pursuance of this act, or shall forge, counterfeit, or resemble, or cause or procure to be forged, counterfeited, or resembled, the impression, or any part of the impression, of any such stamp, die, plate, or other instrument as aforesaid, upon any vellum, parchment, or paper, or shall stamp or mark, or cause or procure to be stamped or marked, any vellum, parchment, or paper with any such forged or counterfeited stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, or part of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, as aforesaid, with intent to defraud the United States of any of the taxes hereby imposed, or any part thereof; or if any person shall utter, or sell, or expose for sale, any vellum, parchment, paper, article, or thing having thereupon the impression of any such counterfeited stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, or any part of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, or any such forged, counterfeited, or resembled impression, or part of impression, as aforesaid, knowing the same to be forged, counterfeited, or resembled; or if any person shall knowingly use or permit the use of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument which shall have been so provided, made, or used as aforesaid, with intent to defraud the United States; or if any person shall fraudulently cut, tear, or remove, or cause or procure to be cut, torn, or removed, the impression of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument which shall have been provided, made, or used in pursuance of this act from any vellum, parchment, or paper, or any instrument or writing charged or chargeable with any of the taxes imposed by law; or if any person shall fraudulently use, join, fix, or place, or cause to be used, joined, fixed, or placed, to, with, or upon any vellum, parchment, paper, or any instrument or writing charged or chargeable with any of the taxes hereby imposed, any adhesive stamp, or the impression of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, which shall have been provided, made, or used in pursuance of law, and which shall have been cut, torn, or removed from any other vellum, parchment, or paper, or any instrument or writing charged or chargeable with any of the taxes imposed by law; or if any person shall willfully remove or cause to be removed, alter or cause to be altered, the canceling or defacing marks of any adhesive stamp with intent to use the same, or to cause the use of the same, after it shall have been once used, or shall knowingly or willfully sell or buy such washed or restored stamp, or offer the same for sale, or give or expose the same to any person for use, or knowingly use the same, or prepare the same with intent for the further use thereof; or if any person shall knowingly and without lawful excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the person accused) have in his possession any washed, restored, or altered stamp which has been removed from any vellum, parchment, paper, instrument, or writing, then, and in every such case, every person so offending, and every person knowingly and willfully aiding abetting, or assisting in committing any such offense as aforesaid shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit the said counterfeit stamps and the articles upon which they are placed, and be punished by fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment and confinement to hard labor not exceeding five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 7. That in any and all cases where an adhesive stamp shall be used for denoting any tax imposed by this act, except as hereinafter provided, the person using or affixing the same shall write or stamp thereupon the initials of his name and the date upon which the same shall be attached or used, so that the same may not again be used. And if any person shall fraudulently make use of an adhesive stamp to denote any tax imposed by this act without so effectually canceling and obliterating such stamp, except as before mentioned, he, she, or they shall forfeit the sum of $50: Provided, nevertheless, That any proprietor or proprietors of proprietary articles, or articles subject to stamp duty under Schedule B of this act, shall have the privilege of furnishing, without expense to the United States, in suitable form, to be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, his or their own dies or designs for stamps to be used thereon, to be retained in the possession of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for his or their separate use, which shall not be duplicated to any other person. That in all cases where such stamp is used, instead of cancellation by initials and date, the said stamp shall be so affixed on the box, bottle, or package that in opening the same, or using the contents thereof, the said stamp shall be effectually destroyed; and in default thereof the party making default shall be liable to the same penalty imposed for neglect to affix said stamp as hereinbefore prescribed in this act. Any person who shall fraudulently obtain or use any of the aforesaid stamps or designs therefor, and any person forging or counterfeiting, or causing or procuring the forging or counterfeiting, any representation, likeness, similitude, or colorable imitation of the said last-mentioned stamp, or any engraver or printer who shall sell or give away said stamps, or selling the same, or, being a merchant, broker, peddler, or person dealing, in whole or in part, in similar goods, wares, merchandise, manufactures, preparations, or articles, or those designed for similar objects or purposes, shall have knowingly or fraudulently in his, her, or their possession any such forged, counterfeited likeness, similitude, or colorable imitation of the said last-mentioned stamp, shall be deemed guilty of a crime, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

SEC. 8. That if any person or persons shall make, sign, or issue, or cause to be made, signed, or issued, or shall accept or pay, or cause to be accepted or paid, with design to evade the payment of any stamp tax, any bill of exchange, draft, or order, or promissory note for the payment of money, liable to any of the taxes imposed by this act, without the same being duly stamped, or having thereupon an adhesive stamp for denoting the tax hereby charged thereon, he, she, or they shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $200.

SEC. 9. That the acceptor or acceptors of any bill of exchange or order for the payment of any sum of money drawn, or purporting to be drawn, in any foreign country, but payable in the United States, shall, before paying or accepting the same, place thereupon a stamp, indicating the tax upon the same, as the law requires for inland bills of exchange or promissory notes; and no bill of exchange shall be paid or negotiated without such stamp; and if any person shall pay or negotiate, or offer in payment, or receive or take in payment, any such draft or order, the person or persons so offending shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $100.

SEC. 10. That in any collection district where, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the facilities for the procurement and distribution of adhesive stamps are or shall be insufficient, the Commissioner, as aforesaid, is authorized to furnish, supply, and deliver to the collector of any district, and to any assistant treasurer of the United States or designated depositary thereof, or any postmaster, a suitable quantity of adhesive stamps, without prepayment therefor, and may in advance require of any collector, assistant treasurer of the United States, or postmaster a bond, with sufficient sureties, to an amount equal to the value of the adhesive stamps which may be placed in his hands and remain unaccounted for, conditioned for the faithful return, whenever so required, of all quantities or amounts undisposed of, and for the payment monthly of all quantities or amounts sold or not remaining on hand. And it shall be the duty of such collector to supply his deputies with, or sell to other parties within his district who may make application therefor, adhesive stamps, upon the same terms allowed by law or under the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who is hereby authorized to made such other regulations, not inconsistent herewith, for the security of the United States and the better accommodation of the public, in relation to the matters hereinbefore mentioned, as he may judge necessary and expedient. And the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time make such regulations as he may find necessary to insure the safe-keeping or prevent the illegal use of all such adhesive stamps.

SEC. 11. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such methods for the cancellation of stamps, as substitute for or in addition to the method now prescribed by law, as he may deem expedient or effectual.

SEC. 12. That any person or persons who shall register, issue, sell, or transfer, or who shall cause to be issued, registered, sold, or transferred, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in Schedule A of this act, without the same being duly stamped, or having thereupon an adhesive stamp for denoting the tax chargeable thereon, and canceled in the manner required by law, with intent to evade the provisions of this act, shall, for every such offense, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $50; and such instrument, document, or paper, not being stamped according to law, shall be deemed invalid and of no effect: Provided, That hereafter, in all cases where the party has not affixed to any instrument the stamp required by law thereon at the time of issuing, selling, or transferring the said bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock or of indebtedness, and he or they, or any party having an interest therein, shall be subsequently desirous of affixing such stamp to said instrument, or, if said instrument be lost, to a copy thereof, he or they shall appear before the collector of internal revenue of the proper district, who shall, upon the payment of the price of the proper stamp required by law, and of a penalty of $10, and, where the whole amount of the tax denoted by the stamp required shall exceed the sum of $50, on payment also of interest, at the rate of 6 per cent, on said tax from the day on which such stamp ought to have been affixed, affix the proper stamp to such bond, debenture, certificate of stock or of indebtedness or copy, and note upon the margin thereof the date of his so doing, and the fact that such penalty has been paid; and the same shall thereupon be deemed and held to be as valid, to all intents and purposes, as if stamped when made or issued: And provided further, That where it shall appear to said collector, upon oath or otherwise, to his satisfaction, that any such instrument has not been duly stamped, at the time of making or issuing the same, by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity, and without any willful design to defraud the United States of the stamp, or to evade or delay the payment thereof, then and in such case, if such instrument, or, if the original be lost, a copy thereof, duly certified by the officer having charge of any records in which such original is required to be recorded, or otherwise duly proven to the satisfaction of the collector, shall, within twelve calendar months after the making or issuing thereof, be brought to the said collector of internal revenue to be stamped, and the stamp tax chargeable thereon shall be paid, it shall be lawful for the said collector to remit the penalty aforesaid and to cause such instrument to be duly stamped. And when the original instrument, or a certified or duly proven copy thereof, as aforesaid, duly stamped so as to entitle the same to be recorded, shall be presented to the clerk, register, recorder, or other officer having charge of the original record, it shall be lawful for such officer, upon the payment of the fee legally chargeable for the recording thereof, to make a new record thereof, or to note upon the original record the fact that the error or omission in the stamping of said original instrument has been corrected pursuant to law; and the original instrument or such certified copy, or the record thereof, may be used in all courts and places in the same manner and with like effect as if the instrument had been originally stamped: And provided further, That in all cases where the party has not affixed the stamp required by law upon any such instrument issued, registered, sold, or transferred at a time when and at a place where no collection district was established, it shall be lawful for him or them, or any party having an interest therein, to affix the proper stamp thereto, or, if the original be lost, to a copy thereof. But no right acquired in good faith before the stamping of such instrument, or copy thereof, as herein provided, if such record be required by law, shall in any manner be affected by such stamping as aforesaid.

SEC. 13. That hereafter no instrument, paper, or document required by law to be stamped, which has been signed or issued without being duly stamped, or with a deficient stamp, nor any copy thereof, shall be recorded or admitted, or used as evidence in any court until a legal stamp or stamps, denoting the amount of tax, shall have been affixed thereto, as prescribed by law: Provided, That any bond, debenture, certificate of stock, or certificate of indebtedness issued in any foreign country shall pay the same tax as is required by law on similar instruments when issued, sold, or transferred in the United States; and the party to whom the same is issued, or by whom it is sold or transferred, shall, before selling or transferring the same, affix thereon the stamp or stamps indicating the tax required.

SEC. 14. That it shall not be lawful to record or register any instrument, paper, or document required by law to be stamped unless a stamp or stamps of the proper amount shall have been affixed and canceled in the manner prescribed by law; and the record, registry, or transfer of any such instruments upon which the proper stamp or stamps aforesaid shall not have been affixed and canceled as aforesaid shall be utterly void, and shall not be used in evidence.

SEC. 15. That no instrument, paper, or document required by law to be stamped shall be deemed or held invalid and of no effect for the want of a particular kind or description of stamp designated for and denoting the tax charged on any such instrument, paper, or document, provided a legal documentary stamp or stamps denoting a tax of equal amount shall have been duly affixed and used thereon.

SEC. 16. That all bonds, debentures, or certificates of indebtedness issued by the officers of the United States Government, or by the officers of any State, county, town, municipal corporation, or other corporation exercising the taxing power, shall be, and hereby are, exempt from the stamp taxes required by this act: Provided, That it is the intent hereby to exempt from the stamp taxes imposed by this act such State, county, town, or other municipal corporations in the exercise only of functions strictly belonging to them in their ordinary governmental, taxing, or municipal capacity: Provided further, That stock and bonds issued by cooperative building and loan associations shall be exempt from the tax herein provided.

SEC. 17. That on and after the 1st day of June, 1898, no telegraph company or its agent or employee shall receive from any person or transmit to any person any dispatch or message on which the company's charges have been paid or are to be collected, except press news dispatches, without an adhesive stamp, denoting the duty imposed by this act, being affixed to a copy thereof, or having the same stamped thereupon, and in default thereof shall incur a penalty of $10: Provided, That only one stamp shall be required, whether sent through one or more companies.

SEC. 18. That all the provisions of this act relating to dies, stamps, adhesive stamps, and stamp duties shall extend to and include (except where manifestly inapplicable) all the articles or objects enumerated in Schedule B, subject to stamp duties, and apply to the provisions in relation thereto.

SEC. 19. That on and after the 1st day of June, 1898, no person or persons, firms, companies, or corporations shall make, prepare, and sell, or remove for consumption or sale, drugs, medicines, preparations, compositions, articles, or things, including perfumery and cosmetics, upon which a tax is imposed by this act, as enumerated and mentioned in Schedule B, without affixing thereto an adhesive stamp or label denoting the duty before mentioned, and in default thereof shall incur a penalty of $100: Provided, That no stamp tax shall be imposed upon any uncompounded medicinal drug or chemical, nor upon any medicine compounded according to the United States or other national pharmacopœia, or national formulary, or of which the full or proper formula is published in any of the dispensatories now or hitherto in common use among physicians or apothecaries, when not sold or offered for sale, or advertised under any other name, form, or guise than that under which they may be severally denominated and laid down in the pharmacopœias, formularies, or dispensatories, as aforesaid; nor upon any medicine sold to or for the use of any person which may be mixed or compounded for said person according to the written receipt or prescription of any physician. But nothing in this section shall be construed to exempt from stamp tax any medicinal articles, whether simple or compounded by any formula, published or unpublished, which are put up in style or manner similar to that of patent or proprietory medicine in general, or which have on their labels or wrappers recommendations as remedies or specifics for any ailment, or as having any special proprietary claims to merit, or to any peculiar advantage in mode of preparation, quality, use, or effect, whether such claim be real or pretended.

SEC. 20. That any manufacturer or maker of any of the articles for sale mentioned in Schedule B, after the same shall have been so made, and the particulars hereinbefore required as to stamps have been complied with, or any other person who shall take off, remove, or detach, or cause, or permit, or suffer to be taken off, or removed or detached, any stamp, or who shall use any stamp, or any wrapper or cover to which any stamp is affixed, to cover any other article or commodity than that originally contained in such wrapper or cover, with such stamp when first used, with the intent to evade the stamp duties, shall for every such article, respectively, in respect of which any such offense shall be committed, be subject to a penalty of $50, to be recovered, together with the costs thereupon accruing, and every such article or commodity as aforesaid shall also be forfeited.

SEC. 21. That any maker or manufacturer of any of the articles or commodities mentioned in Schedule B, as aforesaid, or any other person who shall sell, send out, remove, or deliver any article or commodity, manufactured as aforesaid, before the duty thereon shall have been fully paid by affixing thereon the proper stamp, as in this act provided, or who shall hide or conceal, or cause to be hidden or concealed, or who shall remove or convey away, or deposit, or cause to be removed or conveyed away from or deposited in any place, any such article or commodity, to evade the duty chargeable thereon, or any part thereof, shall be subject to a penalty of $100, together with the forfeiture of any such article or commodity: Provided, That articles upon which stamp taxes are required by this act may, when intended for exportation, be manufactured and sold or removed without having stamps affixed thereto, and without being charged with tax as aforesaid; and every manufacturer or maker of any article as aforesaid, intended for exportation, shall give such bonds and be subject to such rules and regulations to protect the revenue against fraud as may be from time to time prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 23. That every manufacturer or maker of any of the articles or commodities, as aforesaid, or his foreman, agent, or superintendent, shall at the end of each and every month make, sign, and file with the collector of internal revenue for the district in which he resides a declaration in writing that no such article or commodity as aforesaid has, during such preceding month or time when the last declaration was made, been removed, or carried, or sent, or caused or suffered or known to have been removed, carried, or sent from the premises of such manufacturer or maker other than such as have been duly taken account of and charged with the stamp tax, on pain of such manufacturer or maker forfeiting for every refusal or neglect to make such declaration $100; and if any such manufacturer or maker, or his foreman, agent, or superintendent, shall make any false or untrue declaration, such manufacturer or maker, or foreman, agent, or superintendent making the same shall forfeit $500.

SEC. 23. That the stamp taxes prescribed in this act on the articles enumerated in Schedule B shall attach to all such articles and things sold or removed for sale on and after the said 1st day of June, 1898. Every person who offers or exposes for sale any article or thing enumerated in said Schedule B, whether the article so offered or exposed is of foreign manufacture and imported or of domestic manufacture, shall be deemed the manufacturer thereof, and shall be subject to all the taxes, liabilities, and penalties imposed by law for the sale of articles without the use of the proper stamp denoting the tax paid thereon; and all such articles of foreign manufacture shall, in addition to the import duty imposed on the same, be subject to the stamp tax prescribed in this act.

SEC. 24. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall cause to be prepared for the payment of the taxes prescribed in this act suitable stamps denoting the tax on the document, article, or thing to which the same may be affixed, and he is authorized to prescribe such method for the cancellation of said stamps, as substitute for or in addition to the method provided in this act, as he may deem expedient. And he may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, make all needful rules and regulations for the proper enforcement of this act.

SCHEDULE A.

Upon each bottle containing more than 1 pint, 4 cents.

SEC. 25. That every person, firm, or corporation who shall have made any contract prior to the passage of this act, and without other provision therein for the payment of taxes imposed by law enacted subsequent thereto, upon articles to be delivered under such contract, is hereby authorized and empowered to add to the price thereof so much money as will be equivalent to the tax imposed on said articles by this act, and not previously paid by the vendee, and shall be entitled by virtue hereof to be paid, and to sue for and recover, the same accordingly. And in all cases of articles manufactured or produced, in whole or in part, upon commission, or where the material is furnished by one party and manufactured by another, if the manufacturer shall be required to pay under this act the tax hereby imposed, such person or persons so paying the same shall be entitled to collect the amount thereof of the owner or owners, and shall have a lien for the amount thus paid upon the produced or manufactured goods.

TONNAGE TAX.

SEC. 26. That in lieu of the tax on tonnage imposed by section 11 of chapter 421 of the laws of 1886, approved June 19, 1886, a duty of 8 cents per ton, not to exceed in the aggregate 96 cents per ton in any one year, is hereby imposed at each entry on all vessels which shall be entered in any port of the United States from any foreign port or place in North America, Central America, the West India Islands, the Bahama Islands, the Bermuda Islands, or the coast of South America bordering on the Caribbean Sea, or the Hawaiian Islands, or Newfoundland, and a duty of 20 cents per ton, not to exceed $2.40 per ton per annum, is hereby imposed at each entry upon all vessels which shall be entered in the United States from any other foreign port, not, however, to include vessels in distress or not engaged in trade.

From the receipts from duties on tonnage provided by this section there is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury for the maintenance of the Marine-Hospital Service, for the fiscal year 1899, the sum of $550,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit, in the estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1900 and annually thereafter, estimates in detail for the expenses of maintaining the Marine-Hospital Service.

Section 15 of chapter 121 of the laws of 1884, approved June 26, 1884, sections 11 and 12 of chapter 421 of the laws of 1886, approved June 19, 1886, and section 4223 of the Revised Statutes, are hereby repealed.

This section shall take effect on July 1, 1898.

LOANS.

SEC. 27. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States the sum of $500,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor, at not less than par, coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form as he may prescribe, and in denominations of $25 or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in coin at the pleasure of the United States after ten years from the date of their issue, and payable twenty years from such date, and bearing interest payably quarterly in coin, at the rate of 3 per cent per annum; and the bonds herein authorized shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That the bonds authorized by this section shall be first offered as a popular loan under such regulations, to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, as will give opportunity to the citizens of the United States to participate in the subscriptions to such loan; and a sum not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, issuing, and disposing of the same.

SEC. 28. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow from time to time, at the market rate of interest, not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, such sum or sums as, in his judgment, may be necessary to meet public expenditures, and to issue therefor certificates of indebtedness in such form as he may prescribe and in denominations of $50 or some multiple of that sum; and each certificate so issued shall be payable, with the interest accrued thereon, at such time, not exceeding one year from the date of its issue, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the amount of such certificates outstanding shall at no time exceed $100,000,000; and the provisions of existing law respecting counterfeiting and other fraudulent practices are hereby extended to the bonds and certificates of indebtedness authorized by this act.

Mr. DOCKERY (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, I wish to know whether it is in order to offer amendments to this substitute as the Clerk proceeds with the reading?

Mr. PAYNE. Of course the gentleman knows that no amendment can be offered while this is being read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, before moving the previous question, I desire to make a brief explanation of the amendments which are presented for the action of the House by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GRIGGS. I desire to obtain some information in regard to an amendment to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine has the floor.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to make a statement, if the gentleman will pardon me for a moment, regarding the several amendments which have been embodied in this bill since its consideration in the committee.

In the first place, I will say that all of these modifications that have been made in the bill, as presented in the substitute which has been read, have been made at the instance of members of the House, as much on one side as on the other, and are in the nature of reductions or alleviations or exceptions, I may say, to the provisions of the bill, and are made for the convenience of members, in large part. All of the modifications or amendments that have been indicated in the bill will be found by gentlemen, on an examination of the bill which has been laid upon their desks shortly after noon to-day, printed in italics, and are easily observed by glancing over the pages of the bill. These are all embodied in the printed bill, with the exception of several, to which I shall call your special attention.

On page 36, if you will turn to the printed bill before you, there are these changes made by the committee to which your attention is called. You will find near the bottom of the page the word "reinsurance" is inserted after the word "insurance" on this page, so as to read "insurance or reinsurance," etc. The object of this change is of course manifest.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What line does the gentleman refer to on that page?

Mr. DINGLEY. To line 21. The object of this change is manifest on the examination of the context.

In line 23, after the word "property," there are inserted the words "profits, titles;" so as to read "by which insurance shall be made or renewed upon property, profits, titles, or liability of any description," etc.

The reason for this change is also clear and will not require explanation.

And commencing on page 37, line 1, after the word "person," strike out down to and including the word "under," in line 6, and amend the paragraph so it will read:

Made by an insurance company or its agents, or by any other company or person, $100 and under, 10 cents; exceeding $100 and not exceeding $500, 50 cents; $500 and upward, $1.

That is a reduction, you will notice, in every case.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest, with reference to the tax on bank checks, which are fixed at a minimum of $100, that it would be a very easy matter for the drawer of the check to divide his $100 check into four of $25 each, by which he would escape the entire tax? Does not the gentleman think that it would be better to make some modification of that?

Mr. DINGLEY. I am acting under the instructions of the committee and would not feel myself authorized, without their consent, to made any modification. I do not think there would be any difficulty in dealing with the question to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I am sure the whole House will accept such an amendment if the gentleman will suggest the change.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand, of course, what the gentleman is trying to accomplish, but, as I have said, I do not feel authorized to make the change.

Again, on page 40——

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly, if it bears upon this question.

Mr. McMILLIN. If I can have the permission of the gentleman from Maine, I desire to submit an inquiry in this connection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think I know, in advance, the response the gentleman will make. But this bill imposes a tax on dealers in tobacco. In committee, it was sought to amend that provision; but it was not interfered with, because of the statement made in the committee that the right of the farmers and producers of tobacco were not to be interfered with, as now provided by law. I simply wanted to submit that statement in order that it might go into the RECORD, so that there would be no question about this matter in the future, and that it should be given as the legislative construction that the farmer was not to be interfered with in his sales by this measure.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman is entirely correct. The committee agreed as to that construction of the law; and not only that, but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue said also that it was a proper construction; that is to say, that this bill did not modify the law in that particular.

Mr. McMILLIN. I only wanted that statement to go on record.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DINGLEY. If it bears particularly on this point.

Mr. SIMPSON. I wish to inquire in regard to the tax on telegrams, etc.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am only now talking of the amendments where there has been a change in the text of the bill. I can not yield to go over matters that have already been considered in committee.

The next amendment is on page 40——

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the chairman give us this information——

Mr. DINGLEY. I must decline to be interrupted, unless it bears particularly upon the point in question.

On page 40, line 12, the committee recommend the insertion, after the word "yard," in line 12, of these words: "except for agricultural products deposited by the actual grower thereof, in the regular course of trade for sale."

On page 41 there is another variation from the printed bill, in lines 16 and 17.

Mr. SLAYDEN. In relation to that amendment I should like to ask the gentleman whether, after the words "deposited by the actual grower thereof," it will be necessary to insert the words "or by his agent"?

Mr. DINGLEY. I think there will be no difficulty. I understand that the practice is for the actual grower thereof, or some one employed by him, to bring the cotton to the warehouse and deposit it for sale. I understand from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS] that that is the practice.

Mr. GRIGGS. Yes; that is the practice.

Mr. EVANS. What he does by his agent he does by himself.

Mr. DINGLEY. Precisely. It was not the intention of the committee that there should be any stamp tax upon the receipts given to the grower under such circumstances.

Mr. DALZELL. Is not this the amendment as it was drawn by the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. DINGLEY. Exactly as it was drawn by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS]. In fact, most of the amendments are to meet certain objections raised by members on both sides.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does that cover wheat and other farm products?

Mr. DINGLEY. All agricultural products. Now, on page 41, a change is made merely to accord with the intent of the committee; so that lines 15, 16, and 17 will read:

Where each packet, box, bottle, pot, phial, or other inclosure, with its contents, shall exceed the retail price or value of 10 cents, and not exceed the retail price or value of 25 cents.

That is simply to make the language complete.

The only other change from the printed bill is on page 46, line 10.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You have a change on page 42, I think—

Vaseline and all like substances.

I suppose that was added.

Mr. DINGLEY. That was in the printed bill. I will only call attention to those which were not printed. On page 46, in the tenth line, at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who has investigated the matter, the word "seven" is stricken out and the word "five" is substituted. The intention of the committee was to make the appropriation substantially according to the expenditure of last year. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations informs me that it was $515,000, and the amount is now made $550,000. And I will say with reference to this surplus that there is a general appropriation of $300,000 that can be used by the President in case of any emergency arising from epidemic diseases, besides this, and some other appointments also. And there is added at the end a provision directing the Secretary of the Treasury to hereafter make in the regular annual estimate an estimate for the Marine-Hospital Service. Those are the only changes from the printed bill that is before members.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question to the passage of the bill.

Mr. SIMPSON. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine moves the previous question.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McRAE. I should like——

Mr. SIMPSON. I hope the gentleman from Maine, as these amendments have not been discussed——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to know at what time it would be in order to move to recommit the bill with instructions?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order after the bill is passed to be engrossed.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I give notice that at that time I will make such a motion.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. SIMPSON. To ask the gentleman from Maine, the chairman of the committee, a question in regard to the meaning of this bill, on page 22.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the notice I gave, I desire to move to recommit the bill to the committee with instructions to report it back striking out section 27 and inserting the income-tax provision that we voted on this evening, and which I send to the Clerk.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAILEY. My parliamentary inquiry is this: If the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee should be voted down, would it then be in order to move to recommit to the committee with a different instruction?

The SPEAKER. It would not. One moment. That would depend upon the fate of the motion of the gentleman from Maine, who asks for the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. Has the gentleman from Maine asked for the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN]?

Mr. DINGLEY. I have.

Mr. BAILEY. Then would it be in order for the gentleman from Tennessee to withdraw his motion to strike out and substitute, so as to make it a straight motion to report the income-tax provision back as an additional provision in the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. The previous question has been moved.

Mr. BAILEY. The previous question has been demanded, but has not been ordered. Would it be in order for the gentleman from Tennessee to withdraw his motion to strike out and insert, and make it a direct motion to add the income-tax provision as an amendment to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes it would be in order to withdraw the motion if the gentleman saw fit.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his motion.

Mr. MAGUIRE (to Mr. BAILEY). The Chair says it will be in order.

Mr. BAILEY. Do I understand the Chair to say that it would be in order?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order to withdraw the motion.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe the previous question is not insisted on and that the motion that I have made is amendable, and the gentleman from Missouri had obtained the floor for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is asked.

Mr. BAILEY. I asked the Chair to recognize me to make this motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee gave notice to the Chair that he was going to make a motion, and inquired when he could make it. The Chair responded——

Mr. McMILLIN. The Chair has stated the facts. I did give that notice, having offered the income-tax bill in lieu of the bond proposition contained in section 37. There will be no contest with me or any other gentleman as to the making of this motion. I believe mine is the proper motion and I should be allowed to make it. I am not for the issuance of this six hundred millions of bonds, either with or without an income tax. But I have no selfishness as to who makes the motion to recommit, and therefore withdraw it.

Mr. BAILEY. My understanding is that we can now make a motion to add the income tax as an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that motion can be made.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a motion to recommit this bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, with the instruction to report the income-tax bill as an amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. After that is read I ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers the motion to recommit with instructions, which the Clerk will report to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit H. R. 10100 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report it back with the following as an amendment at the end of the bill:

SEC. 27. That from and after the 1st day of January, 1899, and for each succeeding year thereafter, there shall be assessed, levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income received in the preceding calendar year by every citizen of the United States, whether residing at home or abroad, and every person residing therein, whether said gains, profits, or income be derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, or salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, a tax of 3 per cent on the amount so derived over and above $2,000, and a like tax shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income from all property owned and of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States. And the tax herein provided for shall be assessed, by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and collected, and paid upon the gains, profits, and income for the year ending the 31st day of December next preceding the time for levying, collecting, and paying said tax.

SEC. 28. That in estimating the gains, profits, and income of any person there shall be included all income derived from interest upon notes, bonds, and other securities, except such bonds of the United States the principal and interest of which are by the law of their issuance exempt from all Federal taxation, and from State, county, and municipal bonds; profits realized within the year from sales of real estate purchased within two years previous to the close of the year for which income is estimated; interest received or accrued upon all notes, bonds, mortgages, or other forms of indebtedness bearing interest, whether paid or not, if good and collectible, less the interest which has become due from said person or which has been paid by him during the year; the amount of all premium on bonds, notes, or coupons; the amount of sales of live stock, sugar, cotton, wool, butter, cheese, pork, beef, mutton, or other meats, hay, and grain, or other vegetable or other productions, being the growth or produce of the estate of such person, less the amount expended in the purchase or production of said stock or produce, and not including any part thereof consumed directly by the family; money and the value of all personal property acquired by gift or inheritance; all other gains, profits, and income derived from any source whatever except that portion of the salary, compensation, or pay received for services in the civil, military, naval, or other service of the United States, including Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, from which the tax has been deducted, and except that portion of any salary upon which the employer is required by law to withhold, and does withhold, the tax and pays the same to the officer authorized to receive it. In computing incomes the necessary expenses actually incurred in carrying on any business, occupation, or profession shall be deducted, and also all interest due or paid within the year by such person on existing indebtedness. And all national, State, county, school, and municipal taxes, not including those assessed against local benefits, paid within the year shall be deducted from the gains, profits, or income of the person who has actually paid the same, whether such person be owner, tenant, or mortgagor; also losses actually sustained during the year, incurred in trade or arising from fires, storms, or shipwreck, and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, and debts ascertained to be worthless, but excluding all estimated depreciation of values and losses within the year on sales of real estate purchased within two years previous to the year for which income is estimated: Provided, That no deduction shall be made for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments, made to increase the value of any property or estate: Provided further, That only one deduction of $2,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family, composed of one or both parents, and one or more minor children, or husband and wife; that guardians shall be allowed to make a deduction in favor of each and every ward, except that in case where two or more wards are comprised in one family and have joint property interests, the aggregate deduction in their favor shall not exceed $2,000: And provided further, That in cases where the salary or other compensation paid to any person in the employment or service of the United States shall not exceed the rate of $2,000 per annum, or shall be by fees, or uncertain or irregular in the amount or in the time during which the same shall have accrued or been earned, such salary or other compensation shall be included in estimating the annual gains, profits, or income of the person to whom the same shall have been paid, and shall include that portion of any income or salary upon which a tax has not been paid by the employer, where the employer is required by law to pay on the excess over $2,000: Provided, also, That in computing the income of any person, corporation, company, or association there shall not be included the amount received from any corporation, company, or association as dividends upon the stock of such corporation, company, or association if the tax of 3 per cent has been paid upon its net profits by said corporation, company, or association as required by this act.

SEC. 29. That it shall be the duty of all persons of lawful age having an income of more than $1,500 for the taxable year, computed on the basis herein prescribed, to make and render a list or return, on or before the day provided by law, in such form and manner as may be directed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the collector or a deputy collector of the district in which they reside, of the amount of their income, gains, and profits, as aforesaid; and all guardians and trustees, executors, administrators, agents, receivers, and all persons or corporations acting in any fiduciary capacity, shall make and render a list or return, as aforesaid, to the collector or a deputy collector of the district in which such person or corporation acting in a fiduciary capacity resides or does business, of the amount of income, gains, and profits of any minor or person for whom they act, but persons having less than $1,500 income are not required to make such report; and the collector or deputy collector shall require every list or return to be verified by the oath or affirmation of the party rendering it, and may increase the amount of any list or return if he has reason to believe that the same is understated; and in case any such person having a taxable income shall neglect or refuse to make and render such list and return, or shall render a willfully false or fraudulent list or return, it shall be the duty of the collector or deputy collector to make such list, according to the best information he can obtain, by the examination of such person, or any other evidence, and to add 50 per cent as a penalty to the amount of the tax due on such list in all cases of willful neglect or refusal to make and render a list or return; and in all cases of a willfully false or fraudulent list or return having been rendered to add 100 per cent as a penalty to the amount of tax ascertained to be due, the tax and the additions thereto as a penalty to be assessed and collected in the manner provided for in other cases of willful neglect or refusal to render a list or return, or of rendering a false or fraudulent return: Provided, That any person or corporation, in his, her, or its own behalf, or as such fiduciary, shall be permitted to declare, under oath or affirmation, the form and manner of which shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, that he, she, or his or her, or its ward or beneficiary, was not possessed of an income of $2,000, liable to be assessed according to the provisions of this act; or may declare that he, she, or it, or his, her, or its ward or beneficiary has been assessed and has paid an income tax elsewhere in the same year, under authority of the United States, upon all his, her, or its income, gains, or profits, and upon all the income, gains, or profits for which he, she, or it is liable as such fiduciary, as prescribed by law; and if the collector or deputy collector shall be satisfied of the truth of the declaration, such person or corporation shall thereupon be exempt from income tax in the said district for that year; or if the list or return of any person or corporation, company, or association shall have been increased by the collector or deputy collector, such person or corporation, company, or association may be permitted to prove the amount of income liable to be assessed; but such proof shall not be considered as conclusive of the facts, and no deductions claimed in such cases shall be made or allowed until approved by the collector or deputy collector. Any person or company, corporation, or association feeling aggrieved by the decision of the deputy collector, in such cases may appeal to the collector of the district, and his decision thereon, unless reversed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall be final. If dissatisfied with the decision of the collector such person or corporation, company, or association may submit the case, with all the papers, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for his decision, and may furnish the testimony of witnesses to prove any relevant facts, having served notice to that effect upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as herein prescribed.

Such notice shall state the time and place at which, and the officer before whom, the testimony will be taken; the name, age, residence, and business of the proposed witness, with the questions to be propounded to the witness, or a brief statement of the substance of the testimony he is expected to give: Provided, That the Government may at the same time and place take testimony upon like notice to rebut the testimony of the witnesses examined by the person taxed.

The notice shall be delivered or mailed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a sufficient number of days previous to the day fixed for taking the testimony to allow him, after its receipt, at least five days, exclusive of the period required for mail communication with the place at which the testimony is to be taken, in which to give, should he so desire, instructions as to the cross-examination of the proposed witness.

Whenever practicable, the affidavit or deposition shall be taken before a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, in which case reasonable notice shall be given to the collector or deputy collector of the time fixed for taking the deposition or affidavit:

Provided further, That no penalty shall be assessed upon any person or corporation, company, or association for such neglect or refusal or for making or rendering a willfully false or fraudulent return, except after reasonable notice of the time and place of hearing, to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue so as to give the person charged an opportunity to be heard.

SEC. 30. The taxes on incomes herein imposed shall be due and payable on or before the 1st day of July in each year; and to any sum or sums annually due and unpaid after the 1st day of July as aforesaid, and for ten days after notice and demand thereof by the collector, there shall be levied, in addition thereto, the sum of 5 per cent on the amount of taxes unpaid, and interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month upon said tax from the time the same becomes due, as a penalty, except from the estates of deceased, insane, or insolvent persons.

Any nonresident may receive the benefit of the exemptions hereinbefore provided for by filing with the deputy collector of any district a true list of all his property and sources of income in the United States and complying with the provisions of section 29 of this act as if a resident. In computing income he shall include all income from every source, but unless he be a citizen of the United States he shall only pay on that part of the income which is derived from any source in the United States. In case such nonresident fails to file such statement, the collector of each district shall collect the tax on the income derived from property situated in his district, subject to income tax, making no allowance for exemptions, and all property belonging to such nonresident shall be liable to distraint for tax: Provided, That nonresident corporations shall be subject to the same laws as to tax as resident corporations, and the collection of the tax shall be made in the same manner as provided for collections of taxes against nonresident persons.

SEC. 32. That there shall be assessed, levied, and collected, except as herein otherwise provided, a tax of 3 per cent annually on the net profits or income above actual operating and business expenses, including expenses for materials purchased for manufacture or bought for resale, losses, and interest on bonded and other indebtedness of all banks, banking institutions, trust companies, saving institutions, fire, marine, life, and other insurance companies, railroad, canal, turnpike, canal navigation, slack water, telephone, telegraph, express, electric light, gas, water, street railway companies, and all other corporations, companies, or associations doing business for profit in the United States, no matter how created and organized, but not including partnerships.

That said tax shall be paid on or before the 1st day of July in each year; and if the president or other chief officer of any corporation, company, or association, or in the case of any foreign corporation, company, or association, the resident manager or agent, shall neglect or refuse to file, with the collector of the internal-revenue district in which said corporation, company, or association shall be located or be engaged in business, a statement verified by his oath or affirmation, in such form as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount of net profits or income received by said corporation, company, or association during the whole calendar year last preceding the date of filing such statement as hereinafter required, the corporation, company, or association making default shall forfeit as a penalty the sum of $1,000 and 2 per cent on the amount of taxes due, for each month until the same is paid, the payment of said penalty to be enforced as provided in other cases of neglect and refusal to make return of taxes under the internal-revenue law.

The net profits or income of all corporations, companies, or associations shall include the amounts paid to shareholders, or carried to the account of any fund, or used for construction, enlargement of plant, or any other expenditure or investment paid from the net annual profits made or acquired by said corporations, companies, or associations.

That nothing herein contained shall apply to States, counties, or municipalities; nor to corporations, companies, or associations organized and conducted solely for charitable, religious, or educational purposes, including fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members of such societies, orders, or associations and dependents of such members; nor to the stocks, shares, funds, or securities held by any fiduciary or trustee for charitable, religious, or educational purposes; nor to building and loan associations or companies which make loans only to their shareholders; nor to such savings banks, savings institutions or societies as shall, first, have no stockholders or members except depositors and no capital except deposits; secondly, shall not receive deposits to an aggregate amount, in any one year, of more than $1,000 from the same depositor; thirdly, shall not allow an accumulation or total of deposits, by any one depositor, exceeding $10,000; fourthly, shall actually divide and distribute to its depositors, ratably to deposits, all the earnings over the necessary and proper expenses of such bank, institution, or society, except such as shall be applied to surplus; fifthly, shall not possess, in any form, a surplus fund exceeding 10 per cent of its aggregate deposits; nor to such savings banks, savings institutions, or societies composed of members who do not participate in the profits thereof and which pay interest or dividends only to their depositors; nor to that part of the business of any savings bank, institution, or other similar association having a capital stock, that is conducted on the mutual plan solely for the benefit of its depositors on such plan, and which shall keep its accounts of its business conducted on such mutual plan separate and apart from its other accounts.

Nor to any insurance company or association which conducts all its business solely upon the mutual plan, and only for the benefit of its policy holders or members, and having no capital stock and no stock or shareholders, and holding all its property in trust and in reserve for its policy holders or members; nor to that part of the business of any insurance company having a capital stock and stock and share-holders which is conducted on the mutual plan, separate from its stock plan of insurance, and solely for the benefit of the policy holders and members insured on said mutual plan, and holding all the property belonging to and derived from said mutual part of its business in trust and reserve for the benefit of its policy holders and members insured on said mutual plan.

That all State, county, municipal, and town taxes paid by corporations, companies, or associations shall be included in the operating and business expenses of such corporations, companies, or associations.

SEC. 33. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all salaries of officers, or payments for services to persons in the civil, military, naval, or other employment or service of the United States, including Senators and Representatives and Delegates in Congress, when exceeding the rate of $2,000 per annum, a tax of 3 per cent on the excess above the said $2,000; and it shall be the duty of all paymasters and all disbursing officers under the Government of the United States, or persons in the employ thereof, when making any payment to any officers or persons as aforesaid, whose compensation is determined by a fixed salary, or upon settling or adjusting the accounts of such officers or persons, to deduct and withhold the aforesaid tax of 3 per cent; and the pay roll, receipts, or account of officers or persons paying such tax as aforesaid shall be made to exhibit the fact of such payment. And it shall be the duty of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, when auditing the accounts of any paymaster or disbursing officer, or any officer withholding his salary from moneys received by him, or when settling or adjusting the accounts of any such officer, to require evidence that the taxes mentioned in this section have been deducted and paid over to the Treasurer of the United States, or other officer authorized to receive the same. Every corporation which pays to any employee a salary or compensation exceeding $2,000 per annum shall report the same to the collector or deputy collector of his district and said employee shall pay thereon, subject to the exemptions herein provided for, the tax of 3 per cent on the excess of his salary over $2,000: Provided, That salaries due to State, county, or municipal officers shall be exempt from the income tax herein levied.

SEC. 34. That sections 3167, 3172, 3173, and 3176 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended are hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3167. That it shall be unlawful for any collector, deputy collector, agent, clerk, or other officer or employee of the United States to divulge or to make known in any manner whatever not provided by law to any person the operations, style of work or apparatus of any manufacturer or producer visited by him in the discharge of his official duties, or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particular thereof, set forth or disclosed in any income return by any person or corporation, or to permit any income return or copy thereof or any book containing any abstract or particulars thereof, to be seen or examined by any person except as provided by law; and it shall be unlawful for any person to print or publish in any manner whatever not provided by law any income return or any part thereof or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, or expenditures appearing in any income return; and any offense against the foregoing provision shall be a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court; and if the offender be an officer or employee of the United States he shall be dismissed from office and be incapable thereafter of holding any office under the Government.

"SEC. 3172. That every collector shall, from time to time, cause his deputies to proceed through every part of his district and inquire after and concerning all persons therein who are liable to pay any internal-revenue tax, and all persons owning or having the care and management of any objects liable to pay any tax, and to make a list of such persons and enumerate said objects.

"SEC. 3173. That it shall be the duty of any person, partnership, firm, association, or corporation, made liable to any duty, special tax, or other tax imposed by law, when not otherwise provided for, in case of a special tax, on or before the 31st day of July in each year, in case of income tax on or before the first Monday of March in each year, and in other cases before the day on which the taxes accrue, to make a list or return, verified by oath or affirmation, to the collector or a deputy collector of the district where located, of the articles or objects, including the amount of annual income, charged with a duty or tax, the quantity of goods, wares, and merchandise made or sold, and charged with a tax, the several rates and aggregate amount, according to the forms and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for which such person, partnership, firm, association, or corporation is liable: Provided, That if any person liable to pay any duty or tax, or owning, possessing, or having the care or management of property, goods, wares, and merchandise, articles or objects liable to pay any duty, tax, or license, shall fail to make and exhibit a list or return required by law, but shall consent to disclose the particulars of any and all the property, goods, wares, and merchandise, articles, and objects liable to pay any duty or tax, or any business or occupation liable to pay any tax as aforesaid, then, and in that case, it shall be the duty of the collector or deputy collector to make such list or return, which, being distinctly read, consented to, and signed and verified by oath or affirmation by the person so owning, possessing, or having the care and management as aforesaid, may be received as the list of such person: Provided further, That in case no annual list or return has been rendered by such person to the collector or deputy collector, as required by law, and the person shall be absent from his or her residence or place of business at the time the collector or a deputy collector shall call for the annual list or return, it shall be the duty of such collector or deputy collector to leave at such place of residence or business, with some one of suitable age and discretion, if such be present, otherwise to deposit in the nearest post-office a note or memorandum addressed to such person, requiring him or her to render to such collector or deputy collector the list or return required by law, within ten days from the date of such note or memorandum, verified by oath or affirmation. And if any person on being notified or required as aforesaid shall refuse or neglect to render such list or return within the time required as aforesaid or whenever any person who is required to deliver a monthly or other return of objects subject to tax fails to do so at the time required, or delivers any return which, in the opinion of the collector, is false or fraudulent, or contains any undervaluation or understatement, it shall be lawful for the collector to summon such person, or any other person having possession, custody, or care of books of account containing entries relating to the business of such person, or any other person he may deem proper, to appear before him and produce such books, at a time and place named in the summons, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories, under oath, respecting any objects liable to tax or the returns thereof. The collector may summon any person residing or found within the State in which his district lies; and when the person intended to be summoned does not reside and can not be found within such State, he may enter any collection district where such person may be found, and there make the examination herein authorized. And to this end he may there exercise all the authority which he might lawfully exercise in the district for which he was commissioned.

"SEC. 3176. When any person, corporation, company, or association refuses or neglects to render any return or list required by law, or renders a false or fraudulent return or list, the collector or any deputy collector shall make, according to the best information which he can obtain, including that derived from the evidence elicited by the examination of the collector, and on his own view and information, such list or return, according to the form prescribed, of the income, property, and objects liable to tax owned or possessed or under the care or management of such person, or corporation, company, or association, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall assess all taxes not paid by stamps, including the amount, if any, due for special tax, income or other tax, and in case of any return of a false or fraudulent list or valuation intentionally he shall add 100 per cent to such tax; and in case of a refusal or neglect, except in cases of sickness or absence, to make a list or return, or to verify the same as aforesaid, he shall add 50 per cent to such tax. In case of neglect occasioned by sickness or absence as aforesaid the collector may allow such further time for making and delivering such list or return as he may deem necessary, not exceeding thirty days. The amount so added to the tax shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as the tax unless the neglect or falsity is discovered after the tax has been paid, in which case the amount so added shall be collected in the same manner as the tax; and the list or return so made and subscribed by such collector or deputy collector shall be held prima facie good and sufficient for all legal purposes."

SEC. 35. That every corporation, company, or association doing business for profit shall make and render to the collector of its collection district, on or before the first Monday of March in every year, beginning with the year 1899, a full return, verified by oath or affirmation, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, of all the following matters for the whole calendar year last preceding the date of such return:

First. The gross profits of such corporation, company, or association, from all kinds of business of every name and nature.

Second. The expenses of such corporation, company, or association, exclusive of interest, annuities, and dividends.

Third. The net profits of such corporation, company, or association, without allowance for interest, annuities, or dividends.

Fourth. The amount paid on account of interest, annuities, and dividends, stated separately.

Fifth. The amount paid in salaries of $2,000 or less to each person employed.

Sixth. The amount paid in salaries of more than $2,000 to each person employed and the name and address of each of such persons and the amount paid to each.

SEC. 36. That it shall be the duty of every corporation, company, or association doing business for profit to keep full, regular, and accurate books of account, upon which all its transactions shall be entered from day to day, in regular order, and whenever a collector or deputy collector of the district in which any corporation, company, or association is assessable shall believe that a true and correct return of the income of such corporation, company, or association has not been made, he shall make an affidavit of such belief and of the grounds on which it is founded, and file the same with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and if said Commissioner shall, on examination thereof, and after full hearing upon notice given to all parties, conclude there is good ground for such belief, he shall issue a request in writing to such corporation, company, or association to permit an inspection of the books of such corporation, company, or association to be made; and if such corporation, company, or association shall refuse to comply with such request, then the collector or deputy collector of the district shall make from such information as he can obtain an estimate of the amount of such income and then add 50 per cent thereto, which said assessment so made shall then be the lawful assessment of such income.

During the reading of the amendment,

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the amendment. It is the same amendment as that offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to omit the reading of the text of the instructions. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND. Now, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. If I can be indulged——

Mr. DINGLEY. Having the floor, I will listen——

Mr. BLAND. I offer the following amendment. [Cries of "No!"]

Mr. DINGLEY. I move the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman will yield to have that amendment read.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. Division.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 171, answered "present" 7, not voting 43; as follows:

So the motion to recommit was disagreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CONNOLLY with Mr. MEEKISON.

Mr. WARNER with Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. LORIMER with Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. TERRY.

Mr. MAHANY with Mr. BAIRD.

Mr. BARRETT with Mr. MARSHALL.

Mr. SHELDEN with Mr. TODD.

Mr. DAVENPORT with Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. PERKINS with Mr. TATE.

Mr. CODDING with Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi.

Mr. PRINCE with Mr. HINRICHSEN.

Mr. BROSIUS with Mr. ERMENTROUT.

Mr. MANN with Mr. JETT.

On this question:

Mr. ODELL with Mr. CRANFORD.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. QUIGG, is detained at home on account of illness. If present, he would vote "no" and vote for the bill.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SHELDEN, is absent. I am paired with him. I expected to arrange a substitute, but was unable. I therefore beg to withdraw my vote.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Speaker, I was present and heard my name called, but before I knew how to vote the next name was called and I did not have time to answer.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called Mr. KNOWLES's name, and he voted "aye."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, Judge TERRY had arranged to speak on this bill, but he is confined to his bed by sickness and is unable to be here to-day. Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts has kindly consented to pair with him. If present, Judge TERRY would vote "aye" and Mr. GILLETT would vote "no."

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Speaker, I want to withdraw the pair between Judge McCALL and myself. We both voted.

The SPEAKER. The pair will be withdrawn.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HURLEY, is absent. If he were here, he would vote "no."

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I find I am paired with Mr. MAHANY, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I desire to withdraw my vote and be marked "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 181, nays 131, answered "present" 1, not voting 42; as follows:

Colson,	Mann,	Snover,
Connolly,	Marshall,	Strait,

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. COCHRANE of New York with Mr. CATCHINGS, on this vote.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with Mr. MAHANY, of New York, and I wish to withdraw my vote of "no."

Mr. SETTLE. Mr. Speaker, I understand my colleague, Mr. BERRY——

Mr. TODD. Mr. Speaker, I made a general pair with my colleague, Mr. SHELDEN. I expected to be able to transfer it, but I was unable to do so, and consequently I did not vote. If he were present, I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent that 5,000 copies of the war-revenue bill as it has passed the House be printed for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that 5,000 copies of the bill as it passed the House be printed for the use of the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1495. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Anton Ernst—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2474. An act for the relief of Thomas F. Rowland—to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 2693. An act for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 3675. An act to examine, determine, and report the facts necessary to the establishment of free public highways into the Yosemite National Park, and appropriating moneys therefor—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3799. An act to correct the military record of John Shelton—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4422. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Gould—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. R. 141. Joint resolution regarding the the holding of a pan-American exposition in the year 1901 upon Cayuga Island, between the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls, in the State of New York, to illustrate the development of the Western Hemisphere during the nineteenth century—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

S. 2757. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert C. Rogers—to the Committee on Pensions.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8738. An act for the survey of the pass leading from the Gulf of Mexico into Horn Island Harbor, Mississippi, and a survey of said harbor;

H. R. 1263. An act for the relief of John Fox;

H. R. 5457. An act for the relief of Robert Kennish;

H. R. 409. An act to prevent the adulteration of candy in the District of Columbia;

H. Res. 24. Joint resolution relative to the medal of honor authorized by the acts of December 21, 1861, and July 16, 1862;

H. Res. 119. Joint resolution for the improvement of Humboldt Harbor, California; and

H. Res. 149. Joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to submit plans and estimates for the proposed improvement of Hillsboro Bay, Florida, from its confluence with Tampa Bay, through Hillsboro Bay and River, to the city of Tampa.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following change of reference was made:

The bill (S. 4080) providing for a National Exposition of American Products and Manufactures at the city of Philadelphia, for the encouragement of the export trade—reference changed from the Committee on Ways and Means to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the naval appropriation bill. It embraces a full agreement; and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask what is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. A conference report presented by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] upon the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If this report will provoke debate, I should like to ask whether there is any reason why it should not go over until to-morrow. It is now ten minutes past 6 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. My answer to the gentleman is that the United States and Spain are now engaged in war.

Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. RICHARDSON. The Senate has adjourned.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This bill does not require any action on the part of the Senate. The Senate did its duty in three minutes on this conference report, and I hope the House will do its duty quite as quickly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman is not excited.

Mr. SAYERS. This report will not be disposed of in three minutes. It embraces some things that ought to be considered.

Mr. CANNON. If I can get the attention of the gentleman from Maine, I want to suggest to him——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What is before the House, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine presents a conference report, which will be attended to as soon as we have order. [A pause, during which order was restored.] The Clerk will read the conference report.

Mr. CANNON. If by unanimous consent——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I object. I prefer, Mr. Speaker, that this report shall be considered in order.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 4, 11, 27, 28, 39, and 54.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 41, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 73, and 74, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And whenever, within the next twelve months, an exigency may exist which, in the judgment of the President, renders their services necessary, he is hereby authorized to appoint from civil life and commission such officers of the line and staff, not above the rank or relative rank of commander, and warrant officers, including warrant machinists, and such officers of the Marine Corps, not above the rank of captain, to be appointed from the non-commissioned officers of the corps and from civil life, as may be requisite: Provided, That such officers shall serve only during the continuance of the exigency under which their services are required in the existing war: And provided further, That such officers so appointed shall be assigned to duty with rank and pay of the grades established by existing law; and warrant machinists shall be paid at the rate of $1,200 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Navy to enlist, at any time after the passage of this act, as many additional seamen, landsmen, and boys as he may deem necessary to man the ships of the Navy, or in use by the Navy as a temporary force therefor during the existing war, and for pay of the same and of the temporary additional officers and warrant machinists hereinbefore authorized, $8,830,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and to enable the Secretary of the Navy to enlist, at any time after the passage of this act, the following additional force for the Marine Corps as a temporary force during the existing war, namely, not more than 60 gunnery sergeants with rank of first sergeants, not more than 80 corporals, and not more than 1,500 privates; and for pay of the same, including the temporary additional officers hereinbefore authorized, and for provisions, clothing, fuel, military stores, transportation, and recruiting, and for contingent expenses on account of said additional force, $567,900, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "; in all, torpedo station, $97,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to build one of said docks of granite or concrete faced with granite, and in such case the limit of the cost of said dock is increased $200,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "of domestic manufacture;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 5 and 6 of said amendment strike out the words "Sabine Pass, Tex., or in the waters adjacent thereto," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in the harbor of Sabine Pass, or the waters tributary thereto, Texas;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "That hereafter all first-class battle ships and monitors owned by the United States shall be named for the States, and shall not be named for any city, place, or person until the names of the States shall have been exhausted: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to interfere with the names of States already assigned to any such battle ship or monitor;" and the Senate agree to the same.

C. A. BOUTELLE,
S. G. HILBORN,
A. J. CUMMINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
M. S. QUAY,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Is there a statement accompanying——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman had given me a second, I should have relieved him.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will answer it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. There is no statement of the House conferees at the desk.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I desire to read the statement of the managers on the part of the House—a succinct statement of the changes made in the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to raise the question of consideration; and I desire to ask, Mr. Speaker, whether that should be raised before the statement is read or subsequently?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the statement should first be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I ask that it be read—the official statement of the House conferees.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am a very excellent reader——

Mr. SAYERS. We object to the gentleman reading any statement of his own.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If this statement is required to be read at the Clerk's desk, I will very gladly send it there.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the Clerk had better read it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It must be the official statement of the House conferees.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. To gratify my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I will forego the pleasure of reading it myself.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is this the statement of the managers?

The SPEAKER. That has been read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; the conference report has been read. But I ask whether the paper sent to the desk is the official statement of the managers on the part of the House which the rules require shall be submitted in these cases?

The SPEAKER. It is signed by the managers on the part of the House.

The statement was read, as follows:

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL—STATEMENT OF THE HOUSE CONFEREES.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, submit the following statement to accompany the conference report:

The bill as passed by the House carried appropriations aggregating $38,014,058.68; as originally passed by the Senate, $55,529,383.68, being an increase of $17,515,325.

The subjoined table contains all of the amendments (in the order as numbered in the bill) that affect the amount of appropriations:

No. 71: Provides for payment of royalty for face-hardening process upon armor plate.

The House recedes from its disagreement to Senate amendments and agrees to same with amendments as follows:

No. 2: The House agrees to the Senate amendment providing for the appointment from civil life of temporary officers of the line and staff and of warrant machinists with amendments modifying the conditions of appointment and including appointment of officers of the Marine Corps not above the rank of captain.

No. 3: The House agrees to Senate amendment providing for temporary addition to the enlisted force of the Navy during the existing war, and making appropriation for the pay thereof, and of the warrant machinists authorized; and also providing for increasing the enlisted force of the Marine Corps, and making appropriation for the same.

No. 42: The House amends Senate amendment by inserting requirement that the steel floating dry dock at Algiers, La., shall be of domestic manufacture.

No. 72: Provides rule for naming the battle ships and monitors of the Navy.

The remaining amendments are mere changes in verbiage or punctuation.

C. A. BOUTELLE.
S. G. HILBORN.
A. J. CUMMINGS.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I will briefly call attention to the report submitted by the conference committee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a matter of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to make the point of order on this conference report. I have the impression, from having imperfectly heard the reading of it, that it is subject to a point of order, to which I desire to call the attention of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. The conference committee has exceeded its jurisdiction. I can not point out the exact amendment or amendments to which I desire specifically to refer, but I gathered from the reading of the report that the increase made by the conference report is some five hundred and odd thousand dollars, which increase has reference to matters that were not properly in conference.

I have no doubt when it is placed in the RECORD and printed, and we can see the text, I may be able to point out specifically wherein the committee has exceeded its authority, if I am correct in my understanding of the reading of my report.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, what is the point of order?

A MEMBER. Sit down and you will hear it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Thank you. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, touching the point of order, that the conference committees of the House, as I understand the rule and practice, can not agree upon matters that were not submitted to the conference—that is, matters not in difference between the House and Senate. I have understood the rules to be that when they do so agree to consider such matters, they exceed their jurisdiction.

Now, I caught, as the report was read, a statement showing that there is an increase of over a half million dollars over and above the Senate amendments, and which increase was not a matter of difference between the House and Senate and was not authorized to be placed in the bill by the conference; or, in other words, that the conference committee of the House was not authorized to take under consideration and bring before the House in this manner the matter to which I referred.

I want to make this point of order, and if I may be indulged for a simple request, it is now——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will not yield for any request.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, I believe I have the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois, having obtained the floor by making a point of order, has no right to make any request of the House at this time and under the circumstances.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is one point of order already pending, and only one can be considered at a time.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I make the point that the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Maine calls me to order——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I make the point that the gentleman has no right to make a point of order and thus obtain the floor and use it for the purpose of making a request or motion.

The SPEAKER. All requests have to be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Then I object.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor on this point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I shall hold you, then, strictly to the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I want to suggest, touching this point of order, which I have to make "on the wing," so to speak, and without an examination of the report of the conference committee, which is not yet in print, that in the interest of a clear presentation of the case, and a proper consideration of the point of order, this thing should go over and the House adjourn.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not confining himself to the point of order he has raised, and I submit that point to the Speaker. I hope the Chair will hold the gentleman exactly to the point that he is making.

Mr. CANNON. I think I will get along with the Chair, if the gentleman will permit me. The Chair is quite competent to determine when a gentleman is out of order.

Now, I want to say to the House—and it is proper to say it—that I have every desire to facilitate the enactment of this bill into law, but I do not want——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask the Chair if that is in order under the presentation of a point of order, which the gentleman has made?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois should submit his point of order; but he has indicated his intention to move an adjournment. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, I believe my point of order is well taken, and so believing, I move that the House do now adjourn. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the House wants to adjourn, of course it can do so.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 134, noes not counted.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So, no further count being demanded, the motion of Mr. CANNON was agreed to; and accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting estimates of appropriation needed for organizing the Volunteer Army and placing the Regular Army on a war footing—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 30, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RAILROAD THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 8875 with Senate amendment, and I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, is not the conference report on the naval appropriation bill in order?

Mr. CATCHINGS. This is merely a verbal amendment to a railroad bill through the Indian Territory, and it will not take a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the Clerk is unable to find the papers.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The bill was referred to the Senate Committee on Commerce and they instructed a report to be made, which was filed, and that report the Clerk has.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the bill has been signed.

Mr. CATCHINGS. That is impossible.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman must look it up. The papers are not with the Clerk, and it can not now be acted upon.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I thought that the papers were in the hands of the Clerk.

MARY S. TOWNSEND.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplemental report from the Committee on the District of Columbia. The evidence was not in when the report was made, and it affects property rights in the District of Columbia. It is House bill 9035, for the relief of Mary S. Townsend.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the supplemental report will be filed.

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL QUARANTINE POWERS.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, on the part of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I ask permission to file the report on House bill 4663, a bill amending an act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine-Hospital Service; and I ask that the minority have one week in which to present their views.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman under the rule can file the report, and he asks unanimous consent that the minority may have one week in which to present their views. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WILLIS VS. HANDY.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I present the following report from Elections Committee No. 1 in the contested-election case of Jonathan S. Willis vs. L. Irving Handy:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Elections No. 1, to whom was referred the contested-election case of Jonathan S. Willis against L. Irving Handy, from the State of Delaware, respectfully report as follows:

The contestee by the official returns received 15,407 votes and the contestant 11,159. A notice of contest was served on the contestee, but the contestant took no further formal action. He appeared before your committee and declared his opinion that the contestee's seat could not be successfully attacked and that he had abandoned the contest.

Your committee thereupon recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Jonathan S. Willis was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the State of Delaware and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That L. Irving Handy was duly elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the State of Delaware and is entitled to his seat therein.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING COMPILATION OF ELECTION CASES.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in muslin in one volume 3,000 copies of the Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 67, Fifty-second Congress, second session, being the compilation of Senate election cases from 1789 to 1893, and the appendix thereto, prepared under the concurrent resolution of March 21, 1894, covering Senate election cases from 1893 to the close of the present session of Congress; 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate, and 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 1910. An act conferring on the supreme court of the District of Columbia jurisdiction to take proof of the execution of wills affecting real estate, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 4298. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward R. Young—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1482. An act granting a pension to John Stanage—to the Committee on Pensions.

ARKANSAS, TEXAS AND MEXICAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill 2691, to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to grant to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Railway Company the right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," with Senate amendments, and I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the Chair will submit to the House a House bill with Senate amendments.

STREET PARKING IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5880) to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia control of street parking in said District, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

PROTECTION OF FISH.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. 6161) for the protection of fish in the District of Columbia, for the maintenance of a permanent spawning ground in the Potomac River in said District, and for other purposes.

The bill having been returned from the Senate with amendments, the amendments were read.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move that this bill with the amendments be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned yesterday, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] had raised a point of order on this report. The Chair will hear the gentleman state the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted before I address myself to the point of order and can have the attention of the gentleman from Maine, I would be glad to suggest to him that it is possible that with such information as he could give touching the necessity of the matter in question—the Marine Corps—the merit of the proposition might and probably would become patent.

Now, I am quite content to reserve the point of order for a moment, until I can suggest to the gentleman that there is one amendment agreed to by the House conferees which, in my judgment (I may be mistaken), would not, on full consideration, meet the approval of the gentleman from Maine, his committee, or the House. In view of what I have said, I would be glad if, without urging the point of order (provided this course meets the approval of the gentleman and the House), the conference report, by unanimous consent, may be rejected. And then let another conference be asked, if that suits the purpose of the gentleman, with opportunity given to myself (stipulating for myself only) to move an instruction covering the views of the House touching the amendments referred to in reference to naval officers being permitted to go to court for royalties. I do not know what might be the temper of the House; but under the rules the course I suggest would provide an apt time for the consideration of that proposition. I would rather, so far as I am concerned, pursue that course than to insist upon the point of order touching the Marine Corps.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand distinctly the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. If I catch his purpose he desires to have some special action taken upon one of the clauses of this bill which is not in any way, as I understand, subject to the point of order which he suggested last evening. I can not quite see why it is necessary to reject the conference report in order to deal with that matter.

I want to say distinctly that there is nothing in this conference report which I have the slightest desire to have adopted contrary to the wishes of this body. The report has been brought here to be submitted to the House for its action; and the various provisions in the bill have reached the House at this stage simply because the conferees on behalf of the House felt that they were justified, and in view of all the circumstances peremptorily commanded, to press these matters upon the attention of the House at this time.

If there is any desire on the part of any considerable number in the House that this body shall take separate action upon any clause of this bill, there has never been any disposition on the part of the committee or the conferees to prevent it. We are the servants of the House; we are attending to the business of the House, presenting matters here for the consideration of the House; and the reasons for our urging prompt action ought to suggest themselves readily to the mind of every member. Measures embraced in this conference report lie at the very foundation of the possibility of our carrying on successfully the warlike operations in which we are now engaged. I am not responsible for this situation, Mr. Speaker—less so than most members of this House; but war having been declared and being now in actual progress, I am responsible to this House, and to my country to use every endeavor to supply as speedily as possible everything that may be needed to sustain our flag, to protect and strengthen the men who are bearing it in foreign waters, and to bring this armed conflict to a successful conclusion. [Applause.]

I want to give this House notice that in all probability I shall come here asking for more money for similar purposes, and whenever the duty shall be laid upon me of requesting whatever may be needed to support our sailors and soldiers at the front, whether it be fifty millions or hundreds of millions, I shall come here and perform it by asking this House to supply the necessary means without stint or delay to procure either men or ships or guns or ammunition or subsistence to sustain the men you have voted to put in the field and who are now confronting a foreign power in actual warfare, because without their volition the Congress ordered them to go there.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that we ought to obstruct or delay the consideration of a great measure like this, even if some item, some minor matter in the report, does not meet everybody's approval. A conference is a compromise, always. It must be. And I have thought and hoped—yes, believed—that the mere presentation of this conference report would carry with it a response from this House as instant, as generous, as patriotic and unstinting as that which prompted the other branch of this Congress to adopt it in a very few minutes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois will state distinctly what it is that can be done that will remove his desire for delay or obstruction, so as to enable the House to come to a vote and conclude the consideration of this measure, if it be in my power, consistently with what I believe to be my duty to the House and to the Committee on Naval Affairs, I will try to bring about that result.

Mr. CANNON. I will say again, Mr. Speaker, that I do not care at this time to discuss the merits of the proposition before the House.

It is, as the gentleman from Maine states, a great bill. It is an important bill. The discussion of the merits of the proposition, and especially that to which I refer, can be had later on. But my proposition is now that I withdraw the point of order I have already made upon the report, and that thereafter by unanimous consent the conference report be disagreed to; and then, before the previous question is moved, that an opportunity shall be given to move instructions touching the amendment to which I have referred—No. 22, I think it is—with such time for discussion as is proper for a careful and satisfactory presentation of the case. In other words, if the conference report is disagreed to, the House is in possession of the bill with the Senate amendments for such action as may seem proper.

So far as I am individually concerned, I do not desire to move any instructions or amendment to the amendments of the Senate, except with reference to this amendment No. 22.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Then, in order to meet the objection of the gentleman from Illinois, I would suggest that by unanimous consent—and unanimous consent, I assume, can do almost anything in the House—that by unanimous consent the House agree to adopt the rest of the report, and then take a separate vote after proper discussion of the amendment 22, to which the gentleman objects.

Mr. CANNON. The trouble is, however, that that can not be done with a conference report. The House can not vote down a conference report and then take up a provision of it, except——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine (interrupting). Except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. Except by rejecting the entire report, which brings the various items of it before the House. That is the trouble. I presume that under the practice of the House the report must be accepted or rejected entirely.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is a mere technicality.

I should like to ask the Speaker of the House, as a parliamentary inquiry, if it will not be competent for the House, by unanimous consent, to agree to take a vote on one of the amendments inserted in the conference report without reference to the adoption or rejection of the remainder of the report——

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the House might agree that in the event the House voted in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]—that in that case the conference report might be considered as rejected, and the matter be then before the House for instructions; and in case the vote was the other way, the motion would then be either to agree or to disagree and refer the matter for further instructions.

Mr. CANNON. I am only anxious, Mr. Speaker, that there shall be some proper consideration given to this particular amendment. But the suggestion of the Chair at once places me or anybody else who antagonizes any conference report in the position of antagonizing the entire report, because it involves the necessity of first rejecting the report before any headway can be made with regard to the modification or changes which ought to be made. That is the position in which I would be placed, and so with every other member who might antagonize any feature of the report.

Now, I have the right to antagonize the report already, without any special agreement.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. But the other difficulty, which is very much greater than that suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, is one which involves unfavorable action on the whole bulk of the report, when there is no disagreement on the part of the House to the conference report, or at least when there is no assurance at all that the House is unfavorably inclined to the report. On the contrary, my impression is very strong that the House desires to concur in the report, and I have every reason to believe that instead of a disagreement on the part of the House regarding the report, it is received favorably by the House.

It seems to me that the suggestion I have made to the gentleman from Illinois is an entirely proper one, and will meet the only objection that he can possibly raise.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Maine permit me to have read the Senate amendment No. 22, so that the House can readily understand the main point of objection to the report which the gentleman from Illinois refers.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will state the nature of the amendment, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit me.

Mr. SAYERS. I think we had better have it read.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If we have the agreement which has been suggested, the gentleman from Illinois can state the amendment, and the objections to it, and can move such instructions as he desires. If we can have the unanimous consent, the gentleman from Illinois can take the floor for such time as he sees proper to explain the amendment and the objections to it.

Mr. CANNON. I will state to the gentleman from Maine that when a conference report is presented, with reference to the adoption or rejection of the conference report, and a motion to ask a further conference with instructions as to a particular amendment, a very different proposition is presented from the ordinary consideration of conference reports. In other words, the provision before us is entirely different in the respective cases.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit the Chair to make a suggestion?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. That suggestion is that by unanimous consent the conference report be rejected, and then the question which he presents may be brought before the House; and in case it should be decided in the negative, then the motion to reject could be reconsidered.

Mr. CANNON. Well, after all, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will allow me, in times like these, it places each member of the House at a disadvantage if that kind of an agreement is made, because, with all due respect to every member, when the flag is raised and it is said that "here is a thing for the national defense," it may be fettered and burdened with two things for the national harm, and yet, under the patriotic cry, it may go through. Now, I want a real consideration of this amendment, because such an amendment is also upon the fortification bill, not yet disposed of, applying to the Army. This applies to the Navy.

Now, if this report should be rejected there could be nothing lost. A conference could be held again this afternoon or Monday morning and action had upon Monday. The Government is not suffering for money or authority.

Mr. DOCKERY. The bill could not go to the President before Monday anyway.

Mr. DAYTON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me just a single question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. DAYTON. If the suggestion of the Speaker is carried out, and this conference is by unanimous consent unanimously rejected, then you are given all the opportunity that you want to fairly and fully present your objections to this amendment 22 to the House, and if your objections should be considered so weighty that the House should follow them and reject this amendment, of course the bill would go back to conference; but in case there is a full and fair consideration of the House upon that subject and the House are against you, what objection could there be then to approving the conference report—to reconsidering its rejection?

Mr. CANNON. I want this House to act without being under duress.

Mr. DAYTON. Oh, that is not duress.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It may be pertinent to state that the other body has adjourned until Monday; and of course everybody recognizes that these provisions are emergency measures and that we ought not to be delayed a moment longer than is absolutely necessary in the interest of the Government. This provision, to which the gentleman from Illinois refers, is nothing more important than a mere providing of methods whereby naval officers who may invent or discover processes or mechanism which the Government may want to use may make claim for compensation therefor in equity proceedings before the Court of Claims. It is to provide for an equitable adjustment of cases of that kind by a competent tribunal.

I do not think we ought to come to a disagreement on this great conference report over so unimportant a matter as that. It is a matter that in case of any defect could be remedied by subsequent legislation without any difficulty, and I really can not think that the gentleman from Illinois, on reflection, will desire to imperil or delay the making of these provisions for the naval service, which are so essential now. They ought to become available and be put in force at once. They are absolutely essential. I do not think they ought to be delayed.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that, the Senate having adjourned, it would be impossible for the bill to go to the President until Monday, and the only difference, at the best or at the worst, would be a difference of three or four hours on Monday?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman has ever been in line of battle, he probably learned that two or three hours sometimes are very important.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, that may be; but I hardly see the analogy between a line of battle and the enrollment of a naval bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say to my friend that there generally has been an enrollment of bills and enrollment of men before we got into the line of battle.

Mr. DOCKERY. In spite of the gentleman's suggestion, I can not see that the propositions are on "all fours."

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman from Maine will allow me, I should like to call the attention of the House to Senate amendment No. 22.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Was not that the one I referred to?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes. The House, though, may not understand it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I should be very glad to have the gentleman do so, because the House will then see how unimportant a matter is holding the House from performing its duty to the country's defenders.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman will please keep cool. I have the floor.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment to which I ask the attention of the House is substantially, if not altogether, a copy of another amendment which is on the fortification bill now pending in conference between the two Houses. These two amendments, I am told, emanate from the same source, one for the benefit of the officers of the Army and the other for the benefit of the officers of the Navy. Now, I submit the suggestion that in time of profound peace no such effort would have been made to allow officers of the Army and Navy, educated, clothed, fed, and paid by the Government, and to be put upon the retired list also with pay when they reach a certain age, to use their opportunities to make inventions and, under the operation of this amendment, be enabled to go before the Court of Claims and obtain judgments against the Government whenever the Government should use such inventions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I should like to ask the gentleman what is the use of arguing this proposition unless we are to have an opportunity to pass upon it? It seems to me that the proposition of the gentleman from Maine is a very proper one, and one which ought to commend itself to this House. It is to give us a fair opportunity to pass upon the question whether we are or are not in favor of the proposition to which the gentleman from Texas objects. Now, why not let us have such an agreement? Let us take the sense of this House and expedite the matter. [Applause.]

Mr. SAYERS. Because, under the pressure of voting upon the report as an entirety, members of the House might reach the conclusion that the amendment in question is an unimportant matter, though millions of dollars may be involved.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Why, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will there not be a fair opportunity to discuss the question here now?

Mr. SAYERS. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Why not?

Mr. SAYERS. Simply because the gentleman from Maine has appealed to the House to vote for the report as a whole.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman from Texas has misunderstood me entirely.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. All the gentleman asks is to get an opportunity to take the sense of the House on this.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My proposition is this: I propose that by unanimous consent this amendment should be considered, and that such observations, within reasonable limits, as gentlemen desire to make upon it should be made, and that the House should vote upon it separately. If the House votes to strike it out, of course we must have a disagreement. Now, if there is anything more fair than that, I do not understand what it can be.

Mr. COX. That is right; that is fair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I may be beaten in this and many other contests, but I will not accept the shadow for the substance. Now, if the House can give its judgment upon this amendment, free from any other consideration regarding this bill, I am quite content. But it can not give its judgment free from any other matter unless the conference report is disagreed to, and there must be another conference. Then, as there has to be another conference, I should hope to get the opinion of the House upon the very matter at issue.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I should like to ask him whether he has objection to any other part of the conference report except the one he has stated?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I will say to my friend that there are——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask for information. I want to know.

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the question. There are many parts of the conference report, professing to care for the public defense, which, in my opinion, care for practically private interests; but I am not seeking to make any question about those; that is, I am not seeking to get any action upon them. I merely want to raise the question upon this amendment, with such proper protest as to others, not calling for action, as I have a right to make as a member of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Nobody has disputed the gentleman's right.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to inquire, if this unanimous consent should be given by the House to reject this conference report, and opportunity should be given to the gentleman from Illinois and gentlemen from other States who have objections to this amendment 22 to discuss it and vote upon it, and it should then be sustained by the House and their objections overruled, whether then it would be in order, without unanimous consent, to reconsider the motion by which the conference report was rejected, and to agree to it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would be very doubtful, because there might be action taken inconsistent with the right of reconsideration. The right to consider is applicable to such a question, but it might be interfered with by a proposition to instruct, or something of that sort; that question in the future the Chair would not like to decide in answering a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DAYTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, would it be in order by unanimous consent to set aside or regard this conference report as rejected, with the understanding that if for any cause the House shall overrule the objection, after full and complete debate and a vote, that then a motion to reconsider shall be in order?

The SPEAKER. There would be no objection to that, as a matter of unanimous consent.

Mr. DAYTON. Why can not we have that unanimous consent?

Mr. CANNON. Simply because we must meet the question of the adoption or rejection of the conference report, and patriotism in a conflict for things that are not patriotic in this bill in favor of things that are patriotic I am satisfied would secure its adoption.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman give us a fair opportunity to pass on the adoption of the report?

Mr. CANNON. We will pass on it in proper time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It seems to me that this is the proper time to pass on it. I hope that some gentlemen who were so anxious to precipitate the war will not be lacking in providing for carrying on the war.

Mr. CANNON. I am responsible for my action, and I have in good faith tried to get proper consideration of this marine item, that in my judgment is here without parliamentary authority, and when I had done that I made my proposition.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAYTON. Pardon me; I believe the Chair has determined that I have the floor, and as I am a member of the Naval Committee, I have a very earnest desire to reach a conclusion in this matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly; I do not desire to cut you off. I thought you had concluded.

Mr. DAYTON. I understand. I have an earnest desire that the House should reach some conclusion in the matter. Now, I submit to the gentleman from Illinois and the other gentlemen who favor the position that he takes that this amendment No. 22—that the proposition or suggestion that came from the Chair is absolutely fair; that is, by unanimous consent this conference report shall be disagreed to. Then there will be a full, free, and fair opportunity to the gentleman from Illinois and those who agree with him to discuss that question, and to state their objections, to move to instruct the conference committee to reject or modify that amendment, and that a vote of the House will be taken upon it.

The only thing, then, he consents to is that after a full and fair hearing and a vote of the House upon that proposition, if the House is then against him and opposed to the rejection or modification of the amendment in any way, then a motion shall be in order to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was rejected, and that the conference report will then be put to a vote for its concurrence. Now, it seems to me that that would save a day's time and would be fair to both sides. I have tried to arrange the matter, and while I am for war, in this matter I am for peace.

Mr. DOCKERY. You do not think it essential to the success of the Army or the Navy?

Mr. DAYTON. I do not; but I do think it necessary and essential that this bill shall be promptly and speedily passed. The Senate passed the conference report, and it has been agreed to, and if the House is in accord with the Senate on the question, then the provision will be immediately available.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me suggest that the difference is but three or four hours. This bill can not go to the President to-day because of the adjournment of the Senate. Even if the House shall concur in this amendment, it will be 12 o'clock on Monday before the enrolled bill can be signed by the Speaker, and then it will have to go to the Vice-President. If this conference report is rejected to-day, the only effect will be to delay the presentation of this bill to the President until perhaps 3 or 4 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. But it ought not to be rejected by this House. I want the House to have an opportunity to reject or agree to the report as it chooses. Can any man dispute that, with this House full manned to-day, ready to do business, it ought to be given the privilege of determining whether the report should be adopted or rejected?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I know it ought to be the duty of every gentleman in this House to try to expedite the consideration of this report, so as to determine whether it wants to agree to it or not.

Mr. CANNON. I will again renew my request, that can either be accepted or rejected, that by unanimous consent this conference report be rejected and an opportunity given to move an instruction when another conference is asked on amendment No. 22.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Although it is only repeating what I said before, I want to state this again. I want to put myself right before the House, if there is any doubt. There is only one question raised, and that is as to one clause in this bill. Now, if the House of Representatives objects to that clause, it ought to be stricken out, and if it is important enough to cause the rejection of this report and sending it back to a conference, the House ought to have the right to express its judgment upon that point. I have been perfectly willing that it should do it, and I renew my request that by unanimous consent the House shall have an opportunity to vote upon that clause; that a reasonable opportunity shall be given to gentlemen who want to speak upon it; that the House shall then vote upon it, and if that amendment is voted down or out, then, of course, that will send the report into conference again. If the House determines that it does not want to strike it out of the conference report, then the House ought to have the privilege of agreeing to the report and carrying forward the public business.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If the point of order were sustained, the sustaining of the point of order sends the bill to conference without further action upon it by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined so to think, though it probably has not been decided.

Mr. DAYTON. I did not understand.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, I will, on the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas and others, and what seems to be the general sense of the House, be content that by unanimous consent, as the gentleman from Maine suggests, the conference report be considered as disagreed to and that this bill shall be considered, that a fair time shall be given for general debate——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. How long?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know how much time the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Missouri desire.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Do you desire to discuss the whole bill?

Mr. CANNON. I want to discuss this amendment, and make a protest as to other amendments.

Mr. SAYERS. An hour on a side.

Mr. CANNON. An hour and a half on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the report of the committee of conference be rejected, with the right to move for reconsideration under the arrangement proposed of an hour's debate upon either side, suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that the report "be considered" as rejected.

Mr. PAYNE. That is the same thing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before that is put, I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if I understand by this agreement that he waives and intends the House shall waive any point of order against this report of the conferees in that they have raised the amount $600,000 over and above the amount allowed by the amendment of the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. So far as I am concerned, I have. But I can not waive it for anybody else.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it ought to be a part of the understanding.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to have that fact brought out, because it is setting a very bad precedent, it seems to me, for the House to agree to nonconcur in Senate amendments to our bill and then allow this increased amendment which we nonconcurred in, to add $600,000, and then come back and by unanimous consent agree. If we are going to do that, Mr. Speaker, we had better first accept the amendment and not have nonconcurrence. There is a Scriptural injunction that says, "Agree with thine adversary quickly," and we had better agree than lose $600,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It is obvious that it would be entirely useless to yield unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the point of order is waived. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that the able gentleman who is compiling the precedents of this House will not include this in the precedents to be printed.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It has been suggested that there was some misunderstanding in regard to the time, Mr. Speaker, and that the gentleman from Illinois wanted more time, an hour and a half on a side.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the change will be made.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, all the copies of the bill have been exhausted, and we would like to have the amendment read.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of amendment No. 22.

The Clerk read as follows:

That whenever, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, the public interests require the use in the naval service of any invention or discovery covered by letters patent issued to any officer of the Navy, whether retained in his ownership or assigned to others, said Secretary shall proceed to use said invention or discovery in the manner and to the extent required by such naval service, and such royalties and compensation as may be equitably due such officer, considering all the circumstances connected with the making of the invention or discovery, and especially all facilities in originating, working out, or perfecting the invention which the officer may have enjoyed by reason of his official position, may be recovered by suit brought by said officer in the Court of Claims. Said court shall make rules for the trial of such cases, conforming as far as may be with the rules established by the Supreme Court for the practice in courts of equity, and all cases shall be determined within one year from the filing of the petition therein unless, in the discretion of the court, upon sufficient cause shown, the time is extended, and in all such cases appeals may be allowed to either party to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby prohibited from making any contract or payment for the use of any patent taken out by any naval officer.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House that officers of the Navy should not be entitled to compensation from the United States for the use of any invention or discovery made by them while they are in the service of the United States, and that the law should be so amended as to prohibit such compensation, and to authorize the United States to use such inventions and discoveries without any compensation to such officers; and that the conference on the part of the House are hereby instructed not to agree to the Senate amendment No. 22 to the naval bill (H. R. 9678), and, if possible, to procure an agreement striking out such amendment and inserting a provision in harmony with this instruction.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad if I can have the attention of members while I speak briefly to the amendment. I repeat the assertion made a few moments ago, that in my judgment if we were not in a state of war this amendment would not have made its appearance on this bill. The House should bear in mind that a similar amendment has been put by the Senate on the fortification bill so as to take care of the army officers. The one under consideration takes care of the naval officers. These amendments have presented themselves to the House while we are in the midst of war, notwithstanding some of the facts upon which they are predicated have been in existence for years.

So far as I can remember, no attempt has ever before been made to secure such legislation as this. Certain officers of the Army and Navy, educated, clothed, fed, and supported by the Government, have availed themselves of the peculiar and especial advantages which they enjoy to make inventions, and they now ask Congress to permit them to go into court and obtain judgments against the Government for such inventions as may be used by the Government.

Mr. KING. And which they will procure to be used by virtue of their position.

Mr. SAYERS. Probably so; some of them are employed in the offices of the War Department and of the Navy Department also. A more unpatriotic and selfish effort has not made its appearance at this session of Congress than this harmless-looking amendment which has been agreed to by the conferees of the House. It is one of the results of the war.

I have no doubt that we will have many specimens of such legislation before this Congress shall adjourn, and under the plea of patriotism appeals will be made that, having sent our soldiers and sailors to the war, we should not hesitate to vote for anything and everything that appears in an army or naval appropriation bill.

Now, I am willing to bear whatever responsibility may attach for my opposition to this measure. I believe that the House ought to send the bill back to conference and put upon it the impress of its indignation against such an attempt to apply the public revenues to payment for services that should have been gladly and freely rendered the Government.

Mr. BRUCKER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. BRUCKER. Suppose when this appropriation bill was first before the House and section 22 as it now appears had been offered by way of amendment——

Mr. SAYERS. I do not believe there are five gentlemen in the House that would have voted for it.

Mr. BRUCKER (continuing). Would the amendment have been germane? Would it not have been new legislation?

Mr. SAYERS. Unquestionably new legislation. Now, I appeal to the House, to all without regard to party, to examine the question carefully and to vote it down. Should the report be now adopted, it could not possibly reach the President before Monday afternoon. A rejection of the amendment need not delay the passage of the bill a single day. Adopt the amendment, and you will be confronted in a few days with a similar amendment on the fortification bill. If you should pass this, there can be no just reason why you should not pass the other. Both are exactly alike, and if one should prevail the other should also.

No one can estimate what cost to the Government may be involved in the two amendments, to say nothing of the unfair and undue advantages, because of the position they occupy, to such officers of the Army and Navy as may become inventors themselves or allow themselves to appear as such.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. MORRIS. Before the gentleman sits down, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. MORRIS. Do I understand this amendment would cover a case of this sort: Suppose an officer rigged up some little contrivance to assist in loading a gun with greater facility, or something of that sort, and the Government went on and used it; after the war would he have a right to claim a royalty?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly; as the gentleman can see by reading the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that anyone who reads the paragraph now under discussion is bound to come to the conclusion that it is unsafe legislation, especially at this time. The conditions are, Mr. Speaker, that certain devices already invented, or to be invented, by naval officers and army officers while experimenting at the expense of the Government for such purpose can be used by the Government Departments without any compensation. The men who may invent these devices are in the Army or Navy, and it is upon their recommendation—their urgent demand, it may be—that these particular inventions will be adopted by the Government. Consequently, when we offer to pay these men for inventions for which, under the law, as I understand it, they are not entitled to, when we say that they can present their bills to the United States for their inventions, it affords an inducement for them to urge upon the War Department or the Navy Department that their particular device be adopted, so that the officer who invented it may get possibly a hundred thousand dollars for it in addition to the money the Government is now paying him in the shape of salary.

What right is there on the part of an officer of this Government who is educated, clothed, fed, and paid by the Government, who receives as large a sum as salary as he could earn in other avocations of life, who is allowed to retire after a certain age on three-fourths pay—what reason is there that if the Government wants to adopt the fruit of his labor which it has paid him for while he was experimenting at the expense of the Government it should not be permitted to do so?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Suppose that in the employ of the United States Navy to-day there were a man with the inventive genius of Ericsson, receiving $1,500 a year. Suppose that man, while risking his life in the service of his country, should invent something of equal importance with the twin screw or the monitor. Would the gentleman say that if the Government uses this invention the man ought not to receive anything more than his salary of $1,500? Is that salary intended to pay for the use of his genius, or is it merely intended to pay for his manual labor, his ordinary service?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not yield for a speech, because my time is limited; but I want to say this in answer to the gentleman: There may be extraordinary cases where a man in the service of the Government ought to receive compensation in addition to his salary; but when that is to be done, the proposition ought to come here in the shape of a private bill, so that each particular case of that kind may be investigated. We ought not to establish a system by which the Government commits itself in advance to the payment of hundreds of thousands of dollars upon claims of this kind without their ever being submitted to the House.

Mr. CANNON. Allow me a remark right here upon a question of fact. Such a man as my friend from Wisconsin refers to, working for the Government at $1,500 a year, or any other sum, is not cared for in this amendment. The persons provided for are officers of the Government, educated by the Government, who are paid by the Government from their cradle, almost, to the grave, and whose time belongs to the Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, as the gentleman from Illinois well observes, the word "officer" is used here; and if the person making the invention is a private in the Army, he does not get anything under this provision.

Even in such a case as the gentleman from Wisconsin cites, a person of the great inventive genius supposed need not remain in the service of the Government unless he wants to. The inventions protected by this provision are not only such as are likely to be made during this particular war, but inventions already made. Therefore in this provision you are imposing upon the Government of the United States a liability the amount of which you can not tell, and which may run up into millions and millions of dollars. It seems to me that a measure of this kind should not be undertaken upon an appropriation bill when we have no time to couple it with proper limitations, even if the general purposes were commendable.

I understand that according to a decision of the Attorney-General there is no liability of the Government for the use of inventions of an officer of the Government made while experimenting under the direction of his commander; in other words, so long as a man chooses to remain in the service of the Government his time belongs to the Government. I repeat, that it would be unwise, especially at this time, upon an appropriation bill, to enact legislation which under ordinary circumstances, had it been proposed in this House, would be liable to a point of order and to be stricken out without even a vote upon it.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman permit me to state that Attorney-General Cushing passed upon this exact question and held that an officer of the Government had no right to be paid for an invention made by him while serving as such?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee for the suggestion.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. And the Supreme Court of the United States has also held that there is no such liability.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am also informed by the gentleman from Washington that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that there is no liability on the part of the Government of the United States to an employee for an invention which he makes while so employed and which the United States Government adopts.

Besides, to adopt a general clause giving to these officers the right to compensation when they, as officers of the Army or Navy, are the very men who will have the power to make demands for the use of these inventions, really puts it within their discretion to have their inventions adopted.

How are you going to make compensation? How are you going to determine that the gun or other device which has been invented by an officer of the Government has not been worth a million dollars to the United States? There is no limit whatever in this section as to amount which shall be paid. There is no provision that these officers claiming compensations for their inventions shall abide by the decision of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy. It prohibits those Secretaries from even contracting in advance for the invention, but leaves it in the nature of unliquidated damages, which are always great when presented against a government. It is provided that they may bring a claim in the courts aggregating, perhaps, millions and millions of dollars for the use of something for which the Government at present is not liable. I submit that the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, suppose an officer of the Army finds a precious stone worth millions; can the Government rightfully take it without compensation? No; every gentleman will say, "No." But who can estimate the value of the inventive genius of an Ericsson; or of a Howe, the inventor of the sewing machine; or of a Bigelow, the inventor of the Bigelow carpet loom; or of a Blanchard, who invented machines for turning irregular shapes; or a Crompton, the inventor of the Crompton loom; or a Knowles, the inventor of the Knowles loom, all of whom I knew personally? For what these men contributed to the world they have never received more than one farthing of compensation as compared with the value of their inventions to the masses of the people, the beneficiaries of their genius being the working people, who have profited by the increased comforts and conveniences thus afforded them.

When, Mr. Speaker, a man is educated by the United States, does that mean that the United States shall take also his genius and appropriate the fruits of it to itself? Does that intellect, that genius, belong exclusively to the Government? He is educated for a certain specific purpose. When he accomplishes that purpose, he has fulfilled his whole obligation. Because a man in whom God has implanted something greater in itself and of more commercial value to him and to his fellow-men than any jewel or than is found in his associates, and because his professional services belong to the Government, because he was educated by the Government and he is paid by the Government for his services in a certain line, does that entitle us to take from him the fruits of his genius not owned by the Government and exercised outside of his ordinary duties, and which may be of the same value to him in any walk of life?

In the Department where he is engaged he gives his professional personal services, according to his agreement under the law, and yet you rob him of things that he never gave or never proposed to and did not give to the Government, and take from him his right to profit by them. You claim you have the right to the entire man. Talk of the Government having a right to what is implanted in a man's mind, not included in his contract with the Government, and of which they have no cognizance when he entered the service of the Government for a specific duty only!

Of course you have the right to his services for the performance of his whole specific duty, but beyond that what he does is simply gratuitous.

Now, I know something of inventions myself. I had, in the course of my life, to take out a few patents myself. And yet, Mr. Speaker, I had to abandon the work absolutely, because I found that it would destroy my life. I could not sleep; my waking and sleeping hours were taken up with the thoughts of the new machinery and the mode of constructing certain devices, and I was compelled to abandon it; and I believe that continued application to such subjects would have been the absolute destruction of my life.

I see gentlemen around me who smile at the suggestion. Lawyers may laugh and think it a small thing; and yet I tell you, gentlemen, you do not know what inventions cost in labor, in brain work, in mental worry, and physical exhaustion. I want to say to you that no man invents anything of consequence or of great material use to mankind in the way of machinery, especially complicated machinery, who does not give his very life, or risk his life, in the work.

My personal friend, George Crompton, when I undertook to see him in his home, on business or social matters, I always found closely engaged in his library or elsewhere absolutely bent on the subject of his inventions, studying, designing, modeling. They held him at labor day and night, like a bonded slave, and I said to him: "Crompton, you might just as well commit suicide as to work in this way." And, Mr. Speaker, it was practically a case of suicide, because he died in harness before he had lived two-thirds of the allotted mature life. And so it is with inventors generally. You sneer at them and at their work. You may talk of them as being robbers, as being plunderers, as defrauding the Government of its just rights and the public. But it is these men who have sent civilization forward in its rapid progress for generations; and what would the world be now but for the lives of labor given in this direction by the men of genius who have promoted the mechanical arts at the expense of health, life, strength, and everything else?

Few of them have received adequate compensation. Many of them who have given great inventions to the world have early died and absolutely poor. And it comes with poor grace from gentlemen in the Government of the United States to say that these men shall not receive compensation for their work. You want to deny all compensation to them, although the Government takes all their time and claims that they are men who use the time of the Government and the material of the Government to advance their own selfish interests.

But there is another feature of this case that is worthy of consideration. It must be remembered that many hundreds of the inventions made, which may be of immense value and importance to the Government, are not patentable at all, and therefore can not be compensated for. I want to say to you now that of the officers of the Army or Navy who make inventions I venture to assert that not one of their inventions in one thousand is patentable or can be patented. And yet the Government has the use of all of them. Of the great inventions made, it is safe to assume that few will be patented or are susceptible of being patented. And when they are patented the man who does the work does not get one cent out of it, where the community and the world get thousands upon thousands of dollars. While the Government gets the benefit of all of the inventions made by intelligent, able, and accomplished men in this manner, the inventors themselves, especially if the invention is not patentable, as will be the case generally, will receive nothing whatever.

It has been proposed, therefore, in this connection, by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to pass an amendment in essence as follows—and this is really the substance of their whole argument: "That officers of the Navy are not entitled to any compensation from the United States for any inventions they may make concerning the Navy, and that all such inventions shall be taken possession of and confiscated to the United States."

That is practically what you propose to do. You might just as well say in open words that you are going to offer that amendment and adopt it. That is your actual proposition, is it? I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON]. I judge that is your proposition from the fact that the Government is not expected to purchase any inventions of its officers or to compensate them for anything that they can do or may do for the benefit of the Government. If that is not exactly the form of the proposition you propose to enact on this bill, it goes along the line of it practically, and that would be the result of it.

Now, I wish to say to the House that the very best possible investment of public money is the assurance to every man in the Navy who invents and patents anything that will be of possible benefit to the Government of the United States (and not one invention out of a hundred can be compensated, for, as I have already said, few can be patented) that the Government will give him a proper compensation for the use of it if it is available for public purposes. The fact that these men have been educated to a certain extent and are supported and paid by the United States Government is only an incident, and can not give the Government, and should not be expected to give the Government, more than it is entitled to of their services. I repeat, if outside of their ordinary and regular duty they succeed in devising some valuable invention, which is patented, they are entitled to receive compensation for the same. Would it be pretended that the Government could take possession of the patent taken out by an officer of the Army or Navy which had no reference to Government affairs, and make a profit out of it? Then why one concerning the Navy?

Mr. BOTKIN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. BOTKIN. Is not this inventive genius of which you speak as valuable in a private as in an officer?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Certainly it is.

Mr. BOTKIN. If so, why does the bill discriminate against the private?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That is an argument against the bill.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. They ought to be included. Now, let me say that this is as unreasonable and as unfair and as cruel as it would be to apply it to men in private establishments—a man who is in my employ who makes an invention, who makes it while I am paying his wages, has his head on it all the time, not only while he is working for me, but constantly—day and night besides. Now, I have just as good a right to the invention of a man in my employment as the Government of the United States has.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. The law is that if a man in private life is working for the gentleman, compensated by the gentleman, uses the gentleman's tools and the gentleman's shop, and makes an invention, that the gentleman is entitled to that invention without royalty. That is the law.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I beg your pardon. The employer is not entitled to anything of the kind unless the man is employed by him on that particular invention.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you not recognize the fact, however——

Mr. POWERS. Unless it is a secret that he gets possession of by reason of his particular employment.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in his law. I have tried some patent suits myself and paid for some patent law. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you not recognize the fact that there is a difference——

Mr. CANNON. My friend was insisting that he is not a lawyer, and is claiming credit therefor.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Oh, no; a patent lawyer is not much of a lawyer, anyhow. [Laughter.] You know I have a commission as a ship's lawyer, and that is worth something.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you not recognize the difference, though, that the Government has educated this man in this particular line, and you have not educated the man who is in your employ. These army and navy officers have the leisure right in the time of their service to make these inventions, while the Government is paying them, and your employees have not the leisure during the number of hours that they work for you.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Yes; "in this particular line" of his profession. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have educated the men in my employ just as much as the Government has. I have been taxed for it, and we have free education. I have not taken it out of my special funds to educate that particular man, but it has been taken out of me and all other men in taxation, if I have any property.

Mr. VINCENT. Is not everybody taxed?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Why, certainly. Everybody is taxed, and everybody is taxed to educate these naval men just the same.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The fact that they are educated in a school that is located at West Point or at Annapolis does not make any difference about their being educated at the public charge. Other men are educated at the public charge. I want to say that the men in this House have never paid one dollar for their education, where the public and benevolence in school and college funds and taxation have not paid a hundred.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. You do not pay them, though, while you are educating them.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. You do not pay them in the Army and Navy while you are educating them. Most of their education they had before they entered West Post or Annapolis.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. You pay them at Annapolis and West Point.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I know; and their compensation is less than it is in private life for the same quality of service. I want to say to the gentleman that this idea that the payment in Government service is more than it is in private life is all wrong; every word of it. You may take the salaries in public service from end to end, and they are not two-thirds what for like service is paid in private life.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. They are mighty anxious to get into it, though.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I know they are; but I can not understand it. It can not be the salary.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Are you not in that hospital yourself? [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I am not going into the reasons why I am here. [Laughter.] I want to say that the desire to get into the public service is something inexplicable; but the Government of the United States gets its services, from end to end, for less than two-thirds what it costs private persons to get the same class of service, and every man in business knows it.

Mr. RIDGELY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. I have great respect for the gentleman's judgment.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I am glad of that.

Mr. RIDGELY. For I know he is a good business man, and I want to suggest this question: In view of the fact that the gentleman says that when a man directs his brains to the work of invention it disqualifies him for other work, does not the gentleman think that in justice it would be better to allow that man who feels that he can invent something to retire from the public service and take his chances as an inventor, and not disqualify himself for his daily duty?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Now, do not make a speech. You have got far enough. [Laughter.] Ah, I have not said he "disqualifies himself for other work." Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that not one man in one hundred who is an inventor is such an inventor that he ever perfects his invention so that it is worth a cent to him. They generally starve and starve their families, and I want to say that you may take the aggregate of all inventors, the time that has been spent in invention in this country, or in any other country, and aggregate the compensation that inventors, as such, have obtained for their inventions, all the great fortunes that have been made by inventors out of inventions, and it will not pay them one-third the wages that their fellows in the shop or factory or counting room have received during the same time, because it is not very often, comparatively, that they are successful.

Mr. GREENE. Do army officers starve their families?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. BROMWELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am free to admit that I have had a change of heart and opinion in this matter since the discussion began. I looked upon the insertion of the provision in this bill which is under discussion as having been unwise. The more I think of it the more it seems to me to be a perfectly fair and proper amendment. Now, one of the arguments made against allowing the officers of the Army and Navy to be paid for the value of their inventions and discoveries for the benefit of the public service is that those officers are educated at the expense of the National Government, and therefore their time and their brains and their abilities are completely at the control of the Government, and that those discoveries and inventions should be taken from them without compensation. It seems to me that that is a very poor argument.

Why would it not apply equally well to your teachers in public schools, to men and women who receive their education, most of it, probably 90 per cent, at the public expense; and yet who would presume to claim for a moment that if a teacher who by reason of his connection with the schools in which he has been taught and in which he afterwards teaches should become the author of a text book or the inventor of some appliance to develop education in some form, the State or the Federal Government is entitled to his writings, his discovery, or his invention.

It does seem to me that this is only a fair and a just provision to those officers who, in addition to their ordinary everyday duty which they are required by the discipline of their service to perform, devote their time and minds and brains to the development of an improved process for the benefit of the service that they should receive ample compensation for the discoveries and inventions which they make and which the Government gets the benefit of. It may be that a single invention, a single discovery, would be worth more to this country than the cost of the education of all the officers that have ever gone through West Point or Annapolis. It tends to stimulate them to something more than being mere drones, mere machines in the discharge of their daily duty.

As I understand this provision of the bill, it permits an officer who is daily discharging in full his duties as such in the Army or Navy, and in addition to it is employing his idle time, or what would be idle time to others, in making an invention or discovery, to receive the same reward for his genius and application that is given to one who is not in the military or naval service of the United States.

I was inclined to think that it might open the door to fraud or lead to an immense number of claims which would involve the Government in the expenditure of millions of dollars; but when we remember that every one of these claims will have to come before Congress, every one will have to be passed upon by the Court of Claims, and passed by us, who will be presumed to know the value of these inventions or discoveries, we ought to give them proper compensation. It does seem to me, in all fairness and justice, that this provision of the bill ought to be permitted to remain there.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Do I understand the gentleman to state that the present law prevents an officer of the Army or Navy receiving compensation for the use of his invention?

Mr. BROMWELL. That is the statement.

Mr. SULLIVAN. That is, that he can not receive compensation just as anybody else does for his invention if the Government uses it.

Mr. BROMWELL. Precisely. This puts him in the position where he can file a claim, like anybody else coming before Congress, if the Government shall have adopted and used an invention of which he is the inventor. It shall go before the Court of Claims, and the provision requires the court to determine how much he is entitled to.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I always like to agree with my colleague [Mr. WALKER], but I find myself unable to do so in this instance, and I am surprised to hear him advocate this amendment, because I had supposed that if there was one thing above another in which he believed it was in the proposition that the function of an appropriation bill was to appropriate money and not to enact general laws. The amendment now before the House signally illustrates one of the evils of a time of war.

A great emergency measure, carrying $55,000,000, not one cent of which is seriously in dispute or in dispute at all, is weighted with a rider in the shape of a permanent alteration of existing law, and we are expected to pass upon it with no opportunity for proper consideration. This amendment ought to be defeated for that one reason, if for no other. It ought to be defeated so that the committees of this House having in charge appropriations, on one of which I have the honor to serve, may be notified by the House that in these times of emergency, when we are called upon to appropriate money in large sums, we must not be called upon at the same time to consider important changes in the law of the nation. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of voting for the instruction proposed by the gentleman from Illinois. It will not delay the use of the money appropriated in this bill, in my opinion, the fraction of one minute.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. MOODY. I believe it; I do not say I know it. Everyone knows that Congress has agreed, in effect, upon the $55,000,000. The bill can not go to the President until Monday in any event, and it will go to the President on Monday in any event. It will be ready for use under the law on Monday, and it can not be ready for use under the law before Monday; and the patriotic duty of every man here, in the beginning of this war legislation, is to stand firm and say, although we are ready to appropriate quickly every dollar that is needed, we will not be forced off our feet by the schemes of any man to change the organic law of the nation in any way detrimental to the public service. [Applause.]

Now, it has been said that the naval officers will be encouraged to devise inventions by this bill. I resent that as an imputation upon their patriotism. [Applause.] I believe that every naval officer to-day, in his heart, feels that he owes to the country which has educated him not only his valor, not only the risk of his life, but the best product of his brain. And I believe that we shall have it, with or without this provision. What is the proposition? I say this amendment ought to be rejected, in the first place, as a warning to every committee in this House that this is not the time to bring in legislation of this kind: that necessary appropriations shall not be hindered and delayed by coupling with them measures of questionable legislation.

I believe, with the brief consideration that I have been able to give the amendment, that it ought to be rejected on its merits. What is the proposition? These gentlemen in the Army and Navy are taken almost from the cradle and carried to their graves, supported by the nation. They are taken as mere boys, they are given the best education which can be afforded; they are not only educated and supported, but they are paid while they are educated and supported and as long as they remain in the service of the United States; and when they retire, they retire with a continued compensation. When in the performance of their duty as officers of the nation they have made an invention of any kind, it should be at least left to the generosity of the Government to give or withhold further recompense.

Mr. Speaker, the naval officer and the army officer who makes a great invention can look for a greater compensation than can be awarded to him by the Court of Claims. What judgment can the Court of Claims award a naval officer which will compare with the renown of Ericsson? I want, Mr. Speaker, to call attention to some of the details of this measure. It is provided that when the inventions are used, the officer may go to the Court of Claims and obtain what? "Such royalties and compensation as may be equitably due to such officer." When we come to apply these words to the subject-matter, we see how ill fitted a provision of this kind is to the naval and military service of the nation. By what measure can the royalty and compensation referred to in this amendment be reckoned? Take for an illustration a great invention, the disappearing gun carriage, invented by an officer in the Regular Army, I think—if I am wrong the gentleman from Pennsylvania will correct me——

Mr. ADAMS. Captain Crozier.

Mr. MOODY. Yes; one of the most valuable inventions in land warfare made in this generation. Suppose it is open to that gentleman—I do not mean for a moment to insinuate that he or any of his friends had anything to do with this amendment; I only take this as a shining example and an illustration—suppose after an attack upon one of our great seacoast cities, defeated by the aid of one of his inventions, he goes into the Court of Claims and claims royalties and compensation for the use of the disappearing gun carriage? By what rule of law can it be measured? What judge, what court, what jurist can compute the compensation equitably due under those circumstances?

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, the only compensation which the gallant officers of our Army and Navy can get under circumstances like these is the enduring gratitude of a nation, and with that they may well be content. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LOUD in the chair). One hour and seventeen minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I think there is some mistake about that. I doubt if I have all of that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hour and seven minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes, or such time as the gentleman may want, to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire time only to announce my opposition to the pending amendment which comes from the Senate. If I am correctly informed, this provision in the form of a separate bill has heretofore been considered by the House Committee on Naval Affairs and disapproved by that committee. I am told that such is the fact, and if I have been misinformed I would be glad if some gentleman connected with the committee would so declare. If that information is correct, and I think it is, the House Committee on Naval Affairs itself has heretofore considered this identical proposition, or substantially this proposition, and after a full and fair hearing rejected it. That being the case, I think I am warranted in the inference that quite a number of members of the Committee on Naval Affairs are not themselves in favor of this proposition which now comes from the Senate.

But whether that be true or not, I am opposed to this proposition; and it is hardly necessary for me to set out my reasons in detail to those who heard the splendid argument against this provision made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY]. I am opposed to the proposition for one reason which has not yet been mentioned, a reason suggested to me by a distinguished gentleman on this floor——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Can the gentleman give me a citation to that alleged action of the Committee on Naval Affairs to which he has referred?

Mr. DOCKERY. I said I had been informed that the House Committee on Naval Affairs had heretofore considered——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. At what time?

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). A proposition in substantially these terms——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Has the gentleman any recollection approximately as to the time?

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman who advised me in regard to this matter did not state the time. I suppose it was in this Congress—perhaps the last.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not think a citation of that kind ought to be made unless it is given in a way that will enable some one to verify it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I invited some one to challenge the correctness of my statement.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I can not challenge it, because I do not know what you affirm. I do not know what may have been done during all the years of the life of Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman did not hear my statement. I will repeat it for his benefit. I stated that I had been advised that some time heretofore the House Committee on Naval Affairs had considered a proposition substantially in terms with this and had rejected it. I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Does not the gentleman think that is rather a vague way in which to attempt to commit the Committee on Naval Affairs to any judgment or course of action?

Mr. DOCKERY. Either the statement I have made is true or I have been misinformed—one or the other.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Either it is true or it is not!

Mr. DOCKERY. If the committee has considered this proposition, it has considered it in a public way, because it must have considered it upon the reference of a bill to it in the usual manner. And if my statement is not accurate, I would be glad to have the gentleman say so.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I can not state whether it is true or not, unless the statement is made with sufficient distinctness. I can not be expected to hunt up the records for all time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I supposed the gentleman, who is an expert in all matters connected with the Navy, would have a recollection on this point.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have no recollection of any such action.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, I have been informed by a gentleman who, I believe, is in a position to have correct information——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If you will give me any clew whatever, I would like to look the matter up.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). That the House Committee on Naval Affairs, whether in this or some prior Congress I can not say, has heretofore considered this proposition. I do not know whether or not that is true. The gentleman says that he has no recollection of such action.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this proposition, whether it has been approved or disapproved by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and as I was about to say, for a reason suggested by a distinguished gentleman on this floor, that this amendment would practically give a monopoly to certain naval officers in the matter of inventions of this character and to this extent would trench upon the domain of invention, which ought to be free to all the people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this amendment suggests the fact that we are now engaged in war. If I had no information in respect to these troublous times outside of what is suggested by this amendment, I would know there was something wrong somewhere or this amendment would not find a place in an appropriation bill.

And I want to say, Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this war that I propose to exercise full responsibility as a Representative, and I do not propose to be driven under stress of so-called "patriotism" to approve any measure which in my judgment is against the interest of the taxpayers of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will allow me a little more time.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. As was well said by the gentleman from Massachusetts, we take these army officers and navy officers and care for them almost from the cradle. We educate them in our great institutions at West Point and Annapolis; we pay them liberally while they are in the public service, and when they reach a certain age they are retired under the law at a certain rate of pay—not full pay, I believe, but reduced pay.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Three-fourths pay.

Mr. DOCKERY. Three-fourths pay, as my colleague suggests. Such being the case, it has been the policy of the Government from the beginning to secure to the Government the advantage of any inventions by this class of our employees. It remained, so far as I know, for this proposition coming to us from the Senate for the first time seriously to suggest that these inventions should be utilized for personal gain by officers, who are to have the right to go into the Court of Claims and collect, at the expense of the taxpayers, royalties and other compensations for the inventions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us set our faces steadily against this proposition. The committee rooms of this and of the other body at the other end of the Capitol are crowded now with propositions of like character, questionable, doubtful, or odious, that would not be urged for consideration upon either body in time of peace. Let us stand here, from now until the end of the war, steadily upholding the interests of the people of the United States. Whatever money is necessary to vigorously prosecute the war we are prepared to appropriate willingly, but let us reserve every dollar not necessary for the Navy or to equip our troops in the field for the benefit of the public service. We must not allow contractors or inventors or anyone else under questionable guise to run their arms into the Treasury at the expense of the people.

I do not believe that the House will approve of the amendment which has been placed in this bill by the Senate. Indeed, I think if the gentleman from Maine will examine the records of his own committee, he will find that this proposition, or substantially the same proposition, has been presented and disapproved by that committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, it may be that, at this particular time, the amendment now under consideration is inopportune. It may be that at some other time it would have been better to have presented it for consideration. But it does not appear to me to have all of the objectionable features which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] seems to invest it with. This amendment proposes simply—

> That whenever, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, the public interests require the use in the naval service of any invention or discovery covered by letters patent issued to any officer of the Navy, whether retained in his ownership or assigned to others, said Secretary shall proceed to use said invention or discovery in the manner and to the extent required by such naval service, and such royalties and compensation as may be equitably due such officer, considering all the circumstances connected with the making of the invention or discovery, and especially all facilities in originating, working out, or perfecting the invention which the officer may have enjoyed by reason of his official position, may be recovered by suit brought by said officer in the Court of Claims. Said court shall make rules for the trial of such cases, conforming as far as may be with the rules established by the Supreme Court for the practice in courts of equity, and all cases shall be determined within one year from the filing of the petition therein, unless, in the discretion of the court, upon sufficient cause shown, the time is extended, and in all such cases appeals may be allowed to either party to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby prohibited from making any contract or payment for the use of any patent taken out by any naval officer.

Now, it looks to me as if the proposition here embodied was sufficiently and safely guarded. In the first place, the Secretary of the Navy must be satisfied that the invention is of public use, and that it is essential to the Government service; and then, if it is used by the Government, the inventor may appeal to a court—a court that we establish ourselves, a court of his own countrymen, a court possessing every facility for investigating and arriving at the true facts of the case—to ascertain the value of the invention; and it must be observed that certain limitations are placed upon this very court. They have to take into view all of the facilities the officer had and all of the contributions the Government may have made toward the invention; and after considering all of these, then give to him the compensation the court, of our own selection, says he is entitled to. I do not think there is any unfairness in that proposition, or that there is any possible harm which can come to the Government from its enactment.

Mr. Speaker, it would hardly be contended that the Government of the United States is entitled to all of the faculties, all of the qualities, all of the services, and all of the genius of those who engage in its military service. I know such a contention has been raised here; but I say no. We take these men into our service for a specific purpose, as a part of the military arm of the Government, for the purpose of defensive and aggressive warfare, for the purpose of war, and none other. That is the service we purchase from them. That is the character of service we desire, and that is what we pay for, and nothing more.

I noticed that it was said, a few moments ago, that the Supreme Court of the United States had stated, in effect, that all that a man possesses he yields to his Government when he goes into its military or naval service. I say the Supreme Court said nothing of the kind. On the contrary, it said that the invention of the individual, that he makes, as any other capable man who makes inventions, belongs to him, and that it can not be taken from him for public use without compensation any more than any other kind of property could be taken from him without compensation.

His invention belongs to him; and the only exception to that rule, and the only limitation upon the rule, is where he has been detailed for the express purpose of making experiments or discoveries; and when in pursuance of that duty he makes an invention or discovery, his Government is entitled to the use of that invention. But not other persons. The public have no right in any case, without his consent, to the use of his invention. He may sell the invention, or rent it, or demand royalty of everyone else excepting the Government. That is the authority of the Supreme Court on the subject.

But let me go a step further——

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Has the gentleman read the case of Gill vs. United States, reported in 160 United States Reports?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not; but I find in an opinion by Attorney-General Miller upon this subject the following statement:

> It is important to observe that the Supreme Court of the United States has settled the point that the United States is as much bound to respect the rights secured to a patentee by his letters patent as an ordinary person, even in cases where the invention covered by the patent could be useful only in the administration of government; as, for instance, "explosive shells, rams, and submarine batteries to be attached to armed vessels."

And the Attorney-General cites James vs. Campbell, 144 United States Reports, 356; United States vs. Palmer, 128 United States Reports, 262; Hollister vs. Benedict Manufacturing Company, 113 United States Reports, 60.

I have not examined those opinions, but the Attorney-General has cited them. He has certainly examined them. They certainly sustain this point, or he would not have cited them. And mind you, they are late reports. The earliest one is 113 United States Reports, and the latest one is almost current with this date. But I quote from the same opinion:

> It is also to be noted that the same court has decided that a person in the military service of the United States has a right to patent an invention made by him, and relating to the branch of the service to which he belongs—> that branch of the service to which he belongs, and that the United States has no right to use such invention without making proper compensation, as in other cases where the property of the citizen is taken and used for public purposes.

And he cites United States vs. Burns, 12 Wallace, 246; United States vs. Palmer, 128 United States Reports, 262.

Now, gentlemen, there is the law. The law is settled upon this matter. That is the highest authority. The Supreme Court says that the inventor, although an army officer, has a vested right in his invention; that it is his property; that it can not be taken from him under the Constitution without due compensation is made.

Mr. MAHON. Why put it in this bill, then? Why do they want it in here?

Mr. HEPBURN. This bill simply provides a mode of determining the value of it, but does not attempt to change the law.

Mr. MAHON. If that is correct law, he can go to the courts now.

Mr. HEPBURN. This furnishes a tribunal to settle the question.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Right there I want to ask a question. Does it not permit the Navy Department to use the property without any permit; that is, to force it out of the man?

Mr. HEPBURN. It gives to the Secretary of the Navy the power to use it.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Changing the whole law.

Mr. HEPBURN. And then it provides the method of compensating for that loss to the inventor; that is all. Now, it may be, gentlemen, that this is not the right plan; it may be that this is not the right bill. I am not discussing that. I am trying to combat the opinion of some of these gentlemen who regard the question as though some great largess was to be bestowed upon naval officers or army officers, as though they were to have something given them by this bill. Their rights are fixed now. We do not enlarge them. All that is done by this amendment is to provide a tribunal by which their wrongs can be remedied, so that they can have that proper compensation that the Supreme Court say belongs to them, and that is taken from them without their will or their consent.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question or two.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know, but I think Brother CANNON will lend us a minute.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Maybe you are getting me into trouble. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I want to clear up this legal point. Suppose you had a patent or I had a patent, and the Government under stress of war was to take our patent and use it. Could we not go into the Court of Claims now and get our compensation for it?

Mr. HEPBURN. I am not sure.

Mr. MAHON. Not unless Congress sent you there.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I want to know is, what is the use to load this bill up to give a man a right that he already has?

Mr. HEPBURN. You might go to the Court of Claims and have an adjudication, or rather a finding of the facts, and the opinion of that court as to what your compensation should be, but it would not be effective until it was reported to Congress and an appropriation made.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did they not do that very identical thing in the Sibley tent case?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not remember; I do not know.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In the Sibley tent case they claimed a royalty of $5 on every tent that was used during the war, and at the end of the war came in with a claim for over $225,000.

One-half of the claim had been assigned to a man who was in the Union Army during the war, and he got his part of it; and in the Fifty-third Congress the representatives of Major-General Sibley, who had been in the Confederate army, came to the Committee on Claims—I was a member of it at that time—and claimed $115,000 royalty on tents that would never have had to be made or used in the war if it had not been for men like Major-General Sibley. I helped to kill that measure, and think it was right to do so. It may be right to make such a provision as this, but I do not think it well to load this bill with it and get into a rumpus here.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Speaker, I had occasion not long since to investigate this matter, and to read an opinion, as far back as the good old days of the Republic, by Mr. Attorney-General Cushing, in which this exact question came up before him, and he decided, reaffirming former opinions, that when an officer of the Government, in the Navy or Army, "while in the line of his employment," patents a process pertaining thereto, he has no right to compensation for it; that it belongs to the Government, proceeding upon the principle that when the Government educates a man in the Army or educates him in the Navy, the Government as such is entitled to the full benefit of such services. It is not like inventions by persons differently situated.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GAINES. Yes.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I understand you to affirm that any patent in favor of an officer of the Navy can be seized and used by the Government when it sees fit.

Mr. GAINES. It belongs to the Government. He has no right, after he is educated by the Government, to take up his time from the Government and take the Government's paraphernalia, take the Government's machinery and take away from the Government his genius and put it to those machines and put the profit in his own pocket. The Government is entitled to the genius of an officer as well as to his patriotism.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I understand you to say that equally applies to the Army and Navy?

Mr. GAINES. It is to one or both. I will furnish the gentleman the authority.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I desire to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. GAINES. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If that proposition is true, if an officer has not the right to take out a patent for his benefit, then what becomes of Captain King and the literary characters of the Regular Army who write newspapers, who write books and take out copyrights, and all that sort of stuff?

Mr. GAINES. I am not talking about writings nor writing of books and trash that they do. The Government does not want nor need them in its governmental capacity. I am talking about the United States Army and Navy. The time of an officer, his patriotism, his brains, his genius, belong to the American Government, and he has no right to get something patented, put the compensation into his own pocket, and derange the business of the Government by which he is employed in so doing.

If you go along and give jurisdiction to the Court of Claims in these matters, you will have, say, A, an officer of the Navy, on one side, and the Government on the other.

You will have a navy officer arrayed against the Government, his time taken from the Government, his sympathies against the Government, and you have him trying to array himself against his country and against the Government employing him. What would occur if there was an "army" of these patentees bringing suits? If we are to establish a court for this purpose, shall we organize it now, in the time of war, and load down with new legislation an appropriation bill? If the United States Supreme Court has settled this question, then the United States Supreme Court has jurisdiction to do it, and if it has jurisdiction to do so of the navy or army officer, it has the right by its jurisdiction to appraise the damages if the patent is taken.

On page 49 of the Senate proceedings, Report No. 1453 to Fifty-fourth Congress, touching upon "naval affairs," some statements had been made, and then Mr. Secretary Herbert testified in speaking of this evil; then Senator PERKINS, asking a question, said:

> In this connection I wish to state that Professor Monroe, now connected with the chair of chemistry in Columbia College, discovered smokeless powder when in the Naval Academy, filled the chair of chemistry there, and he felt that the invention belonged to the Government, and it was placed by him at the disposal of the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman yield to me two minutes more?

Mr. CANNON. I can not yield the gentleman more than a minute.

Mr. GAINES. Two minutes?

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. GAINES. Now, here is a long list, you can see on page 50, where just such patents and just such things, where patriotic men have invented, in the line of their employment, processes that redound to the benefit of the Government in time of war in the past, and he says there are only one or two exceptions where they have not surrendered and given the patent to the Government as a matter of right.

The case, I think, transferred "in writing" and alluded to was Lieutenant Fletcher, a charming acquaintance of mine, who afterwards surrendered the right to the Government to use it free, even after he had patented it. Now, Secretary Herbert, in his report, deprecates the policy of permitting a naval or army officer—and I want to say I have great respect for these men; they are, all I have ever met, gentlemen of the highest order—patenting a process discovered while working in the line of his duty and charging the Government for it. This report suggests restraints in all cases and gives the English law on the subject, on pages 48 and 49 of this same report.

Following Senator PERKINS's statement, I have read this report, which I will insert here:

> Secretary HERBERT. I have a list here of nine or ten patents that have been taken out by officers of the Government. Here is the case of Lieutenant Driggs, for breech-loading ordnance; Lieutenant Dashiell, for breech mechanism; Lieutenant Dashiell again, for breech mechanism for ordnance; Professor Monroe, for smokeless powder; Lieutenant Fletcher, a license granted under a patent for gun mounts.
> Senator HALE. You will put that list in your statement?
> Secretary HERBERT. I will insert it.

The list referred to is as follows:

Officers to whom patents have been granted and shop licenses under said patents given to the Department.

No.	Name of officer.	Article patented.
1	Lieut. W. H. Driggs, U. S. N.	Breech-loading ordnance; license granted May 28, 1890, under patents No. 380798 and No. 378828.
2	Lieut. R. B. Dashiell, U. S. N.	Breech mechanism for ordnance; license granted Sept. 15, 1890, for four guns, under patent No. 438803.
3	....do	Breech mechanism for ordnance; license granted Jan. 22, 1892, under patent No. 370319.
4	Chas. E. Monroe, chemist, torpedo station.	Smokeless powder; applications for patents Nos. 402845 and 402846. Right to manufacture under these patents granted Aug. 14, 1891.
5	Lieut. F. F. Fletcher, U. S. N.	Gun mounts; license granted Aug. 18, 1891, under patent No. 457641, for two mounts.
6	....do	License granted Jan. 23, 1895; application for patent No. 457271, improvement in gun mounts; application for patent No. 452272, breech mechanism for ordnance; application for patent No. 452273, improvements in system of sighting guns.
7	Lieut. A. A. Ackerman, U. S. N.	Improvements in manufacture of hard-face armor; license granted Jan. 29, 1895; application for patent No. 390240.
8	Ensign Jos. Strauss, U. S. N.	Gun mounting; license granted Aug. 24, 1895; application for patent No. 533890.
9	Commander G. A. Converse, U. S. N.; Lieut. J. B. Bernadou, U. S. N.	Cellulose powder; license granted Nov. 29, 1895; patent No. 550472.
10	....do	Apparatus for separating plastic powders; license granted Nov. 29, 1895; patent No. 551306.

With the exception of cases No. 1, No. 5, and No. 8, all of the devices were designed by the officer in line of duty, and beyond the mere expense of taking out patents do not cost the Government anything.

Secretary HERBERT. In all these cases except those of Lieutenant Fletcher and Lieutenant Driggs, these officers discovered these things while they were in the line of their duty, and they had these patents taken out in their names, giving the Government the right to use them without royalty. The patents show on their face that they are in the interest of the Government in every case except one, and in that case the transfer was afterwards made in writing to the Government. They take out these patents for the purpose primarily of preventing anybody else from patenting them and demanding royalties of the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I think all the reasons are against the proposition of enacting this measure into law. First, it is not opportune. Conceding that it may have meritorious features, it is highly improper, not to add a wrong, to seek to obtain important legislation in this manner. In time of peace a similar provision was offered; it met defeat. But now, without consideration, without presenting it as an independent measure, to stand or fall according to its intrinsic merits, in an hour when the tragedy of an armed conflict is being acted, it is attached as a rider to an appropriation bill the immediate passage of which is earnestly desired by the Administration and members of Congress. In this manner, and because of the extraordinary conditions, it is thought opposition will be silenced and favorable action secured. If there is any opposition, it is supposed it will vanish when appeals are made to our "patriotism."

Under the plea of "patriotism" and the complimentary one of "emergency measures," many improper laws have been enacted and larcenies committed. If this measure is wise and just it should come before the House upon a proper occasion, depending for success upon its merits. It has no place, under the rules of the House, upon a general appropriation bill. The policy of grafting upon appropriation bills general legislation changing existing law, or providing remedies when none exist, is extremely unwise and ought to be condemned here and now. If approved or encouraged, we will be confronted by multitudes of similar propositions before this Congress adjourns.

Second, I believe this section, if it becomes law, will prove disadvantageous to the Government. Without stating the manifold reasons, as my time is brief, it is sufficient to say that when the Government educates a person with the understanding that his services are to be given in return, and the Government provides for him, affords him opportunities and special advantages for obtaining information, the time of such person belongs to the Government, and any invention resulting from the character of his employment and the special conditions imposed by the nation should be freely used by the Government he has taken oath to serve.

To illustrate: Suppose the Government should purchase the submarine boat invented by Mr. Holland, and it should be placed in charge of some naval officer who discovers some defect, and he sees some improvement which would make the boat very much superior for naval and submarine purposes. He does it by reason of the Government having placed him there, giving him an opportunity to see the advantages and disadvantages of the boat, having made him the agent of the Government for the purpose of determining its advantages and its defects. If he discovers any defect and sees a way by which he can remedy the same, and procures a patent therefor, I think it would be wrong and unwise to enact a law by which he could derive some pecuniary advantage for that invention from the Government.

These superior opportunities enjoyed by naval officers, the chances to know what the service requires, and also to ascertain the improvements desired in vessels, machinery, torpedoes, guns, munitions of war, and all the numerous things incident to these naval concerns, ought not to be employed by them to reap some reward from the country which they serve. If genius inspires an officer to the performance of some mighty achievement or the invention of something serviceable to his country, let his reward be, if one is necessary, that promotion so coveted by all officers and the fame which follows greatness everywhere.

Third. The measure is imperfect and incomplete, showing hasty preparation and lack of consideration. For example, no rule of damages is provided and no mode suggested by which there can be an ascertainment of the amount to be paid the inventor. There is no rule to guide the court and no plan offered to estimate the value of any invention. Again, there are no restrictions imposed upon the Secretary of the Navy. Any improvement made he may utilize, and thus subject the Government to unliquidated damages, which, when arbitrarily ascertained, may amount to colossal sums. Naturally, the Secretary will follow the recommendations of the naval officers.

These naval officers—I am not imputing to them improper motives—will, of course, be interested in their colleagues and their welfare, and will be desirous of seeing adopted their inventions that will add to their pecuniary profit. And if they make an invention, it will be natural that they will recommend to the naval authorities its adoption. They will have an advantage over other men who are engaged in inventions; they will have the ear of the Secretary of the Navy constantly; they will know what is desired and what improvements would be helpful. There can be no question but what legislation of this character will give to men engaged in the Naval Department or as officers in the Navy an advantage over those engaged in private life. They will have opportunities to get their inventions accepted whether they are meritorious or not, and have them approved and adopted by the Government and incorporated into the various labors undertaken by the Naval Department. They will have an unfair advantage.

It seems to me that this is a sufficient reason for stamping this legislation with the seal of our disapproval.

Fourth. But if we do not enact it, what will be the result? It provides that the Secretary of the Navy may adopt, as no doubt he has already done, inventions that have in the past been made by officers of the Navy. This legislation is retroactive in that respect. It permits them to go into the Court of Claims without a time limit, without the statute of limitation being invoked by the Government, and submit a demand for the use of inventions which have been in use by the naval authorities for years and years.

There is no measure of damages prescribed. They will bring naval experts on the stand, experts in invention, who may testify that such inventions are worth millions; and you have no adequate standard submitted in this measure, no proper rule of damages by which to guide the court. If this expert testimony be accepted, these inventions now in use by the Naval Department will be shown to be worth millions and millions. You are giving carte blanche authority to men to go into our courts and pile up judgments against the Government, the amount of which no man can determine.

Mr. GAINES. What do you say on the policy of the proposition of allowing an army or a naval officer to sue the Government for the value of his army or naval patent?

Mr. KING. Why, the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee illustrates the disadvantages and lack of wisdom of such legislation as this. As the gentleman very properly remarked in his speech a few moments ago, it arrays the naval officers against the Government. The officers of the Government will be interested in swelling their claims and augmenting their judgments to the highest possible amount.

In making this statement I am not imputing to them any unworthy motive or characteristics different from those possessed by other persons. Persons going into the naval service do not rob themselves of their human nature. If any of us had an invention, we would consider it to be of immense importance, and undoubtedly we would testify upon the stand according to our exaggerated idea of the importance of the invention.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Do you believe it is proper for a member of Congress—yourself, for instance——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. KING. I would have been glad to answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio if I had got it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY] for five minutes.

Mr. TALBERT. Before the gentleman from North Carolina proceeds, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether the question we are now discussing is the only one now at issue connected with this bill?

Mr. CANNON. So I understand.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Speaker, upon the plainest principles this amendment ought not to prevail. I dislike very much to differ from the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], for I have regarded him as an ideal statesman—at any rate, my ideal of statesmanship. But it strikes me that this proposition to pay a Government officer for inventions made by him while in Government employ is dangerous and contrary to a principle which has always been recognized in the administration of justice in this and all other countries.

The distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] took the position that a man is entitled as property to any invention which he may make. I admit in general that this is so. He is entitled to the product of the mind as an inventor, or even as an author, to the same extent that the plowman is entitled to the product of the farm when he tills the earth. But there are exceptions to the rule. When a man stands in the relation of a public officer, or probably in certain fiduciary relations to other citizens, the law restricts his action and his compensation.

For instance, suppose the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, being a member of Congress and being also a lawyer, should perform services in the Internal Revenue Department here for a client—services worth, it may be, a thousand dollars; and suppose his client should execute to him a bond for the payment of that sum for those services. Could the gentleman recover the amount? There is not a lawyer on this floor who will not say that such a bond would be absolutely void, or at any rate voidable; and I believe absolutely void. Why? Because to allow compensation to be collected in such a case is against the policy of the law. Not only that, but the gentleman could be convicted of a felony, I believe, under our statutes for entering into such an arrangement.

The same principle applies here. While a Congressman is in the service of the Government he can not perform services in any Department of the Government for an individual and accept pay therefor. A naval officer is also in the service of the Government. The recommendations or opinions of naval officers to the Secretary of the Navy are potential, if not omnipotent, in influencing and controlling the action of the Secretary of the Navy. This bill confers a discretion upon the Secretary of the Navy in the use of inventions of naval officers; and it seems to me that the same identical principle applies in condemnation of the proposition contained in this bill that forbids members of Congress from performing services in any Department of the Government.

The service of an attorney is just as much his property as an invention is the property of an inventor. The speeches and arguments that he makes on questions of law are sometimes valued at hundreds of thousands of dollars. I presume there are lawyers in the United States whose services are worth and have commanded in a single case $100,000. A lawyer may be a member of Congress, and as such he receives only $5,000 a year; yet if, being a Congressman, he should appear before the Patent Office or the Internal Revenue Office or any other Department of the Government and should agree to receive for his services there compensation within reasonable limits—indeed it might be only half the real value of his services or one hundredth part of what they are really worth.

Still he could not recover. Why? Because to permit him to do so would be against the policy of the law. And, as I have said, there is a statute making it a felony to enter into any such agreement. So these officers of the Army and Navy can not recover for the use of their inventions. It is against the policy of the law. No court of equity would pay a naval officer for the use by the Government of his inventions. Why? Because the courts recognize the very principle for which I am contending. The case would have no standing in a court of equity. Equity would not recognize it. It would come in as a tainted claim, and therefore could not be recovered.

There is philosophy and good law in the language of the Lord's prayer—"lead us not into temptation." Now, sir, if you will allow these naval officers to recommend to the Secretary of the Navy inventions the product of their own intellect, and then let it be known, as it is known by intelligent men, that these recommendations are generally conclusive in controlling the mind of the Secretary of the Navy, in that way you bring to bear such a temptation upon the minds of naval officers as will ultimately corrupt them, however pure they may be. Under such temptation they would fall just as assuredly as the sand hillocks ultimately yield to the ceaseless lashings of the turbulent waves of the ocean to which they may be exposed.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. In other words, these officers sit in judgment on their own cases.

Mr. LINNEY. That is it exactly.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD].

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this is a good amendment, and one which ought to be enacted into law. The principal reason for a patent law is the stimulation of inventive genius. It is not for the benefit of the inventor so much as it is for the benefit of the public. And an invention made by an officer of the Army or the Navy is of just as much value to the public as though made by anybody else.

Certainly the law protects the employee of the Government in the same way and to the same extent that it protects any other employee. There is no express or implied contract when a person enters the Army or the Navy giving to the United States the benefit of his inventive skill, his inventive genius, any more than there is when any other employee enters the service of his employer under an ordinary contract for the performance of work of any kind.

The decisions have gone a great way in the matter of protecting the rights of inventors in this country, and justly so. The rule is that the employee is protected in his invention made under a general bargain for his time, skill, and labor. A partner, even, has no right in the patent of his copartner, although the invention was made and patented during the existence of the partnership relation, and with reference to a matter pertaining to the business for which the partnership is formed. And it has even been held that an invention by a partner, made upon and with reference to a machine or appliance used and employed by the copartnership, is the personal property of the inventor. It has been held that it is a right inherent in the inventor himself.

Now, it has been said, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation is forced into this appropriation bill. Well, if you are going to complain of this particular paragraph for that special reason, you might as well go on and complain of a great many other paragraphs in this bill and not stop with this one. There are other paragraphs with reference to which the same objection may be made.

It has been advanced as a reason for not giving the officer of the Government the benefit of his skill and genius in invention that he has been educated at the expense of the Government. Now, what is the fact? He has undertaken to serve the Government in a certain capacity and under certain conditions; but not one of the conditions of that service is that he shall give to the Government all the products of his inventive skill and genius as long as he lives.

Mr. VINCENT. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption just there?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Certainly.

Mr. VINCENT. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Does not the officer, when he enters the service of the Government, enter it with knowledge of the law, and that law, being a part of the contract of service, eliminates his personal right?

Mr. SOUTHARD. There is no such law and there never was a law which eliminated the personal right of the individual to his invention unless he expressly or impliedly agreed that it should be done.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Of course; with pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is not the army or the navy officer in this matter on all fours, to use a common expression, with members of Congress, and is there not a law prohibiting the members of Congress from practicing in the Departments of the Government here, simply to remove any temptation which may exist in the performance of their legitimate functions as members of this body?

Mr. SOUTHARD. That may remove the temptation, it is true. But, my friend, we do not want to remove the temptation to continue useful inventions, inventions which may be used by the public, and especially by the Government in time of war. We do not want to do anything to cripple the genius, the skill, and the intellectual capacity of any of the American people, no matter what position they may occupy; and that is the broad principle on which all of our patent laws rest, and which has enabled this country to take first rank in the line of invention.

Mr. LOVE. I would like to ask the gentleman, if there is no law preventing the Government from using such inventions, why the necessity for this clause in the bill?

Mr. SOUTHARD. This clause simply provides the method by which the inventor may receive some compensation for that which he invents. It is a mode of getting at what he shall receive for something he has invented and patented and which the Government appropriates to its own use.

Mr. SIMPSON. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Certainly.

Mr. SIMPSON. Supposing the Government of the United States, through the Navy Department, should select some patent as a useful one, would not the board of naval officers sit on the question and determine its usefulness, and therefore, to a certain extent, determine the availability of their own patents in some cases?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I suppose somebody would be called upon to decide as to the usefulness of the invention——

Mr. SIMPSON. And that would be a decision as to their own claim.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Somebody must decide every case which comes up for consideration. Nobody would be allowed to decide his own case, and those most familiar with the invention and the work to be performed will be in the best position to decide in reference to the usefulness of a patent.

It has been said that invention will not be stimulated by reason of the Government giving to the inventor the fruits of his invention; that in the Army and Navy of the United States patriotism itself is a full and sufficient incentive to bring out all the powers of those engaged in this service.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that, while patriotism may have much to do with stimulating inventive progress on the part of the officers of the Army and Navy, self-interest, added to patriotism, can not fail to afford additional encouragement to all those who have a genius for invention. We want the very best efforts of the ablest and the best men in the country in order to obtain the greatest results in inventions, as well as in all other directions; and it seems to me that we should offer every facility to men in the Army, in the Navy, and elsewhere to do things which will lead to useful inventions and to the procuring of valuable devices to be used by the public.

I have never seen any reason why a different rule should prevail with reference to people in the Army and Navy from that which prevails with reference to people engaged in the ordinary walks, avocations, and pursuits of life. Every employee of the Government is as much entitled to the benefit of his invention as the employee of the individual or corporation; and it seems to me that every employee of the Government, whether he be an officer or a private, should receive compensation when the Government takes possession of and uses his invention; and the amendment here proposed simply provides a reasonably sure and certain method by which he may obtain such compensation.

Mr. HILBORN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the discussion of this bill, and with some anxiety and surprise as well.

I shall not attempt to go into a discussion of the law of the case, but I want to say that I have no sympathy with gentlemen upon both sides of this House who have inveighed so bitterly against this amendment, and in order to defeat it, by inferences if not by direct statement, have cast aspersions upon the men upon whose bravery, genius, intelligence, patriotism, and courage depends, in this day and hour, the honor and perhaps the life of the nation.

I want to say, first, that so far as my knowledge goes, and I believe it is as great as that of any man upon this floor on this subject, the officers of the Navy have never demanded of this Government, either by petition, by letters, by lobby, or any combination of means, that you should grant them any such a privilege as this amendment proposes. Yet I believe that privilege is an inherent right. I have listened to gentlemen from the far West who came upon this floor hostile to the Navy of the United States, determined never to vote even a dollar of appropriation for the purpose of building a navy, who now are ready to give their support to it, but who are not so wholly converted to the idea of defending our seacoasts as to be willing to let go of the idea that the Navy is inefficient and that the men who officer it are negligent of duty and do nothing.

I have listened to gentlemen who spoke of the great goodness and beneficence of this Government in educating our naval officers. Our Government has educated every one of you. Millions more have been appropriated to educate men in the shops, men in the different Departments, men upon this floor than have ever been paid out to naval officers or for their instruction. But suppose you are educating them, what of it? Every nation of civilization and decency does the same.

Mr. HAMILTON. How did the Government educate us all?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Why, the public educates you, and the people are the Government, and by the assessment upon the property of all to raise the school funds you are educated.

Now, let me say this in regard to what a naval officer does in entering the service: He gives some sacrifice as well as receives some benefit. He yields to the Government an obedience by which he almost wholly loses his identity as a citizen. In so far as his own will is concerned, he becomes a machine in the hands of the Government.

Mr. HAMILTON. Does he not seek the job?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. His duties are assigned to him day by day. He does that which many of you would not do for a thousand times the pay.

Mr. HAMILTON. Does he not seek the job?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. He separates himself from his family, yields up almost everything that endears a man to life, and willingly gives it to his Government. Now, if the gentleman from Michigan has any question to ask me and will ask it in an audible voice, I will listen to him.

Mr. HAMILTON. I ask you if he does not seek the place?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Did you seek yours?

Mr. HAMILTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Then, sir, if you should invent something to-day, while you are a Congressman, would you claim that the Government had a right to take it away from you and give you no benefit?

Mr. HAMILTON. Oh, the positions are not at all analogous.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. You owe your time and duty to this Government and to your constituents every day and every hour while serving as a Congressman just as much as a naval officer does to the General Government. And each individual naval officer renders in each and every year more valuable service to the Government than dozens of Congressmen that might be named.

Mr. HAMILTON. Why should you limit the benefit of the law to officers?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I am not limiting it to officers. I am not even asking it for officers.

Mr. HAMILTON. The bill does.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. But I want to say to you that I see man before me who recognize the truth of what I say whose mouths have been closed upon this floor when questions arose pertaining to naval affairs simply because they might be charged with self-interest. I charge now, for the first time, perhaps, upon this floor, that the Government of the United States, under its laws, assisted by Congress, have done simply outrageous things against both the Army and the Navy. I charge that you have made almost absolute beggars of the naval officers of the United States. I can point you not to one, but to fifty or a hundred men who during the last year have received a total compensation not exceeding eleven hundred dollars upon which to support themselves and their families, maintain the honor and dignity of their Government, who are compelled either to seek means from their homes or to resign from the Navy.

You sent naval officers abroad under the glorious Mahan and others to entertain, and compelled them to entertain, in order to maintain the dignity of the United States, and ensigns, lieutenants, and captains were compelled to go down into their own pockets and pay cash in order to entertain the officers of other governments, and were compelled to come home bankrupt and in debt, having had to borrow money in order to decently maintain the honor and dignity of the American Navy and our flag and to sustain an appearance of respectability. This has been going on for years, and naval officers have uncomplainingly borne with the shameful wrong, concealed it from the officers of the foreign navies, and given that which was necessary to maintain their families to the aggrandizement and building up the fame and good name of this country.

Mr. SIMPSON. How many applicants did the gentleman have from his district of young men who wanted to become "beggars?"

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. My dear sir, I have but one at this time, and he is the son of an officer who gave up his life in the naval service of the United States; and this young man is willing to give his life, dedicate his life to the service, and he is not asking pay for an invention. You gentlemen might as well reach to the brain of a man who has filled the full measure of his duty to the Government, and has done all that the Government has asked him to do, filled every hour of his assignment of duty; and if, in the hours of rest allotted even to a railroad man or a hod carrier, when his head should be on his pillow, he invents something, you will reach in with a sordid hand, ready to rob and steal that from him.

As well might you take from a man who is endowed with education, experience, and genius who shall make a painting and put it on the wall, not in the hours that he owes to the Government, but in the time which is his own, and sell it and give the proceeds to the Government. So you go through with the whole list, until at last you begin to believe that these men are Hessians, and that you have a right in their homes and have a right and a legal right upon their offspring. I would not be surprised to hear some gentleman claim that if a naval officer were married and had children, they belonged to the Government and that they could use them as they pleased.

Mr. DOVENER. And if he have a wife, she belongs to the Government.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Then I understand the gentleman from West Virginia, who is always apt in grave considerations, suggests that if an officer has a wife, that she, too, belongs to the Government.

Mr. DOVENER. And if he write a poem, that it belongs to the Government.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. It is an amusing thing to see gentlemen crying out that this amendment is an unholy outrage, to hear them say that men inventing anything while in service shall not charge anything for those inventions. Why? Because, they say, the law says they shall not? Is there any law upon the statute books that says as much? Can you point to a law anywhere that says that when a man goes into the Navy you have the right to the offspring of his genius, that may have been given to him by the direction of God himself, when it may have been developed when he was not connected with the service of the United States, and in hours that he has a right to, that the rules of the Navy give him as his own—then you still insist that he may not have that?

You demand of him his life and his service. All that he has given to you; but then you go further, and when he has done all this duty, and in hours of his own, in the hours of God-given rest, you insist that he shall not even have a thought that shall not belong to this Government. It is a wrong way in which to treat these men possessing such talents. Let this be understood. Why, there are men on this floor who are taken away with the idea that they, the officers of the Navy, receive not only pay, but are boarded and clothed by the Government. Out upon such ignorance as that! Do you not know that the naval officers of this Government pay every dollar of their own sustenance and that the Government does not give them a dollar for sustenance and clothing. The Government even reaches into their pockets and assesses them for the maintenance of the marine band at the place of their education. [Applause.]

They are assessed to maintain that which the Government in all fairness ought to furnish, and that in various ways which is not only onerous but works a grievous wrong. Mr. Speaker, the naval officers of the United States Navy are men of honor, of genius, and education, and no government on earth can produce men of greater merit or cleaner character. They are at this hour the hope and strength, the great reliance, of this Government; and yet they are the poorest paid, the least rewarded, of all.

There are men who have given a third of a century to the service of the Government to-day standing upon the bridges of our battle ships whose pay is less than that of political appointees in useless positions in the Departments. There are men standing in the turrets of our monitors who have given fourteen and fifteen years of service who, in this hour of war, are scarcely paid as much as one of the doorkeepers of this Chamber. If you can not give them justice, let me plead with you, in the name of decency, not to give them insults.

Mr. HILBORN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that there is some misapprehension of the real principle involved in this amendment. If I correctly understand the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY], his argument was to the effect that it is contrary to public policy for the Government even to make use of any invention by a naval officer. I do not so understand the law, nor do I understand that the matter here involved is at all comparable with the case of a naval officer or any other officer of the Government practicing before any of the Departments. The act does not apply to any case except where the Government of the United States has already granted a patent to an inventor.

So very important did the framers of our Constitution consider the encouragement of inventions that in the Constitution itself, before they conferred upon Congress the power to declare war, they conferred on it power to secure to inventors for a limited period the exclusive right to the use of their inventions. In pursuance of that constitutional authority Congress has passed statute after statute, and has established a separate department of the Government known as the Patent Office. Under these laws patents are granted to inventors for a period of seventeen years, granting to them the exclusive right to use the thing covered by their invention. That right is by act of Congress made assignable.

That patent constitutes a contract between the Government and the inventor, a contract the property in which is just as valuable and just as sacred as the contract in a Government bond. I refer you to the decision and to authorities cited in the Westinghouse case, reported in volume 151 of the State Reports of Pennsylvania. You may just as well reach into a man's bank vault and take out his Government bond or into his pocket and take out a greenback note as to reach into and impair the value of this patent, this contract, which has already been granted to him by the Government of the United States. Now, I insist that it was not contrary to public policy for the Government to enter into that contract with him, otherwise the patent would never have been authorized, would never have been granted to the inventor, who was at the time in the Government employ.

If there is anything unwise about that, then the patent laws should be amended.

This act applies only to cases where the patent has actually been issued under the Constitution and laws of this Government and the right of the inventor has vested in that contract. Further than that, Mr. Speaker, you propose to use that contract where it has passed out of the possession and ownership of the inventor, and having been sold and assigned by him under the authority of the law, is held by third parties not in the employ of the Government. You propose to use all these inventions. You propose to permit the Government to take them. It has no more right to take them without compensation than it has to take any other property of these individuals. We propose and provide in this act that now, we being engaged in war, they may be taken by the Government whenever the Secretary of the Navy determines that the interests of the public require the use in the naval service of the inventions covered by such patents.

Ordinarily where a patent or a patented article is used the owner of the patent has the right arbitrarily to fix the value. He may absolutely withhold the article or the use of his invention unless his price is paid. Here in this act the Government is given the authority to take it without any previous contract, and pay for it, not at his price, not at the price to be determined by any naval officer nor any naval board, but by the Court of Claims in the first instance, and with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. After those tribunals have determined what is fair compensation he must come to Congress and get an appropriation before he can get any money; and if Congress thinks the amount too high, it will not allow the claim nor appropriate funds for its payment. With all these safeguards, what wrong can be done under the bill?

If the work was done by the inventor while in the pay of the Government or with the aid of Government materials or facilities, all those things are specifically required to be taken into account and proper deduction made, and very properly so. I see nothing contrary to public policy in encouraging inventions which may be of vast use to the Government. I should prefer to consider this matter in the form of a separate enactment rather than as an item—somewhat irrelevant—in this great naval appropriation bill. But the Senate has placed it there and the conferees have agreed upon its retention. If the House shall fail to agree to this report, a further conference will be necessary; and thus delay the enactment into law of this appropriation so urgently demanded by the immediate necessities of the naval warfare in which the country is engaged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MOODY in the chair). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend the remarks I made in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE].

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to occupy the time of the House in any further remarks, but I ask unanimous consent to print some remarks upon this amendment and also upon amendment 56.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest now that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] consume the balance of his time.

Mr. CANNON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY].

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, when this debate opened I had little idea of presenting my views on the subject, but as it progressed I saw one difficulty presenting itself to which I thought I would call the attention of the House. It is just this: I see a difference on the part of good lawyers as to what the law is and the effect of the passage of this amendment. Now, the use of a patent is a matter of business, and this amendment pertains to a matter of business, or else it has no place here. I have listened to the various gentlemen around here as to the rights of the Government in the patent of an officer of the Government. Some claim one thing and some claim another. This thing is certain: Either this amendment changes the law or there is no use in it.

If it does change the law, what law does it change, and how does it change it? What are the rights of the Government and the naval officer now in a patent issued by the Government to the officer? I am not a patent lawyer myself so that I claim to know, but certain it is that there are certain rights existing between the Government and the naval officer, just as between the Government and anybody else. Has the Government a right now to appropriate a patent issued to a naval officer without paying him for it? If so, why do we want to change it now? If it has no such right, why do we want to give the Government now the right to appropriate a patent and pay for it as provided for in this amendment?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. This does not change the law about compensation at all; it only provides the methods by which the compensation may be adjusted.

Mr. NORTHWAY. As I understand the suggestion of the gentleman, the Government has now the right to appropriate a patent issued to an officer in the Navy and must pay for it.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. It must pay him for the use of it.

Mr. NORTHWAY. How?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Just as you do anybody else. They have the right to take the property and use it now, but they must compensate him.

Mr. NORTHWAY. How do they compensate him?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. By a bill in Congress.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Then you propose to take away from Congress the right which it has always exercised and give it over to the Court of Claims—a court that we always fight when we come to make appropriations.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Even then Congress has got to make the appropriation.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, I believe this to be the law, I have no doubt of it, that a patent issued to a naval officer is his private property just as much as a patent issued to me, unless it is issued upon something that that officer is specially assigned to investigate and improve. That is the law, as I believe. Now, if it is the law that the patent belongs to the naval officer just as much as to an individual, why not let it remain there?

Mr. SIMPSON. And not give him any special privileges.

Mr. NORTHWAY. No. I want to tell you in this amendment there is some mighty change proposed somewhere, and I want to tell you that as consistent, conservative men we ought to have the opinion of the Judiciary Committee on a section of a statute like this as to what law it changes, and how it changes it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the gentleman whether this measure does not change the law in this respect, that it allows those officers who have been assigned to experimental duty and who use that experimental duty for the purposes of invention to invent something while in the performance of that duty for which they are recognized as entitled to compensation?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I am going to notice just that point. In my opinion that is just where the whole secret of this provision lies.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is just where most of these inventions are made.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The Government has a right to contract with a naval officer for a patent, just as it has to contract with an individual, and to pay him for it. But if you pass this amendment, you take from the Government the right to buy or pay for a patent, although it may desire to do so. Read the last sentence of this provision and say why it is put on here:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby prohibited from making any contract or payment for the use of any patent taken out by any naval officer.

This is the sort of legislation in which Congress is engaged today under an exhortation to pass it in three minutes. You take from the Secretary of the Navy the right not only to buy a patent, but to make any payment for the use of it. If this provision should become law, the only way the Secretary of the Navy can get a patent will be to forcibly take it; and then he is prohibited from making payment for it to the extent of a single cent, even though the patentee may be willing to accept the sum that the Government is willing to pay.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I see that the gentleman objects to this particular clause——

Mr. NORTHWAY. My objection is not founded on this clause alone.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman objects to this particular clause prohibiting the Secretary of the Navy from making a contract of that kind. Instead of such a provision being objectionable, does not the gentleman think that to invest the Secretary of the Navy with power, in his discretion, to buy patents, paying his own price for them, is exceedingly dangerous?

Mr. NORTHWAY. A dangerous power? No, sir. From the very foundation of our Government up to the present time he has been buying these patents until every earthly thing we have in the shape of a war vessel is covered by patents. And now you are going to overturn the whole system by which we have acquired those patents; and at the same time you are going to deprive Congress of the right to say anything about the matter. You take away from the Secretary of the Navy the right to make a contract for the purchase of a patent or to pay a dollar for one, and thus you force all questions involving payment for the use of a patent into the Court of Claims. You compel the Secretary of the Navy to appropriate that which you say is property and at the same time you prohibit him from buying it as though it were property.

I submit there is some mighty change here in the law; and we ought to have the opinion of the Judiciary Committee upon it, after they have coolly taken time to investigate the whole matter. Let them report to this body what the law is, and what this measure proposes in the way of change, and what the change is expected to bring about. I submit that as a lawyer I ought not to vote for any such amendment as this without such a report from the law committee of the House.

Another thing: I should be glad to know why you permit a naval officer who has sold or assigned his patent and received for it maybe thousands of dollars—why you permit him, and not the individual to whom the patent has been sold and assigned, to come in after the Secretary of the Navy has appropriated that patent and recover compensation for it? That is what this amendment does. This is the language:

That whenever, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, the public interests require the use in the naval service of any invention or discovery covered by letters patent issued to any officer of the Navy, whether retained in his ownership or assigned to others, said Secretary shall proceed to use said invention or discovery in the manner and to the extent required by such naval service, and such royalties and compensation as may be equitably due such officer, considering all the circumstances—

After the officer has sold his patent and received his pay you propose by this provision to let him go into the Court of Claims and recover royalties due somebody else.

Mr. OLMSTED. How much does the gentleman think would be found due such a man if he had sold his patent?

Mr. NORTHWAY. If he can recover nothing, why, in God's name, should this provision be framed as though there would be something due him?

Mr. BARHAM. That is to provide for the case of a reserved royalty.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Why is this language here? Talk about the Court of Claims not giving a man anything after the Government has forcibly taken his property! Talk about the Court of Claims not undertaking to say that a man shall receive three or four times what he would be willing to sell his patent for to the Secretary of the Navy, if the Secretary of the Navy were permitted to buy it! Wait till the first bill comes in here asking us to appropriate money for the use of property forcibly taken by the Secretary of the Navy, and then you will learn that in these cases royalties amount to something. Do gentlemen want to force such a measure as this upon the Government and bring upon our heads this kind of trouble? If so, they may do so. For one I will not vote for any such measure until I am obliged to do so.

Another thing: The gentleman from Ohio has grown red in the face as he talked about the rights of naval officers; as he declaimed about their patriotism, etc.; as he urged that we ought not to take from them certain property; as he argued that the fact of their belonging to the Navy ought not to deprive them of any right which they may have by virtue of their inventions. If the argument of the gentleman is sound, I should like to know the reason for the provision I am about to read. Mark, will you, the basis for the figuring out of the amounts to be awarded by the court in these cases:

Such royalties and compensation as may be equitably due such officer—considering all the circumstances connected with the making of the invention or discovery, and especially all facilities in originating, working out, or perfecting the invention which the officer may have enjoyed by reason of his official position.

You are authorizing no official proposition which is to be considered by a court of claims in determining this matter. You tell us that the mere fact that a man belongs to the Navy ought not to be considered, as if the fact that he was educated by the Government and received $500 a year during his period of service as a student in the institution, either in the Military Academy or the Naval Academy, was of no earthly consequence. You say it shall be taken into consideration in figuring his pay and that is all. Now, let us see what is the basis of that proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MOODY in the chair). The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to modify my resolution somewhat. I desire to withdraw the resolution heretofore offered and modify it so as to read: "That it is the sense of the House that the House conferees insist upon Senate amendment No. 23 being stricken out, and not agree to the same."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his first proposition and presents a modification of the same, which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House that the House conferees insist upon the Senate amendment No. 23 being stricken out, and not agree to the same.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have made objection to the adoption of this conference report, especially with regard to the item now under consideration. I do not, however, by failing to object to certain other items of the bill, desire to be understood as giving my approval thereto.

We fought out a policy for the bill on its passage through the House. I thought then, and think now, with the Senate amendments, that there is twice as much carried or authorized by the bill as ought to have been carried or is necessary to be carried for the safe conduct of the war in which we are now engaged. But after a full discussion the House of Representatives concluded to adopt the policy to build up a great navy for the future, without reference to existing conditions or the present war.

Mr. Speaker, I always make the best fight I can according to my judgment in support of the views I entertain. But when I see that the issue is determined against me, I there stop, because further fight is futile and a waste of time. But I do not want, by failing to refer to other matters embodied in this bill, to be understood as giving to the policy now proposed my approval or consent.

In time of war or in the preparation for anticipated war, a spirit of patriotism makes us move forward, a willing people, in any direction of public expenditure that may seem necessary. It affects the House and its affects the Senate, and we go along legislating and appropriating the public moneys on lines that we would not touch in times of peace. We are willing to make appropriations and authorize expenditures in time of war that we would not consider for a moment in time of peace.

Now, that condition is creditable to the general patriotic sentiment of the people of this country. But like everything else in life, it has its weaknesses. There are people among the 70,000,000 of population of the United States that stand ready to avail themselves of the patriotic sentiment of the country and get tacked on to the patriotic measures of the representatives of the people that which ought not to be enacted into law, for their own benefit. And when the war is over and they have fastened themselves like barnacles or leeches on the body politic, on the great patriotic measures which have been enacted in support of the people, we find them, the war being over, still hanging on, unworthy, from a patriotic standpoint, even to be mentioned, but ready to receive from the Treasury of the United States all they can possibly receive in the way of premiums, emoluments, or otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to abuse anyone or any committee for acts which I believe will not be of benefit to the people of this country. I am speaking now only of the facts as I find them. And I speak of these facts for the purpose of pointing out, if I may, the necessity of careful and thorough consideration of all such measures as that under consideration, especially in times like the present. Let us cut off the "barnacles" wherever we can and let the worthy measures go through.

Now, I made the point of order on the pending bill. I think that point of order was well taken. But I will admit it was on a provision that ought to be enacted into law, in my judgment. I will admit that.

For instance, the conference committee authorized the enlistment of certain marines—1,500, I think. That proposition was not in the Senate amendments to the House bill, nor was it in the House bill itself. But my information and belief is that the President ought to have the power to enlist them; and if it had not gone into the pending bill it would necessarily have been followed by a bill that would carry that provision.

Therefore I regretted to be compelled to make that point of order. But I thought I saw that I could accomplish what I desired to accomplish in that point of order in another way. And hence, under the circumstances, the agreement was entered into waiving the point of order, namely, that we might have the report disagreed to, and the particular item now under consideration discussed, and if disagreed to as to the item to which I refer, that the matter would go back to conference, and either this evening or Monday morning the conferees could meet again, and being instructed by the House touching the amendment which has been discussed to-day, they can bring in a report divested, if the House so desires, of this particular amendment. That is the present condition with reference to the amendment to which special exception has been taken.

Now, I do not want to arraign the Committee on Naval Affairs in the House for this amendment. They did not have anything to do with it, except to agree to it. It originated in the Senate. What is it? A matter of appropriation? No. It is a matter of bald legislation. Does it fight this war? No. Does it save a life? No. Does it take Havana? No. Does it enlist men? No. Does it pay men? No. What does it do, then? If it does none of these things, and was not in order in the Senate under their rules, and violates all our rules, and does not fight the war or the battles of the country, in the name of God what is it here for? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SIMPSON. It does not even kill a mule.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do you not think this legislation is vicious in this, that it makes a distinction between the officer and the private in the Navy?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes, it is vicious, in my opinion, from every standpoint.

Mr. GAINES. And does it not induce men to lose sight of the flag, and go into the patent business?

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will very quickly conclude what I want to say. What is the law? First, what is a patent? It is a creature of law that allows the citizen certain privileges. It lives by legislation. You could repeal the legislation in the twinkling of an eye, and your patents to everybody would be gone. But our policy has been to have legislation. It creates property in the patentee. Now, any citizen of the United States can obtain a patent if he has made a patentable invention. It is his.

Here are a small number of men in the Army and Navy. Under the policy of the Government they represent the arm of force. They are people who are set aside out of the ordinary avocations of life. You take the youth at 16—take him from his parents—and hundreds want to be taken where one can be taken. You send him to the Naval Academy. You educate him, pay him wages from the beginning, clothe him, teach him to be a good naval officer, giving him the highest grade of education. What for? To defend the country. That is our policy. You give him a commission when he graduates. He has a life place. When he comes to the age of 62 or 64 he goes upon the retired list, and from early youth to the grave he gets a compensation much greater than the average man in the United States gets in the private walks of life.

Take 25,000 men, or a much less number than that; but you may take all the naval officers and all the army officers, and take a similar number of boys as they start in civil life, and the naval and army officers have much the best compensation. Well, I am glad they have. It devotes them to the service of the Government. Now, they belong to the Government and the Government belongs to them, for their maintenance.

Now, we have a War Department and a Navy Department. We have a Secretary of War and a Secretary of the Navy from civil life. Who is at the head of the Bureau of Equipment? A naval officer. Who is at the head of the Bureau of Construction and Repair? A naval officer. Who is at the head of the Bureau of Yards and Docks? A naval officer. At every point in the Army and Navy is a trained army officer or naval officer who was educated by the Government. What is he there for? To direct the building of ships, the building of yards and docks——

Mr. SPALDING. And guns.

Mr. CANNON. And guns, and all that kind of thing. He is an expert. He is at the head. What does Secretary Long know about ships and guns? What does Secretary Alger or any other Secretary know about such things? Simply nothing—and they do not pretend to know about them. If you ask them a question, they say, "We will consult the Chief of Ordnance," if it is necessary to make guns. Or, if it is necessary to build ships, here is your naval constructor. Now, you want efficient men, you want honest men, you want men free from temptation; and we take them from this class of men whom the Government has educated. Now, what does this bill do? I hold in my hand a reference to the decision of the Supreme Court which says in substance that if an officer makes an invention in the line of his investigation, in the performance of his duty, that that invention, when the Government uses it, is the property of the Government, without pay—and that is right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But you say differently in the resolution you sent up to the desk.

Mr. CANNON. Let the gentleman read my resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. You say:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. You invited me to read it.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will turn over on the other side, he will see the resolution I offered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Oh, yes; but that was an afterthought. I mean your first resolution, in which you declared that the law should be amended.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, there is a resolution pending which I am talking about and which I had read at the commencement of my remarks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I know, but I am talking about your first resolution.

Mr. CANNON. What is the use in talking about last year's birds' nests? Let us talk about what is before the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I want to show how you shifted your ground.

Mr. CANNON. I am in favor of striking out this provision, because it is, in my opinion, an unwise and corrupting piece of legislation which is proposed here. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES. And the Senate report that I hold in my hand shows that fact, in the case of Commander Folger and the Harvey patent.

Mr. CANNON. Now, just listen a minute, and I will tell you why I think so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, without rising, made a remark.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend from Indiana will let me have the floor for a few minutes, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I beg the gentleman's pardon. My conversation was not directed to him. I did not intend to interrupt him.

Mr. CANNON. Now let me give you an instance, a case within my own knowledge and that of many other members of this House. Take Crozier and Buffington, two army officers—and mind you, the same provision is on the fortification bill, differing only in that one is for army officers and the other navy officers, in hæc verba. These are two very good army officers, one of them from the district of my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. Some years ago they were detailed by the Chief of Ordnance to experiment in the making of a disappearing carriage. They made disappearing carriages. That is the carriage that goes up and down with high-power guns.

On the experiments made in Government shops at Government expense that invention was made. There are people outside, many of them, who say that they have invented better disappearing carriages than the Crozier-Buffington carriages. My committee has been called upon to recommend their carriages in preference to the Crozier-Buffington carriages, and these parties claim that the Crozier-Buffington carriages were adopted by the Chief of Ordnance by favoritism. I do not know whether they are right or not. They are good disappearing carriages; but people in private life are making carriages which they say are equal to the Buffington and Crozier carriage.

Now, under the decision of the Supreme Court, if they get a patent they can not charge the Government one cent for the use of it by the United States. Why? Because it was the product of an investigation in the line of duty. Now, what does this provision do? This provision sends Buffington and Crozier into the Court of Claims, where they have not now a right to go any more than they have to go to heaven without dying, and the court may give them as much as they require. [Laughter.] Now, that is but an example of what comes under my knowledge. Oh, but I am told there are hundreds of honest men in the Army and Navy.

Now, mind you, the man that passes on every article in the construction of ships, of ordnance, of making ammunition, is an army or a navy officer, and it lets that same army or navy officer—if it is a construction or appliance that shall be used, invented even by himself, or, if it is not his own invention and is his brother officer's—it lets him determine on it, and you know the kindly feeling in professions of one with another. It gives him power to take the article that is invented by himself or brother officer and put it into the universal service of the Army or Navy, and lets him go to the Court of Claims; and when the Court of Claims renders a judgment, we have got to pay it. You know we pay judgments of the Court of Claims.

Now, as I say, it is true that there were other matters in this bill that I wanted to talk about and protest against. I have one in mind now where there is $450,000—put on by a Senate amendment, not by the House; the House was anxious to get it through and fight—where, by a Senate amendment, it is worse than thrown away; but when that $450,000 is thrown away we have merely lost the money. When you put this legislation on the statute books you put legislation there that demoralizes the Army and Navy and breaks down the spirit of honor in the service. Many army officers have said to me in the last two days, "I hope that legislation will not be enacted." I hope it will not be enacted!

One of them said, "We have hardly ever had a war but it has broken down the reputation of the ordnance officers." I guess Rodman was not a bad man; but we recollect all about that in our early life. The Chief of Ordnance at the close of the Mexican war absolutely anathematized, even without this legislation! They have got to pass upon the thing used. They have got to do the best they can, and when you say they must pass upon devices, they must, and when they pass upon them and use them as soon as the Court of Claims gives a hearing and renders a judgment, you do that which demoralizes the Army and Navy. Is there any statute of limitations here? No.

If this amendment should pass, for the first time the army and navy officer can go into the court and sue. His right of action has accrued, and as his right of action accrues when this bill is enacted, it would go back for fifty years. Now, when you shall have been here as long as I have, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, and you understand about the great number of people that are seeking to make a living by the practice of their professions, lawyers and otherwise, in the District of Columbia; when you realize what the atmosphere is that surrounds the Congress and surrounds the courts in the District of Columbia; when you realize that how to get money out of the Treasury by legislation or judgment or otherwise is virtue and not getting it out of the Treasury is vice [laughter]—in a local sense; I am not abusing the courts; it is the same about all capitals—I think when you realize all that, and when I say further that in my judgment with this legislation enacted, and its twin in the fortification bill, $25,000,000 will not pay the judgments of the Court of Claims first and last to be rendered. Although some may think it is a little thing, I have felt that it was my duty, without antagonizing anything or anybody, as an American Representative, to make the best fight I could to get that Senate amendment out, and I am going to ask this House to adopt that resolution, which is to insist on striking out this amendment, and let our conferees then, with the expression and instruction of the House, go back and meet the Senate conferees to-night or Monday and bring us this bill in with that amendment stricken out—and I have no doubt they can do that—and then the bill will be enacted, and the money can be got just as quick as it would if we voted down this amendment and agreed to the conference report to-night.

Now, I believe that is all I desire to say. I hesitate many times in the American Congress, representing 70,000,000 people, the greatest nation on earth, a nation in time of peace that collects and disburses way up toward $500,000,000—I hesitate many times before I speak of trifling matters or little things, but when a matter like this, that is an absolute elephant, comes here presented by another body and a demand made that before the war appropriations shall be written upon the statute books this corrupting elephant shall go through, I for one protest. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman if his resolution in the modified form strikes out this section?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Thirty-three minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, we have had for three hours a demonstration of how small a mouse can emerge from the traditional mountain in labor. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] who has just closed worked himself up to a fine frenzy of indignant eloquence over what he calls a bad and "corrupting" piece of legislation incorporated into the naval appropriation bill. It does not seem so to me. It seems to me to be a very innocent provision. It was a provision that the Senate had a right to put into the bill under its rule, and we found it there. It did not seem to us obnoxious in its appearance or purpose, and it did not appear to the conferees on the part of the House that it furnished any pretext for disagreement in the conference involving the vast interests that are carried in this bill.

It is very amusing to see how regularly a naval appropriation bill brings a certain coterie of opposition to its feet. It is an old story. There is something about a naval appropriation which operates upon the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations like a red rag upon an enraged bull. [Laughter.] The moment I take the floor and call for a vote on a naval appropriation, we hear a wail from the Appropriations Committee, and we all know what the cry means. It is a very simple thing.

It means that away back in the Forty-ninth Congress, under a Democratic Administration, it was found absolutely necessary to break the monopolistic control of all the appropriations for the entire Government service by the single Committee on Appropriations in the House, and to vest jurisdiction over some of the principal appropriation bills in the special committees having the time and opportunity to acquire some knowledge of the subjects-matter, which of course greatly decreased the power and pretensions of the members of the one committee that had previously spread itself out over the whole of the business affairs of the United States. That change, which has proved so beneficial to some of the most important branches of the public service, has been stubbornly resented and resisted ever since, and is the real cause of these periodical outbreaks of assault upon the other committees of the House. [Laughter.]

I am glad to hear the laughter come so spontaneously from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], because it enables me to say, what you have so often observed, that whenever an appropriation comes from anywhere but from that committee which the Hon. James B. Belford, of Colorado, used to designate as the "white-button mandarins of the House," it brings two members to their feet, one on either side of the Chamber. They seem to be hung on some kind of a pivot or axis. The movements of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] remind me on these occasions of one of those familiar toy barometers in which when the old man pops in the old woman pops out, and vice versa. [Great laughter.]

Now, we have heard a great deal about the conferees having perpetrated a great outrage on the House——

Mr. SIMPSON. "My conferees."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; you were not one of my conferees; but you said a while ago that you wanted to be, and I told you that we had cranks enough on the Naval Committee now. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON. I agree to that, and the majority of them are Republicans.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman need not explain; you can not paint the Kansas lily. Now, Mr. Speaker, I was amused when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] was claiming that the Naval Committee had done something, sometime, somewhere, in regard to some such measure as he says he was informed! A powerful argument! I do not know that the Naval Committee ever had this matter under discussion. I do not believe it ever did. I know it ought not to have it under the rules of this House.

But I do know, and most of the gentlemen who have talked on the other side of this question seemed to have forgotten, a fact which I have only been able to verify in detail within a few minutes, although I remembered it, that this great body of the House of Representatives in the very last Congress passed a bill recognizing every iota of the propositions involved in this paragraph of the conference report. I hold in my hand House bill 4175, introduced by Mr. HILBORN of California, January 16, 1896, and referred to the Committee on Patents, where it properly belonged, and it was reported to the House on the 28th of February, 1896, and referred to the House Calendar, and was passed by the House on January 18, 1897, by a unanimous vote, with all of our wise and distinguished lawyers presumably present.

Mr. OLMSTED. Was the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] present?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I presume the gentleman from Illinois was here and approved of it. That is the legal and parliamentary presumption. That bill was substantially the same as this provision, although not, in my judgment, so well guarded. It provided—

That whenever, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, the public interests will be promoted by the use in the naval service of devices covered by letters patent which may be hereafter issued to any officer of the Navy, whether retained in his ownership or assigned to others, the United States may acquire the right to use said device upon such terms or at such rate of compensation as may be determined to be just and equitable by a board of not less than three naval officers, appointed for the purpose by the Secretary of the Navy, and in determining the compensation to be paid by the United States for the assignment or for the use of such devices regard will be had to any facilities in originating the work or perfecting the invention which the inventor may have enjoyed by reason of his connection with the public service, and the decision of said board shall be subject to approval by the Secretary of the Navy.

That bill passed this House without a word of dissent from the lynx-eyed chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, neither Damon nor Pythias on either side of the Chamber uttering a word of disapproval, so far as I am aware. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. Allow me one inquiry. I understand that bill refers to any inventions hereafter made.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That does not help the House out much. I will print the text in full. The clause to which the gentleman refers was either a House or Senate amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I am speaking of the bill itself.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The bill as I read it contains as an amendment these words, "which may be hereafter."

Mr. BLAND. That is the law now, is it not?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; the bill did not pass the Senate. It passed this House in its original form.

Mr. BLAND. Do I understand the gentleman to say that that is the law now?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; that bill did not pass the Senate, although it was reported back to that body with an amendment from the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. This matter, as I understand, is covered now under the general law, the Supreme Court having held that officers of the Government are not divested of their rights in a patent because of their official position.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] disagrees with the Supreme Court.

Mr. CANNON. That is the gentleman's assumption. I have not disagreed with the court.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly you did. You stated the law on this floor directly to the contrary of the opinion of the court.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I make that statement the basis of what I heard stated here and heard read here this afternoon by the honorable gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], a distinguished lawyer whom I am not afraid to quote as authority and a gentleman who has had special experience as Solicitor-General of the Treasury Department, thus familiarizing himself with these matters of official decisions. I am not going to discuss this question——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The equally distinguished lawyer from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] also took that position. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to make a very able argument, but did not note that he cited the provisions of the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. He stated it while the gentleman from Illinois shook his finger under his nose.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am not going to argue this case at all. I think it is sufficiently clear to every right-minded man that the provision which is so seriously objected to simply furnishes a method of determining the degree and value of a right that is now guaranteed to these officers by the law of this country, and it certainly can work no injury to anybody. The adjudication of the Court of Claims in a case of this kind, like all the findings of that court, must come to Congress for appropriation. If there is any harm done by adopting this provision, if even my distinguished friend from Illinois can coin some new figment of the brain between now and next week or next month to scare us with, Congress will be here and we can amend this law if we so desire. That something of this kind ought to be done is, to my mind, obvious. But at any rate, I wish to impress upon this House the fact, which must be even more clear, that there is nothing threatening, dangerous, or iniquitous about this provision.

I will explain how the provisions became a part of this bill. The rules of the Senate are different from ours. The amendment was inserted in that body in the exercise of what it claims to be its parliamentary right, and for one I should not have felt justified in hazarding a disagreement or obstructing an agreement upon this great conference report for anything short of a matter of vital importance; and as we thought this measure was a legitimate one, we agreed to it.

I had no idea when the gentleman from Illinois started in here yesterday that he was going to focus his whole battle line upon this little provision. I did not know exactly where he was going to fire. That he would attempt to obstruct this conference report in some way I felt sure [laughter], because he is generically opposed to building up the great fighting force of the Navy. Yet I want to say, in my place here to-day, that if it were not for that class of our ships—the powerful battle ships of our service—for the construction of the first three of which, as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Fifty-first Congress, I had the honor to draft the legislation, which was enacted against the opposition of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Missouri—if it were not for those great battle ships to-day, the superiority of our Navy in power over even that of Spain would be an uncomfortable problem to solve.

The ships, Mr. Speaker, that are enabling us now to carry our flag, in full confidence of victory, are vessels for which, I may be permitted to say, I labored in season and out of season, and which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I think in every session of a Republican Congress, when we had to be responsible for the appropriations, labored to oppose.

I have no apology to make to-day to the American people or to the American Congress for my insistence at all times in pushing the construction of ships powerful enough to uphold our flag against the strongest vessels that can be brought against them in time of war. How the gentleman from Illinois may feel on this subject I know not; but I am sure that while I have been conservative in everything that has tended to rush this Government unprepared or half prepared into a great international strife that I earnestly believe might have been honorably and satisfactorily averted, some other gentlemen upon this floor, impatient for bloodshed at that time, now hesitate on the threshold, aye, after we have passed the threshold, and are delaying the necessary preparations for the work that must go forward; for it should be remembered that these war provisions must now be made, the work must be done, because the "Rubicon has been crossed."

Our men are already at the front, on the perilous edge of battle. It is no longer a question of discretion or alternatives. We have sat here and voted that our sailors and soldiers should imperil their lives in conflict, and our ships and men are alreday in battle array. You gentlemen have decreed this yourselves. You done it either from patriotic conviction, or you have done it like cowards, sending other men to encounter dangers from which you are exempt. Will you sit here and haggle and quibble and dicker about sending them supplies and reenforcements with which to conduct the struggle into which you have plunged them? Will you stand and deny them or delay the essential support for which demand is made upon this Government?

Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to adopt the report of the conference committee——

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I would like to interrupt the gentleman to ask if he proposes to say that because the members of the House choose to oppose this single proposition we are not prepared and have not been prepared from the very first to vote all of the supplies that are necessary? On the contrary, let me tell the gentleman that we have voted everything that was asked.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to proceed——

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. And do you propose to charge the whole House with opposition to the preparations for necessary war measures because they oppose this single item?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask the House to adopt the report which the committee of conference have brought in, to strengthen the Navy along the lines that the most careful consideration has demonstrated to be necessary for its support in a time like this.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. We have been entirely willing to support the Government, and are willing to do so in every way.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine (continuing). And this objection to matters of minor importance does not, in my judgment, afford a reasonable ground for objection to the pending report, which seeks only to fortify the power of the nation in this time of war. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I beg to decline. I have but a few minutes of my time remaining.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad, and the people of the country are glad, that the American Congress has not always followed the counsels of those men who are so constantly found opposing the strengthening of our Navy. When we brought the appropriation bill originally into the House a short time ago, the gentleman from Illinois was promptly on his feet with his ally and squire behind him, seeking to strike from the bill its vital portions, seeking to strike out part of the provision for the great ships on which we rely to-day against Spain, and on which we must rely in the to-morrows, if perchance we shall come in conflict with some other and more powerful nation than that which now confronts us.

I do not forget that we have not done all that we should do. I may not have come up to the full measure of my own public duty in this regard, but I can claim that I have done something; and while I was opposed, as I always have been opposed, to war when it can be honorably avoided, I am glad to know that to-day, away down there in the Caribbean Sea, the Navy of the United States is of a character at least to give reasonable sense of security as to the outcome of conflict with that nation with which we are now at war.

Let me tell you briefly what the change has been in our Navy in comparatively few years. Fifteen years ago the "Star-Spangled Banner" was not flying on a single modern ship of war, not one. We had not a modern gun afloat in the Navy of the United States. We could not make a ton of armor in this country. In fifteen years, while we have not done all that we ought to have done in that direction, we have at least accomplished a notable work, for the character of which we have no reason to feel ashamed. In that period the total appropriations for the naval service of the United States, that is, for the regular expenses of the service and the construction of ships and ordnance, has amounted to $387,987,840, including the present bill. During that time, in the five years in which it has been my privilege as chairman to present the naval appropriation bills to the House, we have appropriated $172,688,000, or almost 50 per cent of the whole amount which has been provided for this purpose in one-third of the whole period.

During that time we have increased the authorization of vessels of the new Navy, including those in the present bill, by 258,014 tons, and of that amount it has been my pleasure to introduce bills that have finally carried 130,860 tons, nearly 51 per cent, in three years.

The appropriations for the increase of the Navy during that period, including the present bill, have been $151,117,597, and the bills reported from the committee of which I have been chairman have in five years carried $73,862,647, or nearly one half.

The increase of the naval force of enlisted men during the fifteen years has been 5,500 men, of which the committee of which I was chairman have provided 4,750 of the men in three years, an increase without regard to the exigency provision in the present bill.

When we come to the increase of the armament of the Navy in fifteen years, starting from a condition where we had not a single modern gun afloat, we have put afloat and authorized, including the provisions of this present bill, a Navy capable of throwing at every full discharge of its guns 122,260 pounds of metal; and of that amount, the ships that have been authorized by the committee during the five years of my chairmanship have put afloat and will put afloat, in the vessels completed and authorized, guns capable of 63,928 pounds of all-round fire at every discharge, or more than one-half.

The number of ships shows a similar proportion. We have built in fifteen years' time 114 vessels of all classes, of which 57, or precisely 50 per cent, have been reported and authorized in bills originated in the committee while I have been chairman in one-third of that time.

Of torpedo boats and destroyers there have been 63 authorized, of which 51 have been authorized in the five years specified. And the record shows that the first torpedo cruiser authorized in this country was authorized in the same appropriation that carried the first 3 battle ships in the Fifty-first Congress.

I may also be permitted to note that of the 4 first-class battle ships in commission to-day—the Indiana, Massachusetts, Oregon, and Iowa—3 of them were provided, and of the 12 battle ships authorized to date, no less than 9 have been provided for in bills that I have had the honor to report to the House.

In presenting this summary of my stewardship I make no claim to undue personal credit, for every member of the committees with whom I have been associated has been zealous, industrious, and earnest in promoting the great work accomplished, while much admirable work has been done under the other distinguished chairmen with whom I have served.

The Senate committees are also entitled to full recognition for their liberal share in what has been achieved, and I make full acknowledgment of the valuable services of all the patriotic legislators and others who have contributed to such gratifying progress in the building of our new Navy.

Mr. Speaker, I have no apology to make for the amount carried by this conference report. We have sought to meet the exigencies of the occasion as they appealed to us. We have had only a purpose to strengthen the Navy in every part and in every arm. To-day the brave sailors on our ships are awaiting the response of the American Congress to their needs. To-day the recruiting officers are waiting for the authority conferred in this bill. To-day every patriotic heart in this great country of ours is looking to Washington to note the promptness and enthusiasm with which the great popular branch of our National Legislature shall respond to the demands of the hour for the support of those we have sent to the front.

Every breeze that comes from the south or from the far islands of the Pacific may come freighted with the roar of the cannon of our Navy in hostile encounter with those of Spain. Every tick of the telegraph may bring to us news of gravest import. To-day we are informed that the Government of Spain has its fleet upon the high seas bound no one knows whither, but with no proclaimed enemy except the United States.

I ask this House in this solemn situation not to hesitate, not to delay, but to respond to the demand of the people and the demand of the occasion by passing promptly and heartily the bill of supplies which now rests upon the Speaker's table. [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House that the House conferees insist upon Senate amendment No. 22 being stricken out, and not agree to the same.

The question being taken, Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine demanded the yeas and nays, but withdrew the request and demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 118, noes 42.

Accordingly the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask if the Chair holds, as I assume he does, that that is equivalent to a disagreement? What is the will of the body in regard to the conference report?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can move that the Senate be asked for a further conference.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat troubled by a grave doubt as to what the House wants. I have no preference about the matter.

The SPEAKER. The usual course is to move for a further conference.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask the Senate for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The House having insisted upon its rejection of the conference report, the gentleman from Maine moves that the House request a further conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, Mr. HILBORN, and Mr. CUMMINGS.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the sundry civil appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments thereto, and to recommend nonconcurrence in all of the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, reports back the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, and moves nonconcurrence in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Is this the stage at which to ask for a conference?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hope this is an honest bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I will say, Mr. Speaker, as I move to request a conference with the Senate, that no bill from the Committee on Appropriations, in conference or at any stage of its consideration, has ever been used as a vehicle for a discourteous answer to any member of the House. I move that the House ask for a conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CANNON, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, and Mr. SAYERS.

MOTION TO RECONSIDER.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 5880) to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia control of street parking in said District was passed.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to dispose of that motion now?

Mr. JENKINS. I am perfectly willing to take it up now.

The SPEAKER. It would be in order, if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is a Senate amendment, and all the gentleman desires to do is to have the bill referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JENKINS. If the motion can be entered, I will let it go over until Monday morning.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 5512) granting to the Chattanooga Rapid Transit Company the right to cross, with its track, the Dry Valley road to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park; when the Speaker signed the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CARMACK (on the request of Mr. MCMILLIN), indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. WEAVER (on request of Mr. BROWN), indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

To Mr. BODINE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. MILLS, for twelve days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. FARIS, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. COWHERD, for ten days, on account of important business.

NAVAL BATTALION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's desk the bill S. 1316 for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the companies of volunteer militia now authorized in the District of Columbia there may be organized not more than 4 companies of naval militia, which shall constitute a battalion to be known as the naval battalion of the National Guard of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the officers of the naval battalion shall consist of 1 commander, and a staff to consist of 1 executive officer with the rank of lieutenant-commander, 1 navigating officer with the rank of lieutenant, 1 signal, ordnance, and equipment officer with the rank of lieutenant, 1 chief engineer, 1 paymaster, and 1 surgeon, each with the relative rank of lieutenant.

SEC. 3. That each company shall consist of 1 lieutenant, 1 lieutenant, junior grade, 2 ensigns, and not less than 60 nor more than 100 petty officers and enlisted men.

SEC. 4. That in all matters not otherwise specially provided for, the provisions of law which provide for the organization of the militia of the District of Columbia shall apply to the naval battalion.

SEC. 5. That general routine of duty, discipline, and exercises of the naval battalion, and parts thereof, shall conform with the laws, customs, and usages of the Navy, as far as the same apply, and where they do not apply then such routine of duty, discipline, and exercises shall conform to the laws governing the volunteer forces of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers his bill with the following amendments.

Mr. HILBORN. To satisfy the objections of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 1, line 3, strike out the following words: "in addition to the companies of" and insert the following words: "as a part of the."

Also, in section 2, line 10, the word "relative" be stricken out.

Mr. BAILEY. With those amendments I think the bill is a proper one, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HILBORN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HILBORN. Now I ask that the bill H. R. 1152, which is identical with this, and which has been reported back with a favorable recommendation by the Naval Committee, be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of John Griffin and Sarah Griffin against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an urgent estimate of deficiency in the appropriation "Pay, miscellaneous" for the current fiscal year—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an urgent estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for contingent expenses, Navy Department, for the current fiscal year—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriation for defraying the expenses of collecting the customs revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. JENKINS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1910) conferring on the supreme court of the District of Columbia jurisdiction to take proof of the execution of wills affecting real estate, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1235); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CORLISS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4361) amending "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine-Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1238); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. Res. 117) directing a suitable shaft to be placed at the grave of John Tyler, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1236); which said resolution and report were referred to the Union Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. EVANS: A bill (H. R. 10182) to amend the internal-revenue laws relating to distilled spirits, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MUDD (by request): A bill (H. R. 10183) to provide for the payment of Northern Liberty Market House claims against the District of Columbia by drawback certificates—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 10184) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make certain disposition of condemned ordnance, guns, and cannon balls in their respective Departments," approved May 22, 1896—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BROUSSARD: A bill (H. R. 10185) for the relief of Eugene Augustin Bourcy, of St. Martin Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CASTLE: A bill (H. R. 10186) to increase the pension of Henry C. Ray—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 10187) for the relief of J. B. McCall—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DORR: A bill (H. R. 10188) to relieve Anderson Walker from the charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10189) granting a pension to J. B. Garvey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10190) granting an increase of pension to Michael Matheney, late of Company E, Thirteenth West Virginia Infantry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EVANS: A bill (H. R. 10191) granting a pension to Herman Fiescher, of Louisville, Ky.—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAY: A bill (H. R. 10192) for the relief of Henry Doll, of Shenandoah County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HENRY of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 10193) for the relief of the estate of William E. Bolls, deceased, late of Jefferson County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HEPBURN: A bill (H. R. 10194) to place on the muster roll the name of Francis M. Miller—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KNOWLES: A bill (H. R. 10195) granting a pension to James Parsloe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEWIS of Washington: A bill (H. R. 10196) to relieve Thomas Hayne, of the State of Washington—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELKNAP: Three petitions of business firms and citizens of Chicago, Ill., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7130 and Senate bill No. 1575, relating to ticket brokerage—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, 58 petitions of business firms and citizens of Chicago, Ill., in opposition to the so-called anti-scalping bill or any similar measure—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BUTLER: Petitions of Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Whitford and Concord, Pa., favoring bills to raise the age of protection for girls, to forbid the interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph, and in favor of a bill to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Concord, Whitford, and Kennett, Pa., Rev. J. H. Earps, Rev. R. A. Hunter, and other citizens of Kennett, Pa., favoring the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 2, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on motion of Mr. TURPIE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair makes the appointment of a special committee to whom shall be submitted the schedule of papers and documents on the files of the Treasury Department which are not needed in the transaction of public business and have no permanent value or historical interest. April 16 and April 21 the Secretary of the Treasury sent communications to the Senate giving a list of such useless papers and papers without value. Under the law the Chair is required to appoint a committee of two Senators to act in conjunction with a similar committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom the papers or schedules shall be referred. In obedience to that law, the Chair appoints the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] as the committee to whom this reference shall be made. If there is no objection, there will be a transfer of the reference heretofore made from the Committee on Finance to the special committee now appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed with amendments the bill (S. 1316) to provide for organizing a naval battalion in the District of Columbia in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill; asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, Mr. HILBORN, and Mr. CUMMINGS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8426) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, and Mr. SAYERS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 2691) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to grant to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;" and

A bill (H. R. 5880) to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia control of street parking in said District.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print and bind 3,000 copies of Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 67, Fifty-second Congress, second session, being a compilation of Senate election cases from 1789 to the close of the present session of Congress.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 409) to prevent the adulteration of candy in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 1263) for the relief of John Fox;

A bill (H. R. 5457) for the relief of Richard Kennish;

A bill (H. R. 5511) granting to the Chattanooga Rapid Transit Company the right to cross with its track the Dry Valley road to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park;

A bill (H. R. 8738) for the survey of the pass leading from the Gulf of Mexico into Horn Island Harbor, Mississippi, and a survey of said harbor;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 24) relative to the medal of honor authorized by the acts of December 21, 1861, and July 16, 1862;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 119) for the improvement of Humboldt Harbor, California; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 149) directing the Secretary of War to submit plans and estimates for the proposed improvement of Hillsboro Bay, Florida, from its confluence with Tampa Bay, through Hillsboro Bay and River to the city of Tampa.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the naval appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, and requesting a further conference with the Senate.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate further insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference; and Mr. HALE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

DISTRICT NAVAL BATTALION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1316) to provide for organizing a naval battalion in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendments and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. SMITH were appointed.

of the Christian Endeavor Society of St. Paul, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Otoe, Surprise, St. Paul, and Beatrice; of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Beatrice, the First Presbyterian Church of Beatrice, and the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Church of God of St. Paul, and of the Christian Endeavor Society of St. Paul, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented sundry papers in support of the bill (S. 4461) for the retirement of Maj. W. W. Lowe; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STEWART. I am authorized by the Committee on Claims to submit a supplemental report on the bill (S. 3545) for the adjustment and payment of certain claims against the Government of the United States, providing for the payment of the California, Oregon, and Nevada war claims. The bill has been heretofore reported from that committee. I move that the report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4159) relative to the payment of claims for material and labor furnished for District of Columbia buildings, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4457) to provide for the establishment of building lines on certain streets in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4434) authorizing the attorney for the District of Columbia and his assistants to administer oaths and affirmations, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5370) relating to negotiable instruments within the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6468) authorizing the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias to erect and maintain a sanitarium and bath house on the Government reservation at the city of Hot Springs, Ark., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4936) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes, to report it with an amendment striking out the House bill and inserting what is known as the omnibus bill, the bill (S. 3545) for the adjustment and payment of certain claims against the Government of the United States. I ask that the index attached to the Senate bill may also be printed with this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the order will be made and the bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. McLAURIN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3391) for the relief of W. H. Barnard and Robert Thomas, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4200) for the relief of Huff Jones for breach of contract with Indian agent, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9956) granting the Santa Fe and Grand Canyon Railroad Company right of way for railroad purposes through the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve in northern Arizona, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. QUAY. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9008) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report and accompanying papers, which I ask be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed under the rule and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 4522) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Ogden, in the State of Utah; which was read twice by its title.

MAPS AND CHARTS OF ALASKA.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed in pamphlet form 1,000 copies of the Descriptive Catalogue of Maps and Charts of Alaska and Adjacent Regions now in the Library of Congress, 500 copies for the use of the Senate and 500 copies for the use of the Library of Congress.

RIGHT OF WAY UPON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PASCO. On the 14th of March the bill (H. R. 1595) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, was passed by the Senate with some amendments. It was sent over to the House and subsequently recalled on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. When recalled, a motion was made to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading, and it was referred back to the Committee on Public Lands. I am now instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report the bill back to the Senate with the recommendation that the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be nonconcurred in and that the bill be passed as it came from the House. I ask that the measure be now considered, as it has been delayed for some time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of House bill 1595, reported by the Senator from Florida from the Committee on Public Lands?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate, and the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendments be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Page 3, line 27, after "irrigation," strike out the period and quotation marks and insert: "; Provided, That nothing in this act or the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled 'An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes,' or the act approved January 21, 1895, entitled 'An act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes,' or the act approved February 26, 1897, entitled 'An act to provide for the use and occupation of reservoir rights reserved,' shall be so construed as to authorize the appropriation or storage of the waters of any stream or river, State, interstate, or international, to which others below have right by prior appropriation, or the obstruction or interference with the navigable capacity of such streams or rivers; and such appropriation or storage, obstruction or interference, is hereby prohibited."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks that the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be nonconcurred in.

The amendments were nonconcurred in.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest that the bill should be read now as amended.

Mr. PASCO. It is now exactly as it came from the House. No amendment has been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is precisely in the form in which it was sent from the House.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Very well.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUARTERMASTER'S SUPPLIES, ETC.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes, to report it with certain amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered now. It is a war measure and is needed every day.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 1, line 4, to strike out the first word "it," before "is;" in the same line, after "suspended," to strike out "in the discretion of the Secretary of War;" and in line 5, after the word "war," to strike out "with Spain;" so as to read:

That the operation of the following provisions of law be, and is hereby, suspended during the existing war, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "appropriation" and insert "appropriations;" so as to read:

First. The provision of the first section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," in the following words:

"Provided, That hereafter no part of this appropriation shall be expended in the purchase for the Army of draught animals until the number on hand shall be reduced to 5,000, and thereafter shall only be expended for the purchase of a number sufficient to keep the supply up to 5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "The," to strike out "provision" and insert "provisions;" and in line 4 to strike out "appropriation" and insert "appropriations;" so as to read:

Second. The provisions of the first section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes," in the following words:

"Provided, That hereafter no part of the appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department shall be expended on printing, unless the same shall be done by contract, after due notice and competition, except in such cases as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice for competition: Provided further, That after advertisement all the supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army, and of the branches of the Army service, shall hereafter be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, in the markets of the United States, quality and cost of transportation and the interest of the Government considered, except that purchases may be made in open market, in the manner common among business men, when the aggregate amount required does not exceed $200, but every such purchase shall be immediately reported to the Secretary of War."

And the words:

"Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number on hand, shall not at any time exceed the number of enlisted men and Indian scouts in the mounted service, and that no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster's Department, and an inspection by such Department, all under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War."

And the words:

"Provided, That no more than $1,000,000 of the sums appropriated by this act shall be paid out for the services of civilian employees in the Quartermaster's Department, including those heretofore paid out of the funds appropriated for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, army transportation, clothing, camp and garrison equipage; that no employee paid therefrom shall receive a salary more than $150 per month, unless the same shall be specially fixed by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 16, to insert:

Third. Section 3709, Revised Statutes, so far as the same relates to the bureaus of the War Department, and all branches of the Army.

Fourth. All that portion of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes," which requires purchases of amounts less than $200, made without advertising, to be immediately reported to the Secretary of War.

Fifth. So much of the act approved March 15, 1898, entitled "An act making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes," as provides that all employees for the Record and Pension Office of the War Department shall be exclusively engaged on the work of that office.

Sixth. So much of the act approved March 15, 1898, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899," under the heading Ordnance Department, as provides that not more than $65,000 of the money appropriated for the Ordnance Department in all its branches shall be applied to the payment of civilian clerks in said Department.

And be it further enacted, That during the existing war materials required by the War Department may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be purchased abroad and shall be admitted free of duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the War Department, and for other purposes."

RELIEF OF MINERS FROM ASSESSMENT WORK.

Mr. STEWART. I am directed by the Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4439) to relieve owners of mining claims who enlist in the military service of the United States for duty in the war with Spain from performing assessment work during such term of service, to report it without amendment. No one can object to the bill. I have received several telegrams hurrying it up. It is said that some miners hesitate about leaving their claims and are anxious to have the bill immediately passed. I therefore ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which require that on each claim located after the 10th day of May, 1872, and until patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year, shall not apply to claims owned by persons who may enlist in the Volunteer Army of the United States for service in a war between this country and Spain, so that no mining claim owned by such person which has been regularly located and recorded as required by the local laws and mining regulations shall be subject to forfeiture for nonperformance of the annual assessments during the time such owner is in the military service of the Government as aforesaid.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILSON. There is certainly no objection to the passage of this bill, but I think a provision might also be made for the homesteaders upon the public domain in the same way that we are providing for those having mineral locations. It seems to me that if we pass a bill making provision for miners who have mineral locations, we should also provide for those who have taken up lands upon the public domain which are liable to be contested or jumped if they should enlist. I think that they should also be protected during the term of their enlistment.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Washington propose an amendment?

Mr. WILSON. I have prepared no amendment, because the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining has suggested that I move no amendment to this bill, leaving it to provide solely for those having mining locations. But we ought to provide at the earliest moment for those taking up lands under the public-land laws of the United States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. Is it not the existing law that if such a person enters the service of the United States the time runs in his favor?

Mr. WILSON. I think not. I think under the existing law any person serving in the late war is entitled to time, but I think their claims are liable to be jumped within six months after abandonment.

Mr. STEWART. That matter can be looked into and another bill passed. There will be no opposition to such a bill when it comes up. I think it a very proper measure. But I should like to have this bill passed, because the miners are very anxious about its early passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of William H. Fore, alias James Keeny, Battery M, Second Missouri Light Artillery, and Company C, One hundred and fifty-fourth Illinois Infantry, now of Rolla, Mo., praying for the removal of the charge of desertion, together with the affidavits of R. M. Husky, W. M. Fore, Saby Fore, and John Earp. I ask that the petition and affidavits be referred, together with the bill which I introduce, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 4510) to correct the military record of William H. Fore was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HANNA introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4511) granting a pension to Adelaide Harger (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4512) granting a pension to Josephus Goble (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4513) granting an increase of pension to Martha A. Gould (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 4514) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Lawrence (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4515) granting a pension to Elizabeth Hatfield (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. HANNA introduced a bill (S. 4516) to correct the military record of William P. Dodd; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4517) placing upon the military rolls the names of Jackson M. Leland and others; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 4518) to provide for enlisting inhabitants of Cuba in the Army of the United States and accepting the services of Cuban volunteers during the existing war, and for relieving destitute women and children in Cuba, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 4519) for the relief of August Bolten and Gustav Richelieu; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WOLCOTT introduced a bill (S. 4520) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint additional privates; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 4521) to amend the immigration laws of the United States relative to the insane; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 4522) to purchase a copy of the first print of the Laws of the United States of 1791 for preservation in the Library of Congress; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENT TO REVENUE BILL.

Mr. MILLS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McBRIDE submitted an amendment relative to the payment of unofficial fees collected by Owen N. Denny, formerly consul-general at Shanghai, China, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

THE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask leave for the Committee on Finance to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

On motion of Mr. TURPIE, it was Ordered, That Mr. CHILTON be appointed a member of the Committee on Finance in place of Mr. Walthall, lately deceased.

RAILWAY RATES.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of so much of the testimony given before the commission on December 6, 1897, by Milton H. Smith, president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, as relates to railway rates and charges, free transportation over railways, and the regulation of railways.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 4, 11, 23, 27, 28, 30, and 54.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 41, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 73, and 74, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And whenever, within the next twelve months, an exigency may exist which, in the judgment of the President, renders their services necessary, he is hereby authorized to appoint from civil life and commission such officers of the line and staff, not above the rank or relative rank of commander, and warrant officers, including warrant machinists, and such officers of the Marine Corps, not above the rank of captain, to be appointed from the noncommissioned officers of the corps and from civil life, as may be requisite: Provided, That such officers shall serve only during the continuance of the exigency under which their services are required in the existing war: And provided further, That such officers so appointed shall be assigned to duty with rank and pay of the grades established by existing law; and warrant machinists shall be paid at the rate of $1,200 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Navy to enlist, at any time after the passage of this act, as many additional seamen, landsmen, and boys as he may deem necessary to man the ships of the Navy, or in use by the Navy as a temporary force therefor during the existing war, and for pay of the same and of the temporary additional officers and warrant machinists hereinbefore authorized, $3,830,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and to enable the Secretary of the Navy to enlist, at any time after the passage of this act, the following additional force for the Marine Corps as a temporary force during the existing war, namely, not more than 60 gunnery sergeants with rank of first sergeants, not more than 80 corporals, and not more than 1,500 privates; and for pay of the same, including the temporary additional officers hereinbefore authorized, and for provisions, clothing, fuel, military stores, transportation and recruiting, and for contingent expenses on account of said additional force, $567,900, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "; in all, torpedo station, $97,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to build one of said docks of granite or concrete faced with granite, and in such case the limit of the cost of said dock is increased $200,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "of domestic manufacture;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 5 and 6 of said amendment strike out the words "Sabine Pass, Tex., or in the waters adjacent thereto," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in the harbor of Sabine Pass, or the waters tributary thereto, Texas;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "That hereafter all first-class battle ships and monitors owned by the United States shall be named for the States, and shall not be named for any city, place, or person until the names of the States shall have been exhausted: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to interfere with the names of States already assigned to any such battle ship or monitor;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
M. S. QUAY,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. A. BOUTELLE,
S. G. HILBORN,
A. J. CUMMINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

ESTATE OF ISAAC P. TICE.

Mr. GALLINGER. A few days ago I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2219) for the relief of the administrators of Isaac P. Tice, deceased, and others. The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] objected, but since then has withdrawn his objection and is willing that the bill shall be passed. The bill was read on the former occasion. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVENUE MEASURES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], that the bonded indebtedness of the United States should not be increased, but that the necessary means to carry on the war against Spain should be raised by increasing the revenues of the Government, including a tax on incomes, etc.; which resolution comes over from Thursday last.

Mr. HALE. What is that resolution, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A resolution offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. BUTLER April 28, 1898, as follows:

Resolved, That the bonded indebtedness of the United States should not be increased, but that the necessary means to carry on the war against Spain should be raised by increasing the revenues of the Government, including a tax on incomes, and by issuing silver certificates against the seigniorage now in the Treasury, and by such additional issues of United States legal-tender notes as may be necessary.

Mr. HALE. That resolution should either be referred to the Committee on Finance or go to the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. It should go to the Committee on Finance, because that committee are now engaged in the consideration of this very question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the proposed reference? The Senator who introduced the resolution is out of his seat.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest that the resolution should lie over without prejudice until the Senator who introduced it is present in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to the resolution going over; but manifestly it should be referred to the Committee on Finance, who are considering that very question.

Mr. BUTLER entered the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina is now present, and the Chair lays the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I had intended to discuss at some length the important questions covered by this resolution. I had intended to show that there was no necessity to issue interest-bearing bonds to carry on the war with Spain. I had intended to show that methods set forth in this resolution would raise all the funds necessary without issuing a single bond. I had intended in advance of action on the war-revenue measure to state the position of myself and others who oppose bonds, but stand ready to uphold the hands of the Administration and do our full duty for the protection of the flag, to avenge the Maine, and to free Cuba by voting all necessary revenues. But I will reserve my discussion of these questions until the Senate Finance Committee report the war-revenue bill and let this resolution be referred to that committee.

I would let the resolution pass to the Committee on Finance at once were it not that some of our enterprising newspapers have already decided for us these grave questions before we have had a chance to act upon them. They have informed the Senate and the country what we will do; they have informed the country that the Senate will authorize the issue of $500,000,000 of bonds, and that those who are opposed to bonds will be satisfied with a feeble protest and will retreat at the first opportunity. In other words, that we will play Spanish. I do not believe this.

Mr. President, there is not only no necessity for issuing bonds, but they will not be issued if every man in this body who is on record as opposing bonds and who wants his constituents to believe that he is opposed to the issuing of interest-bearing bonds has the courage and the patriotism and the manhood to do his duty. If there are some who want to find an excuse; if there are some who want to throw up their hands and say, "We are opposed to bonds, but we are afraid somebody will say we are unpatriotic in case we should say we are opposed to them now;" if there are such weaklings in Congress, then no doubt they will seize this opportunity to desert to the enemies of humanity. But if there are such, how did the bond syndicate locate them before anyone else? The Republican party, which is owned by the money changers, is not supposed to have a majority in this Senate, but if this infamous bond scheme passes, then it will be clear that they have a working majority; and if the Republican machine secures enough allies to give them a majority, then it is as inevitable as fate that $500,000,000 of bonds or more will be issued; that we are to tax future generations for the carrying on of a war against a third-rate power that we would have already defeated if we had turned loose our dogs of war and allowed Captain Sampson to do what Commodore Dewey did so bravely and gallantly on yesterday.

Mr. President, there is no necessity for delaying this war. We have ample revenues now in the Treasury to push it to a successful conclusion; in fact, if we would allow our sailors and those in charge of our war vessels to move on the enemy, this war would be over before the bondholders' conspiracy could be put through this Congress.

There has appeared no explanation for issuing bonds except to furnish investments for money sharks and speculators. There has appeared no explanation for delaying action on the part of our Navy unless we want to put through this bond scheme before the close, or unless we want to give the guns of Morro Castle a chance to help the Spanish fleet, as the guns of Spanish forts at the Philippine Islands attempted to do yesterday.

I am in favor of running this war in the way Abraham Lincoln conducted the last. The same swarm of money-lenders, of interest-grabbers, hung around the Capitol and around the President in 1860 and 1861 and 1862 and 1863. The reply of a true American to their demands was to call upon Congress to use its sovereign power to furnish the sinews of war. Congress responded. Shall we prove ourselves less patriotic, are we less wise than Abraham Lincoln. Have his so-called followers deserted his creed? Will the Republican party be the first to repudiate the patriotic position of Abraham Lincoln? The members of the party to which I belong, and nearly all the other Congressmen and Senators from the South, who at that time were fighting for the Southern cause, are to-day in the front ranks to fight under the flag of the Union and to carry on the war as Lincoln carried on the last war.

Gladstone, the greatest statesman the world ever produced, is unfortunately to-day lying at death's door in England, but his wisdom will not depart. Let us profit by it. He always advised England not to mortgage future generations to carry on a war, but laid down the sound doctrine that England was able to pay as she went, and in logic that never will be answered he showed the wisdom of such a course. At the opening of the Crimean war Disraeli wanted to issue bonds and borrow money to carry on the war. But Mr. Gladstone, who was chancellor of the exchequer, combatted the bond scheme and defeated Mr. Disraeli, who looked at the question from the standpoint of the money lender—the Rothschilds.

How did Mr. Gladstone provide for raising the money to carry on the war? In his first budget he took the position that, war or no war, the national debt of Great Britain should not be increased, but that the cost of supporting the British army in Asia should be met year by year by an increase in the income taxes and excises. Now let us be wise enough to adopt a similar course. It is common sense and justice on one side and the bond grabbers on the other.

Mr. President, if the wealth of this country was paying the same rate of taxation that the average man pays—if the men who are worth millions were paying as much tax in proportion to their wealth as the man who is worth only a thousand dollars is paying; we would raise in one year's taxes more than twice enough money to carry on this war. Those who do not fight should certainly pay as much as those who do fight.

Mr. President, the press has informed us that the Finance Committee will strike out the bond feature of the war-revenue bill and report it to the Senate with an income-tax provision, or some other provisions to raise sufficient revenue and to provide for an issue of legal-tender notes. They inform us in the next breath that the Senate will reject the advice and the amendments of the committee and will restore the bond provision. I myself have been quoted as saying that no serious opposition would be made to the war-revenue bill with this bond provision in it. That is incorrect. I shall not take the time of the Senate further now; but I will say that I for one will use all the effort that is at my command to prevent the American people from being bonded and mortgaged, just as I have striven to prevent the Cubans from being bonded and mortgaged.

Although we are carrying on a war for humanity, to protect the Cubans from unjust taxation and from being bonded with an enormous debt, yet the first proposition in the interest of liberty is to bond our own people, to put a debt and mortgage upon them. I for one shall do all in my power to prevent it, and this Senate can prevent it, and not delay the war one hour. The bond syndicate may control the House, but let the Senate do its duty. If those who put bonds above human liberty want to deadlock this Government, let them do it and let them take the responsibility.

Mr. President, let the resolution go to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so referred, in the absence of objection.

HENRY ATKINSON.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of two pension bills. The cases are very urgent and the passage of the bills is a necessity. I should like to have them considered now. I first ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 1631) granting an increase of pension to Henry Atkinson.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry Atkinson, late of Company G, One hundred and eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BLANCHE E. BARLOW.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3350) granting a pension to Blanche E. Barlow.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "seventeen;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Blanche E. Barlow, widow of the late A. C. Barlow, surgeon Fourth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry and Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Blanche E. Barlow."

ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 27th ultimo approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 157) to increase the pension of Gen. James W. McMillan;

An act (S. 310) for the relief of Johnson Hays;

An act (S. 487) granting a pension to Delia Gilman;

An act (S. 499) granting a pension to Sarah R. Frary;

An act (S. 668) granting a pension to Frances E. Pease;

An act (S. 1450) granting a pension to Catharine Leary; and

An act (S. 3517) granting a pension to Rhoda Van Niman.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 28th ultimo approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 504) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Christine C. Barnard;

An act (S. 603) granting a pension to Clarissa E. Hobbs;

An act (S. 1345) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Brumm;

An act (S. 1466) granting an increase of pension to Ransom S. Angell;

An act (S. 1467) granting a pension to Adolphine Krez; and

An act (S. 1751) granting an increase of pension to Moses M. Crants.

The message further announced that the President of the United States had on the 29th ultimo approved and signed the bill (S. 3) to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas.

ARMY DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, a very important bill, the Army deficiency appropriation bill, passed the House of Representatives without opposition something more than an hour ago. It is being enrolled and will soon be in readiness to be sent to the Senate. As it is desirable that it shall be passed to-day, I ask that the Senate remain in session for a few moments until the bill is received.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator from Maine kindly tell us what the bill is?

Mr. HALE. The bill has not yet come here, but I know generally what its features are. It is a deficiency appropriation for Army pay and supplies and for expenses of all sorts made necessary by recent legislation and by the events of the war. It is a large bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. It carries appropriations for the Navy as well as the Army.

Mr. HALE. In anticipation of the bill being received here to-day, so far as it has been possible members of the Committee on Appropriations have examined it and find that it is in accordance with the estimates of the Department, and it is very desirable that it shall be passed to-day. Both the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and I have examined the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the Senator a copy of the bill as it passed the House of Representatives?

Mr. HALE. I have a copy, which I have no doubt is a copy of the bill as it passed the House, which was sent over whilst the bill was being considered by the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will say to the Senator that I have examined the bill as reported to the House of Representatives, and I understand it has been substantially passed by the House as it was reported, with one or two changes; and I believe those changes are in the direction of reducing the amount appropriated below the estimates of the Department. These estimates are only for such things as are absolutely necessary for the present prosecution of the war, and I hope that unanimous consent will be given for the consideration and passage of the bill without its being referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). There is at present no question before the Senate.

RECESS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate take a recess until 3 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 3 o'clock p. m., at which time it reassembled.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. HAWLEY and Mr. KENNEY members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the next annual examination of cadets at the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., under the requirements of section 1327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

VISITORS TO ANNAPOLIS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. CAFFERY and Mr. HALE members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the next annual examination of cadets at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., as required by the act of February 14, 1879.

COLUMBIA HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. FAULKNER a director on the part of the Senate of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the expiration of his term as director.

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. COCKRELL a director on the part of the Senate of the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. Walthall, late a Senator from the State of Mississippi.

ARBITRATION BETWEEN RAILWAY COMPANIES AND EMPLOYEES.

Mr. KYLE. If there is no other business before the Senate, I should like to ask present consideration for a bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

Mr. KYLE. The bill can be passed before the other bill gets here.

Mr. HALE. I will state that I have word from the Printing Office that the deficiency bill is almost or quite enrolled there and will be here in a few moments.

Mr. KYLE. I think the bill for which I ask consideration will take but a moment. I refer to the bill (S. 3662) concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees, reported unanimously by the Committee on Education and Labor. It proposes to create a voluntary board of arbitration. I think there can be no objection to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KYLE. I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3662) concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAY. I do not object to the bill, and I do not know but that I am in favor of it; but I think a measure of its importance ought to be considered when there is a larger attendance of the Senate than now, and I suggest to my friend the Senator from South Dakota that he let it go over until some more convenient season, when it can be considered.

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota to ask that the bill be made a special order, say for Monday or Tuesday next.

Mr. KYLE. I ask the consent of the Senate that the bill be made a special order for Monday next at 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request that the bill be made the special order for next Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

PRESIDENTIAL, VICE-PRESIDENTIAL, AND CONGRESSIONAL TERMS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that there may be added to the special order in relation to the joint resolution (S. R. 86) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the succession to the Presidency in a certain contingency, which is set for Wednesday, May 4, 1898, at 2 o'clock p. m., the joint resolution (S. R. 83) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and that it may be set for 3 o'clock on the same day.

This joint resolution will probably be considered in connection with the special order. It provides for making the Presidential and Congressional terms end on the last Wednesday in April instead of the 4th of March. It was reported by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] from the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I ask that it may be made the special order for 3 o'clock on Wednesday, May 4, with a view to the consideration of both joint resolutions at the same time. They naturally will be discussed and considered together. I do this by request of the senior Senator from Massachusetts now absent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire that the joint resolution (S. R. 83) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States be set for May 4 at 3 o'clock in the afternoon? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 413) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the moneys herein specified to the respective bands of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota according to their respective rights and interests.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been read and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NELSON. I move to strike out all after the word "forty-three," in line 8, section 1, down to and including the words "provided for," in line 15.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands from the desk that that amendment was proposed and adopted April 21, 1897.

Mr. NELSON. To correspond with that amendment, I move to amend the last section by striking out the word "thirty" in line 3, section 3, and inserting the word "nine," striking out the word "eight" in the same line and inserting the word "one," and striking out the word "four" in the same line and inserting the word "ninety-nine." It is to reduce the amount appropriated to correspond with the other amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, section 3, it is proposed to strike out the word "thirty" and insert "nine;" in the same line, to strike out the word "eight" and insert "one," and in the same line, to strike out "four" and insert "ninety-nine;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $109,199.72 for making the payments in this act authorized and directed to be made to said Indians as aforesaid.

Mr. COCKRELL. That makes the amounts correspond?

Mr. NELSON. It makes the amount correspond with the amount that will be left after striking out the second appropriation.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the first section?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. It says, "$2,497.11 now on deposit in the Treasury."

Mr. NELSON. The next paragraph.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then section 2 is to pay for damages by flowage of their lands?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; that is $25,000. The last part of section 1 is $81,702, as appears from the report. All that part relating to the difference between gold and paper payments is stricken out.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see. I understand the part stricken out was from the word "forty-three," in line 8, section 1, down to and including the words "provided for," in line 15.

Mr. NELSON. Exactly; that is it; and the sum in the last section was reduced to correspond with that amount.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

USE OF POSTAL CARDS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1596) to amend the postal laws relating to use of postal cards.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the 1st day of July, 1898, it shall be lawful to transmit by mail, at the postage rate of a cent apiece, payable by stamps to be affixed by the sender, and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, written messages on private mailing cards, such cards to be sent openly in the mails, to be no larger than the size fixed by the convention of the Universal Postal Union, and to be approximately of the same form, quality, and weight as the stamped postal card now in general use in the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the Senator from New Hampshire explain the effect of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. The postal cards now used are furnished by the Department. The bill simply provides that any person can supply his own card and put a 1-cent stamp on it and send it. It saves the Government the entire expense of printing and distributing the cards. Senators will notice that it is to be a card of the same size and is to conform to the regulations of the Post-Office Department. The only difference is that a 1-cent stamp is put upon it instead of using the existing cards. It is very simple.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does it enable the sender to put anything on the card? Can he put his card on it?

Mr. CHANDLER. Nothing on the front. On the front there must be simply the address. On the back the senders can print or write, as they do now, anything they choose. It seems to be absolutely simple and unobjectionable. It saves the Government the printing of the cards and saves the Government the great expense of transporting the cards from place to place.

Mr. SPOONER. May I ask the Senator if the bill has the approval of the Department?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think it has, entirely. I have not heard of any objection to it from any quarter. I think it is a bill that is conceded to be wise by every one.

Mr. SPOONER. It does have the approval of the Department?

Mr. CHANDLER. The report will show whether it is expressly approved or not, if the Senator will kindly have it read. It is not opposed by the Department. I am cautious when I answer the Senator from Wisconsin.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know why the Senator should be any more cautious in answering me than he ought to be in answering any other Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is a physicological problem which I shall not undertake to elucidate now. That is the fact, however.

Mr. HAWLEY. Perhaps the Senator from Wisconsin has not read the report in the case.

Mr. SPOONER. If I had read the report I should have known what is in it. I am asking only for information, and I ask what is in the report.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will just read it for your enlightenment.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator can do that better than any other Senator I know of.

Mr. HAWLEY. With the help of the Senator from New Hampshire. Here is the report:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1596) to amend the postal laws relating to the use of postal cards, beg leave to report that they have carefully considered the subject, and recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator consider that an approval?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not see that the Post-Office Department has approved it, and I very much doubt it, for this is a bill to reduce revenue, in my judgment.

Mr. HALE. Will it reduce revenue?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it will.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut is not heard at the desk.

Mr. HAWLEY. I said I thought it would reduce the revenue.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Connecticut means that more people will use the postal cards, I suppose—that more people will write their letters for 1 cent, if they can have their own cards and address them and write upon them and put the 1-cent stamp on them. That possibly may be true. If it is true that more people will write letters at 1 cent than now write them at 2, that is a great benefit to the people. The actual cost, however, of the postal-card transmission will be less, because the Government now prints the cards and sends them from the printing office to the Department or other depot, and then sends them out by mail all over the United States, of course paying for the transportation of the cards to the different points, and it furnishes them for nothing. The only cost is the 1 cent.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. Can the Senator tell me whether the postal-card arrangement now in use is self-sustaining?

Mr. CHANDLER. Necessarily it is not self-sustaining, because we get but 1 cent for the card and we furnish the card for the 1 cent, and it costs more to print the card than to furnish the stamp.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are nine private pension bills on the Calendar, and during this lull in business I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of that Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to proceeding temporarily to the Private Pension Calendar? The Chair hears no objection. The Secretary will report the first bill on the Private Pension Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill (S. 2919) granting a pension to Olivia Worden, widow of the late John L. Worden, United State Navy, be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SARAH HAMILTON.

The bill (S. 3466) granting a pension to Sarah Hamilton was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Sarah Hamilton, widow of Joseph Hamilton, late captain Company F, Second North Carolina Mounted Infantry, at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANN M. SMITH.

The bill (H. R. 9043) granting an increase of pension to Ann M. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Ann M. Smith, widow of the late Maj. Gen. Andrew J. Smith, and to pay her a pension of $30 per month in lieu of the pension she now receives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE H. BALDWIN.

The bill (H. R. 9210) granting an increase of pension to George H. Baldwin was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of George H. Baldwin, late second lieutenant Company F, Eighty-ninth New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LEAH L. PRICE.

The bill (S. 3693) granting an increase of pension to Leah L. Price was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Leah L. Price, widow of Rev. William Price, late chaplain of the Second Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $15 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEWIS KYLE.

The bill (S. 4248) for the relief of Lewis Kyle, of Milton, Pa., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, after the name "Kyle," to strike out "of Milton, Pa.;" in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "twenty-four;" and in line 9, after the word "month," to insert "in lieu of that he is now receiving;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lewis Kyle, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Lewis Kyle."

SARAH M. BENNETT.

The bill (S. 4476) granting a pension to Sarah M. Bennett was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Sarah M. Bennett, widow of Thomas Bennett, late boatswain in the United States Navy, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4468) to provide for a volunteer brigade of engineers, to report it with amendments. I was delaying it, having reference to some legislation elsewhere, but I am informed that it is desirable to pass the bill now. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill and consider it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the bill be read, subject to objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the volunteer forces provided for by the act of April 22, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes," the President may authorize the Secretary of War to organize a volunteer brigade of engineers from the nation at large, to consist of not more than three regiments and not more than 3,500 men, possessing the special qualifications necessary for engineer troops, under such rules and regulations, including the appointment of the officers thereof, as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That not to exceed three officers of the Corps of Engineers of the Regular Army may hold volunteer commissions in any one regiment of the volunteer brigade of engineers at the same time: And provided further, That all officers shall be appointed by and with the consent of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendments be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is an amendment relating to the so-called immunes. The Government desires to undertake, and has been assured that it is possible to undertake, the enlistment of a very considerable force of men, no one knows exactly how many, who are supposed to be immune.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there not an amendment relative to the Signal Corps?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; there is not. We can put such an amendment in the bill if the Senator from Missouri wishes to have it incorporated.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Connecticut tell us the length of time for which these enlistments are to be made?

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose they will be enlisted under the general provision.

Mr. PROCTOR. For two years or during the war.

Mr. HAWLEY. The language is, "under the terms and conditions of the aforesaid act," which provides for an enlistment of two years.

Mr. PROCTOR. For two years or during the war.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator kindly read that clause?

Mr. HAWLEY. The provision in regard to the immunes is as follows:

SEC. 2. And the President is further empowered, under the act of April 22, 1898, to authorize the Secretary of War to organize an additional volunteer force of not exceeding 10,000 enlisted men possessing immunity from diseases incident to tropical climates; the officers thereof to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

By numerous persons, including Senators, the Department and the Military Committee have been advised that it will be easy to raise, in some of the Gulf States, a number of regiments composed of men who have either already suffered from yellow fever or have lived so long with it around them that they are considered practically immune, as the new phrase is. This is favored by the President, by the Secretary of War, and by others.

Mr. PASCO. I understood that the Senator from Connecticut had under contemplation in connection with the pending bill the enlistment of men from the Gulf States for the purpose of handling the shovel and pick. There are a large number of laboring people who are likely to be thrown out of employment, and it was suggested in correspondence with myself and others (I understood the correspondence had been furnished to the Senator from Connecticut) that they could be made an available force for such labor and work as must be done in throwing up fortifications, and perhaps they could be sent over to Cuba with advantage at some time during this contest. I should like to ask if the Senator from Connecticut has considered that matter, and if not, whether some such feature can not be added to the bill, so as to enlist, say, three regiments for that particular service?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no doubt that the President would feel authorized to enlist men of that character under this provision for 10,000.

Mr. PASCO. These are all volunteers, though.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. PASCO. Perhaps it would be better to change that feature a little with reference to two or three additional regiments. My colleague [Mr. MALLORY] has given the matter some consideration, and I understood he had communicated with the Senator from Connecticut. It seems to me that it would be a valuable feature to add to the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. To enlist a regiment of laborers pure and simple?

Mr. PASCO. Laborers pure and simple, men who could work with the shovel and other implements upon fortifications.

Mr. HAWLEY. I had not heard of it and the committee had no information or advice of that kind from the Department.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not think that was the scheme proposed to me—that I considered. The proposition that I submitted was to raise a regiment of men who are inured to a tropical sun and hard physical exertion in it. The bill, I understand, provides for raising a body of engineers, amounting probably, under the amendment, to 10,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Ten thousand immunes.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask that the bill be read again. There was so much noise in the Chamber that I did not catch its full import.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 6) providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the United States against the State of Tennessee, and certain claims of the State of Tennessee against the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10197) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for support of the Army for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read Senate bill 4468, at the request of the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

Mr. HALE. I ask that the bill just received from the House be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Chair lays before the Senate House bill 10197.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think our bill can be finished in a moment. It is an important war bill.

Mr. HALE. Can the Senator's bill be finished at once? The Senate has, at my request, been waiting for an hour and a half for this bill from the House.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the immune bill, as it has been called, will pass without much delay, and I know the Administration is very anxious that it shall be passed very soon. I know, further, that many people in the Southern States believe that a very considerable army or force of men can be raised there who are probably free from danger of yellow fever.

Mr. HALE. If the bill can pass in a few moments, I will withdraw the request to have the House bill laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the bill before the Senate.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 10197) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for support of the Army for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the bill may be considered now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection that the bill which has been before the Senate shall be temporarily laid aside in order that the urgent deficiency bill may be acted upon?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not object, if the Committee on Appropriations request that the bill shall be acted upon without being referred.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think this bill can be acted on now.

Mr. HALE. Its immediate consideration is requested by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rose to object, I thought in season, unless I could learn that the committee had given this bill consideration.

Mr. HAWLEY. My dear sir, that is two or three times that the gentleman has asked me, after I reported in behalf of the committee and reported unanimously, whether the committee had considered the bill. I want him to understand that when we bring a bill from my committee it tells the truth and I tell the truth.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do I understand the Senator from Connecticut to say——

Mr. HAWLEY. The committee has given the bill very thorough consideration, both the first and second sections of it, and studied a good while upon so small a matter as to know how to describe immunes without taking a word that some people would not understand.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Connecticut will kindly hear me, do I understand him to say that this bill, making appropriations for deficiencies for the Army, has been considered by his committee?

Mr. HAWLEY. There is not a word of appropriation in the bill I have here.

Mr. CHANDLER. I say kindly to the Senator from Connecticut, if he will keep his temper, the bill my remarks were addressed to was not his bill; it was another bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understood the Chair to lay before the Senate the bill I asked should be considered.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator finds out what bill is before the Senate before he lectures me, it will do him good.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not care to enter into——

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator had better not.

Mr. HAWLEY. Better not what?

Mr. CHANDLER. I addressed myself to the bill that just now came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. HAWLEY. And now will the Senator wait a moment?

Mr. CHANDLER. And the Senator lectured me about another bill to which I had interposed no objection whatever.

Mr. CULLOM. It was a misunderstanding.

Mr. HAWLEY. It was a misunderstanding. I thought he was objecting to the consideration of the military bill, which I hope the Vice-President will put before the Senate and have passed now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine had asked unanimous consent that the bill might be laid aside temporarily while House bill 10197 should be taken up.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is the merest form.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me, I will state that I do not object to that bill being taken up in place of his bill. I am informed that the Committee on Appropriations has given it consideration and is prepared to ask for immediate action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Maine, and the Secretary will read House bill 10197.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought the Senator from Maine would perhaps permit the vote to be taken on the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill from the House be read, and then I will give way so that the bill which the Senator from Connecticut has charge of may be passed.

ARMY DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill (H. R. 10197) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for support of the Army for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE. I yield temporarily to the Senator from Connecticut.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill (S. 4468) to provide for a volunteer brigade of engineers, which has just been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was, in line 8, after the word "organize," to insert "under the terms and conditions of the aforesaid act;" and on page 2, line 3, after the words "appointed by," to insert "the President;" so as to read:

That, in addition to the volunteer forces provided for by the act of April 22, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes," the President may authorize the Secretary of War to organize, under the terms and conditions of the aforesaid act, a volunteer brigade of engineers from the nation at large, to consist of not more than three regiments and not more than 3,500 men, possessing the special qualifications necessary for engineer troops, under such rules and regulations, including the appointment of the officers thereof, as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That not to exceed three officers of the Corps of Engineers of the Regular Army may hold volunteer commissions in any one regiment of the volunteer brigade of engineers at the same time: And provided further, That all officers shall be appointed by the President and with the consent of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the bill the following as a new section:

SEC. 2. And the President is further empowered, under the act of April 22, 1898, to authorize the Secretary of War to organize an additional volunteer force of not exceeding 10,000 enlisted men, possessing immunity from diseases incident to tropical climates, the officers thereof to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO. I hope the bill will pass. My colleague and I have examined it, and think the suggestions which have been made have been duly considered by the committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for a volunteer brigade of engineers and an additional force of 10,000 enlisted men specially accustomed to tropical climates."

ARMY DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I now ask that the consideration of the Army deficiency appropriation bill may be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10197) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for support of the Army for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PASCO. Before the bill passes, I think it would be very well for the Senator from Maine to give us a brief statement in reference to it. Is the bill intended to increase the Army beyond the arrangements made by the recent bills which have been passed, or is it simply to provide for expenditures under laws already existing? I ask for the purpose of information. We are all willing to help the Senator pass the bill.

Mr. HALE. I have already stated, in the absence of the Senator, I think, that it is a bill simply appropriating moneys made necessary by legislation and by existing events. It does not go into the question of increasing the Army. That is another matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill has nothing to do with the organization of the Army either as to its increase or decrease, but only as to its pay.

Mr. HALE. To furnish the money.

The bill was passed.

JOHN C. DULL.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2307) to correct the naval history of John C. Dull.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to correct the naval history of John C. Dull, who, while yet a minor, was enlisted as a landsman in the U. S. S. Ætna for service during the war with Mexico, so as to relieve him from the charge of desertion, dated June 8, 1848, and that he be given an honorable discharge from that date.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, May 4, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

MONDAY, May 2, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the following urgent deficiency bill and ask its consideration at once.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10197) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for support of the Army for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1898, and for other objects, namely:

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER.

For the expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs, signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including necessary meteorological instruments for use in target ranges; war balloons; telephone apparatus (excluding exchange service) and maintenance of the same; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts; maintenance and repair of military telegraph lines and cables, including salaries of civilian employees, supplies, and general repairs, and other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise, $21,000.

For 20 per cent increase on pay of enlisted men for two months, $345,329.91.

All the money hereinbefore appropriated under "Pay Department" except for "mileage to officers" shall be disbursed and accounted for by the Pay Department as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

To supply deficiencies in the appropriations for pay, etc., of the Army for the fiscal year 1898, including for additional pay for length of service of enlisted men; pay of enlisted men on the retired list; allowance for travel, retained and detained pay, clothing not drawn, and for interest on deposits, payable to enlisted men on discharge; pay of officers of the line; pay of officers for length of service, to be paid with current monthly pay; pay of enlisted men; pay of general staff; pay of retired officers; additional pay to retired officers for length of service; commutation of quarters to officers on duty without troops; and including not exceeding $113,170.56, made necessary by act approved March 3, 1898, providing for two additional regiments of artillery, $1,000,219.70.

For mileage to officers when authorized by law, $35,000.

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

For purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue as rations to troops, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, and general prisoners at posts, estimated for remainder of the fiscal year 1898 on the basis of 10,958,574 rations: for sales to officers and enlisted men of the Army; for authorized issues of candles; of toilet articles, barbers', laundry, and tailors' materials, for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and recruits at recruiting stations; of matches for lighting public fires and lights at posts and stations and in the field; of flour used for paste in target practice; of salt and vinegar for public animals. For payments: For meals for recruiting parties and recruits; for hot coffee, canned beef, and baked beans for troops traveling, when it is impracticable to cook their rations; for scales, weights, measures, utensils, tools, stationery, blank books and forms, printing, advertising, commercial newspapers, use of telephones, office furniture; for temporary buildings, cellars, and other means of protecting subsistence supplies (when not provided by the Quartermaster's Department); for compensation of civilians employed in the Subsistence Department; and for other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence supplies for the Army. For the payment of the regulation allowances for commutation in lieu of rations: To enlisted men on furlough, to ordnance sergeants on duty at ungarrisoned posts, to enlisted men stationed at places where rations in kind can not be economically issued, to enlisted men traveling on detached duty when it is impracticable to carry rations of any kind; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; in all, $2,730,643.50.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

For regular supplies, namely: For regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, including their care and protection, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus, required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks, and quarters, and recruiting stations; also ranges and stoves, and appliances for cooking and serving food, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, including recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices, and for sale to officers; for post bakeries; for the necessary furniture, text-books, paper, and equipments for the post schools and libraries; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, and for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bedding, and of stationery, including blank books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's departments, and for printing Department orders and reports, $1,000,000.

For incidental expenses, namely: For postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; extra pay to soldiers employed on extra duty, under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department, in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads, and other constant labor for periods of not less than ten days, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts, and for prison overseers at posts designated by the War Department for the confinement of general prisoners; for expenses of expresses to and from frontier posts and armies in the field, of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains where military escorts can not be furnished; expenses of the interment of officers killed in action or who die when on duty in the field, or at military posts or on the frontiers, or when traveling under orders, and of noncommissioned officers and soldiers; authorized office furniture; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster's Department, including the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the Army; compensation of clerks and other employees to the officers of the Quartermaster's Department, and incidental expenses of recruiting; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters and the expenses incident to their pursuit, and no greater sum than $10 for each deserter shall be paid to any officer or citizen for such services and expenses; for a donation of $5 to each dishonorably discharged prisoner upon his release from confinement, under court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge; and for the following expenditures required for the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of light artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, the authorized number of officers' horses, and for the trains, to wit: Hire of veterinary surgeons, purchase of medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, blacksmiths' tools and materials, horseshoes and blacksmiths' tools for the cavalry service, and for the shoeing of horses and mules, and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movements and operation of the Army, and at military posts, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $750,000.

For horses for cavalry and artillery, namely: For the purchase of horses for the cavalry and artillery, and for the Indian scouts, and for such infantry and members of the hospital corps in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, $1,500,000.

For barracks and quarters, namely: For barracks and quarters for troops, storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, for offices, recruiting stations, and for the hire of buildings and grounds for summer cantonments, and for temporary buildings at frontier stations, for the construction of temporary buildings and stables, and for repairing public buildings at established posts, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same: Provided, That no part of the money so appropriated shall be paid for commutation of fuel, and for quarters to officers or enlisted men, $300,000.

For transportation of the Army, and its supplies, namely: For transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops when moving either by land or water, and including also the transportation of recruits and recruiting parties heretofore paid from the appropriation for "Expenses of recruiting"; of supplies to the militia furnished by the War Department; of the necessary agents and employees; of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, and other quartermaster's stores, from army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and army depots and from those depots to the troops in the field: of horse equipments and subsistence stores, from the places of purchase and from the places of delivery under contract to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms, from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other seagoing vessels and boats required for the transportation of supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters and other employees; extra-duty pay of enlisted men driving teams, repairing means of transportation, and employed as trainmasters, and in opening roads and building wharves; transportation of funds of the Army; the expenses of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; for procuring water, and introducing the same to buildings, at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance, and for the disposal of sewage and drainage, and for constructing roads and wharves; for the payment of army transportations lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act, a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States, and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on condition that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provision only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation for such Government transportation as shall at the time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service, $6,000,000.

Clothing, and camp and garrison equipage, namely: For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the manufacture of clothing for the Army, for issue and for sale at cost price according to the Army Regulations; for altering and fitting clothing, and washing and cleaning when necessary; for equipage and for expenses of packing and handling and similar necessaries; for a suit of citizen's outer clothes, to cost not exceeding $10, to be issued upon release from confinement to each prisoner who has been confined under a court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge, $10,000,000.

For contingencies of the Army, namely: For all contingent expenses of the Army not provided for by other estimates, and embracing all branches of the military service, to be expended under the immediate orders of the Secretary of War, $20,000.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

For current expenses of the ordnance service, required to defray the current expenses at the arsenals; of receiving stores and issuing arms and other ordnance supplies; of police and office duties; of rents, tolls, fuel, and lights; of stationery and office furniture; of tools and instruments for use; incidental expenses of the ordnance service, and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small arms, and other ordnance supplies, including payment for mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance, $95,000.

The appropriations herein made, except as otherwise provided, shall continue available until January 1, 1899.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported to the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have been utterly unable to get a copy of this bill, and I do not know what is in it. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear from the chairman of the committee some explanation of the bill and the necessity for it. I do not want to be put in the attitude of objecting to it if it is necessary.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad, with the consent of the House, to state briefly what this bill does. First, I will say that it is the unanimous report of the Committee on Appropriations. The committee have very carefully inquired touching the necessity of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has the bill been printed so that the committee had it before them?

Mr. CANNON. No; but Document 439, which was put in print Saturday, will give on the second page substantially full information about it. If gentlemen will send to the Doorkeeper's desk, they can get a copy. However, I think I can make plain the necessity for it in a few minutes. There are a few items that make the aggregate. The pay of the Army and volunteers is in round numbers $6,000,000; and I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is a deficiency bill for the Army for the two months of this fiscal year. Gentlemen understand that of the Army volunteers there are 125,000 men called into the service.

Mr. RICHARDSON. May I ask the gentleman as we go along—for if I read the document I can not listen to him, and I prefer to hear the explanation from him rather than to refer to the document—is there any other money available for these volunteers that have been called for except this sum?

Mr. CANNON. Not a dollar.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then that is an answer to that.

Mr. CANNON. The appropriation for the current year was made a year ago in the Regular Army bill, and for the Army as it then existed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is any part of that sum for the Regular Army?

Mr. CANNON. I will come to another item—the next item. In round numbers it is $6,000,000 for the remainder of this fiscal year's pay of the Army volunteers. For pay of the Army regulars it is $125,000; that is the next item. Gentlemen understand the legislation we have had increasing the Regular Army.

Mr. HULL. There was a shortage in the appropriation for the Regular Army last year.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; this item includes all that is necessary for the Regular Army, including the shortage and the increase, for the balance of the fiscal year.

The next item is subsistence of the Army, and that is the whole Army, both Regular and Volunteer, $2,739,000. The next item is the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, $1,000,000. The next item is, horses for cavalry and artillery, $1,500,000. The next item is, for barracks and quarters, $300,000. The next item, and a very large one, is Army transportation, $6,000,000. That is both for Regular Army and moving of the volunteers. The next item is, for clothing and camp and garrison equipment, $10,000,000. That will not all be necessary for this fiscal year, but it is necessary to appropriate the $10,000,000 so that contracts can be made this year. The $10,000,000 will be almost entirely consumed next year, but it is necessary to make the appropriation now.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. COX. You have estimated for the pay of the Volunteer Army and the Regular Army. Upon what number is it based? How do you get at the figures?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will notice in Document 439, it is made on the basis of paying 125,000 volunteers for the Army two months of this year, from the 1st of May, and also of the Regular Army.

Mr. COX. What is the basis of the Regular Army?

Mr. CANNON. The basis of the late legislation.

Mr. COX. That is putting the Regular Army at 61,000?

Mr. CANNON. That is correct. Then for Ordnance Department, $3,747,000; torpedoes for harbor defense, $500,000; expeditionary force to Cuba, $150,000.

Then there is pay miscellaneous of the Navy (that appropriation being entirely exhausted), $100,000.

Mr. COX. The gentleman will pardon me a moment. It will be remembered that there was another force provided for in the volunteer bill. There were 3,000 men called for in the volunteer bill, who might be termed a special force. Were they included in this estimate?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir; they are included.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Illinois will allow me to supplement what he has said by a statement that the bill recently passed by Congress increased the pay of all enlisted men of the Regular Army and the Volunteer Army in time of war 20 per cent. That adds one-fifth to the pay proper of enlisted men of the Army.

Mr. CANNON. That is correct.

Mr. COX. That is, in time of war.

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. This bill includes an appropriation for the pay of the Army and the miscellaneous pay of the Navy for the remainder of this fiscal year. It may be that all the volunteers and all the regulars will not go upon the pay roll on the 1st of May. If there is any money left over, we make a provision in the bill that it may be used for the pay of the Army until the 1st of January next.

Mr. SAYERS rose.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before the gentleman from Texas proceeds, allow me one question. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether these appropriations are all based upon written or formal estimates submitted by the Departments?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir; with three exceptions. The committee had before them the heads of the various bureaus, and upon inquiry we found that in one case they had not asked for sufficient by $300,000, and in another case by about $200,000. Therefore we have proposed appropriations beyond the estimates in those two cases. In another case we found that they had asked for $100,000 too much.

I will say further that this bill, if enacted, will write into law everything asked for by the War and Navy Departments at the present time. Our object was first to see that the estimates were proper, and having found on examination that they were, in our opinion, proper, we deemed it our duty to give to "the powers that be" who are to carry on this war the full amount of money they asked for.

Mr. CLARDY. Does this bill include appropriations to pay expenses of mobilizing the militia in the States and preparing them for service in the United States Army, or is that expense expected to be paid by the respective States?

Mr. CANNON. My understanding is that that matter will have to be adjusted in whole or in part.

Mr. RIDGELY. Shall we have a printed report from the committee—an itemized report?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; there is a report now on the Clerk's desk accompanying the bill.

Mr. RIDGELY. It is not yet in print?

Mr. CANNON. No; but the document to which I have called attention, Document No. 439, giving full information on the question, is in print.

Mr. CLARDY. We can not get at present even that document; there are not enough in print.

Mr. CANNON. There ought to be.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CLARDY. Allow me to say, before the gentleman from Texas proceeds, that I hope he will explain (because questions on this subject are asked of us constantly) about the payment of these troops—whether the Government is to pay them or whether they are to be paid by the States.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think this bill ought to considered in Committee of the Whole, so as to give better opportunity for explaining and understanding it.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] to let the gentleman from Texas make his statement before that point is made.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in behalf of the pending measure that the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations gave every item appearing in this bill their most careful and thorough consideration. There is no new legislation whatever on it. It is confined altogether to appropriations to carry on the present war. And there is not an item to which I do not give my entire sanction as absolutely necessary during the present emergency.

In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLARDY], I can only say—I do not state this as a fact, but give it only as an opinion—that the pay of volunteers will begin from the date of their enrollment, and not from the date of their actual muster into the service; in other words, my information is that the President having called upon the States for their respective quotas of troops and the governors having responded, then when a company has presented itself and has been mustered into the service, the pay of the members of such company will begin from the date of their enrollment. That is the information I have. I do not state it as absolutely correct, but I believe it to be so.

Mr. CLARDY. How about the expenses of mobilizing these troops and disciplining them in camp?

Mr. SAYERS. I take it that of course such expenses are to be paid by the Government.

Mr. STEELE. Allow me a moment. I was at the War Department this morning, and I understand that the Government is going to pay all these expenses from the date of the enlistment of the troops up to the time they are mustered in. This includes transportation from their homes to the place of enrollment, and all other expenses.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is what was done during the civil war.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I trust that this bill will have the support of every member of the House——

Mr. COX. If the gentleman from Texas will permit me to interrupt him, I could not distinctly hear his statement, and this is a matter in which we are all interested, as it affects the troops coming from every State. What I wish to ask him is, if this proposition involves the pay of the volunteers under the conditions which now prevail? Say, for instance, that the volunteers start to-day and are mustered in not before fifteen days from now, who pays the expense of bringing them from the States to the place of enrollment, and who pays them in the meantime, while they are waiting to be mustered in?

Mr. SAYERS. My understanding is that the Federal Government pays the whole expense.

Mr. COX. Then the Federal Government pays everything connected with it?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; all of the expenses are paid by the Federal Government, and the object in part of this bill is to provide payment of just such expenditures.

Mr. RIDGELY. And this payment will be made at once, and not be carried on for some future settlement?

Mr. SAYERS. I think so.

I now yield the floor to my colleague on the committee from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to add a word to what has been said by the gentleman from Texas with reference to the pending bill. The appropriations involved in the bill have been carefully scrutinized by the members of the Committee on Appropriations. Every item in the bill, with a trifling exception, involving only a few thousand dollars, is covered by estimates submitted by the Secretaries of War and Navy. Each item has been examined in detail carefully and thoroughly.

I simply add my testimony to that borne by the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Illinois. In my judgment every item in the bill is essential and necessary, and there ought not to be any delay in passing the bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman from Missouri permit me to ask him what total amount is covered by the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. About $35,000,000.

Mr. LANHAM. I notice that the estimates of the Secretaries of War and Navy are about $34,000,000——

Mr. DOCKERY. That is correct; but some additional items appear which have been reported upon estimates recently submitted by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. For instance, $100,000 by the Navy Department has been sent in this morning; and $75,000 additional on another branch of the naval service——

Mr. LANHAM. All of the appropriations covered by the bill are for the military and naval service?

Mr. DOCKERY. Every dollar of the bill rests upon estimates submitted by the Departments.

Mr. SAYERS. There is one item of $5,000 which comes on an estimate from the Treasury Department, which has been made necessary by reason of extra printing required to be done because of war preparations. The entire appropriation from one end to the other, it will be seen, is for war purposes. They are all necessary, and made so by existing conditions, and I hope there will be no delay in passing the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think the House may feel perfectly sure that every item is urgent and necessary, and has been carefully examined by the committee; and the committee are unanimous in their report on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill in the House?

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill. I think it ought to be considered; but it should have a fair and full consideration in the House. It is a matter of great importance, involving a large sum of money, and we ought to have opportunity for its full consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That, then, is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then, Mr. Speaker, if that is the construction of the Chair, I do not want to stand in the way of the immediate consideration of the measure, although it is not the proper manner in which to consider bills of this character. This bill has not yet been printed and laid before the members; but if it can only be considered by unanimous consent at this time, in the way suggested by the Speaker, I am not willing to stand in the way, but will consent to its consideration at once. Still the fact stands that no bill of this magnitude, a bill which has never been printed, ought to be considered otherwise than in Committee of the Whole, where there can be the widest latitude of discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be placed upon its passage.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to answer the gentleman.

Mr. TODD. I would like to ask, in the first place, how it is that this bill has not been printed for the information of the House? I have read the document on which the bill is based, which bears date the 29th day of April, and surely there was ample time to print the bill and offer it in the regular way.

I notice this bill carries one item of $6,000,000 for Army railroad transportation. I am informed that the railroad companies are charging practically full first-class fare for the transportation of troops; and I think the House ought to consider this proposition very carefully and determine what would be and is a fair rate of compensation to be paid for the service.

Mr. STEELE. Where does the gentleman get that information?

Mr. TODD. From the organ of the Administration, yesterday morning's Washington Post. It is printed as "news," not in criticism of the action referred to.

Mr. STEELE. I will state for the gentleman's information that that is not the case.

Mr. TODD. I am informed that after a rate had been offered by one railroad company for the carrying of troops from my State (the Michigan Naval Reserves) from Detroit to Norfolk for about $7, and they were about to close up a contract at that rate, it was found that an officer of the War Department claimed that a contract had been entered into with another railroad at a rate above $13. I wish to call attention to the fact that the Secretary of War has appointed the president of a railroad company to manage this matter. The president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, Mr. Frank Thompson, is now at the head of the transportation business of this Government. Mr. Blanchard, president of the Central Traffic Association, a gigantic railroad pool for preventing competition, has just received a similar appointment in the interests of the other roads, so that no competition will be allowed for the Government business, and that the plunder shall be equally divided among the lines he controls. It is he who has been lobbying to secure a law legalizing railroad pooling, which by decision of the Supreme Court of the United States has been declared unconstitutional. Yet notwithstanding that he is at the head of an illegal organization, he and his associates in their dual capacity of Government officials and presidents of railroad pools, as suits their pleasure. It is practically taken out of the hands of Congress and the authorities. The head officer of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is now asking for a similar position. And no wonder they wish such positions, if they control the rates and charge double. Under this system there is nobody to represent the interests of the Government, and it results in a wholesale plunder of the Treasury and the money needed to carry the war to a successful conclusion.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Secretary of War has turned over to railroad presidents the right to contract in behalf of the Government with themselves for the transportation of troops?

Mr. TODD. Yes; and I ask unanimous consent to read from an Administration paper, yesterday morning's Washington Post a report to that effect from the War Department. It is as follows:

FOR A PART OF THE SPOILS—THE RAILROADS ARE MAKING A LIVELY FIGHT FOR BUSINESS—THEIR EFFORTS TO CAPTURE CONTRACTS FOR HAULING TROOPS ARE EXTREMELY ENERGETIC AND ARE A FEATURE OF THE WAR SITUATION.

One of the most interesting features of the war situation is the rivalry of the various railroads to get as much money from the Government as possible for the transportation of troops. In fact, the struggle for a division of the spoils has almost become a farce.

The selection of the points of rendezvous for the volunteer force has been one of the most prolific causes of rivalry. In the case of West Virginia, the Department has chosen Martinsburg, which is on the Baltimore and Ohio, and is not reached by any other road, while the governor of the State wants Charleston named, and this town is on the Chesapeake and Ohio, by which route it can alone be reached. While neither the Secretary of War nor the governor of West Virginia was influenced in the least by railroad considerations, the corporations made the matter almost a personal one, and the result is a deadlock. In other States the railroads which were not benefited by the movement of the troops have also been busy in securing changes of location, and railroad agents have swarmed through the corridors of the War Department until they are as numerous as the clerks.

An incident which happened yesterday in the Navy Department is also in point. It seems that 157 men were to be transferred from Detroit to the Norfolk Navy-Yard, and bids were invited for the transportation. The lowest bid was $7.29 per man; but when this stage of the proceedings had been reached, it was discovered that the contract for the movement of the men had already been given to a railroad company by an official of the Department at a fraction over $12 per man. Under the circumstances the contract was allowed to stand, but more care will be exercised in the future.

Some time ago Secretary Alger arranged with President Thompson, of the Pennsylvania road, to be his aid in the matter of arranging transportation for the troops. It is now understood that another prominent railroad man is to be named as an assistant aid for the same purpose, and the leaking out of this fact has caused a general scramble among railroad managers to secure the appointment. Receiver Cowen, of the Baltimore and Ohio, is anxious to be selected, but there are a number of other well-known railroad men who would like the honor thrust upon them.

It will be noticed that the railroads are attempting to dictate where the troops shall rendezvous, naming places where no competition in rates is possible. The interests of the nation are of little moment. The success of our arms, the claims of humanity, and the glory of our Republic are secondary to the looting of the Treasury. Why, the amount asked for transportation of the Army, $6,000,000, is more than double the amount appropriated for its "subsistence," which is but $2,739,643.50. It is forty times the amount named for the "expeditionary force to Cuba," $150,084.

It is almost equal to the entire pay for one year of the combined Volunteer and Regular Army. And it should be remembered that there can be but little transportation during the period covered in the bill—the present fiscal year, which closes in less than two months. During the ten months already passed there has been no large movement of our troops. And yet you propose to give the railroads more than double the cost of subsistence of the Army, and nearly the amount of the pay received during the entire period by our entire Army, both Volunteer and Regular.

In view of these conditions, I shall offer the following resolution of inquiry, which I will ask to be referred to the Committee on Expenses of the War Department:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to Congress, at his earliest convenience, full information regarding the methods by which contracts are made between the Department of War and railroad companies relative to the transportation of troops, Army supplies, and munitions of war, together with the forms of advertising for such contracts and bids for the same, with copies of all contracts for such transportation made during the present fiscal year, and the correspondence between the Department of War and the railroad officials relative thereto.

Information is also requested as to whether bona fide competition exists in such transportation; and if so, to what extent; also the reasons of the Secretary of War for appointing a railroad president and other high railroad officials to take charge of the transportations interest of the Government, and the effects of such appointments upon the public welfare. The Secretary of War is also requested to transmit a list of all the persons now occupying official positions in his Department who now, or immediately preceding their appointment to a Government position, were connected with any railroad corporation, either as official or counsel.

It would seem, Mr. Speaker, by the recklessness with which the people's money is wasted or diverted, that one object in view is to so deplete the Treasury that excuse may be found to force upon the nation the contemplated bond issue of $500,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. Now, in reply to the gentleman's question why this bill was not printed before it was submitted, and calling attention to the fact that this estimate was forwarded on the 29th of April, the gentleman must be aware that estimates come to the Speaker's table and then are referred to the proper committee, and then they go to the Printing Office and are printed. They do not come to the proper committee until they come in print. This estimate reached the committee on Saturday afternoon. I did not see it until after the adjournment of the House Saturday evening. Now, between Saturday evening and this morning at half past 10 o'clock the Committee on Appropriations, through its appropriate subcommittee, I think I can say, made an exhaustive examination of these estimates, calling before it the various heads of bureaus, and reporting this morning to the full committee. That answers the question which the gentleman asked in regard to that.

Now, one further matter. I do not know what rates of transportation are being paid by the Quartermaster-General. I am acquainted with the Quartermaster-General. I believe him to be a vigilant, honest, efficient officer of the Army. I have no doubt that he is complying with the law and doing everything in his power to get the best rate on munitions of war, on transportation of troops, and on everything else that comes within the scope of his duty.

It is impossible for us to change the law in connection with this appropriation, which is an urgent one. It is impossible for us to make modifications in the law as to how long the advertisement shall be and the manner in which rates shall be arrived at. Officers of the Government must perform their duties in the white light of public intelligence, and must be honest and efficient; and so far as transportation is concerned, my belief is that the Quartermaster-General's Office is both honest and efficient.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in reply to the criticism upon the haste with which this bill has been presented to the House. There are 125,000 volunteers gathering in the States of the Union. They have been gathering ever since the call was made by the President of the United States. Many of the States have made no provision for paying them or taking care of them, and it is the duty of Congress to make this appropriation as early as possible.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Nobody objects to that.

Mr. SAYERS. So that the volunteers can be paid. That is one of the reasons why we are so urgent about this matter.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I would like, if the gentleman from Texas informed the House what the provisions of this bill are, the Speaker to inform the House, as we could not hear the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire some time?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. How much?

Mr. McMILLIN. Two or three minutes.

I made no statement against the measure, and I wish to say if the gentleman from Texas had reference to me, he wholly misunderstood my statement. I do not know that it was myself that he was referring to. I have not criticised the committee for acting hastily in considering this matter. My remarks were directed to the way of consideration after the committee had reported the bill—that the bill had not been printed; that it carried a large amount of money, involving very many items, and I thought on that account the House itself after it took hold of it ought to consider it in Committee of the Whole. I do not criticise the committee. On the contrary, I think the House and I think the people ought to have and certainly will justify all necessary expedition. They will demand it, and ought to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I did not object to the mode in which this bill is being considered, because I recognize the necessity for immediate consideration; but I would like to ask the gentleman if the Committee on Appropriations propose in the future, in these emergency bills, to bring them to the House and ask for consideration in this way? Why can not they ask that they be considered in Committee of the Whole in such a way that the individual members of the House would understand what is in the bill?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that I can not speak for the future, and we can not get any bill considered except by unanimous consent or under the rules of the House. But the committee did feel warranted, however, in asking at once the passage of this bill for the reasons indicated and being an emergency. Now, we can not consider it in the House without unanimous consent. That we have had given. It appealed to every member on the floor of this House that it was urgent. The committee has no choice about it at all; it is only the servant of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I may be mistaken as to the rules of the House, but would it not have been competent for the gentleman to have asked unanimous consent for consideration of the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then we would have had a chance to consider it for a reasonable time.

Mr. CANNON. It would be in order to ask that, but I did not ask for its consideration in that way; and it would have been in order for my friend to have suggested that it should have been considered under the five-minute rule. Consent was given to its consideration. But I have no desire to put it through on the whip, so as to pass the measure. I am quite willing to hear my friend from Tennessee and my friend from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I believe every item in this bill is proper. I believe it ought to pass now, but I do not believe that we ought to establish a precedent to bring in bills in this way.

Mr. CANNON. By no consent of mine; it ought not to be a precedent, and would not be done except in a similar emergency, where it appealed to every member of the House as a necessity.

Mr. McMILLIN. If my friend from Illinois will permit me, I will state that whatever complaint was offered by me was at the method of procedure, which lies in the fact that he brings his bill in and requests consent for its consideration in such a form that he forces a member either to object to its consideration or to yield to a consideration that abandons the Committee of the Whole. I asked that of the Chair, and the Chair so held, and I do not desire to be put in such an attitude.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee, I had no idea of coercing the House or any member of it; but we did feel it our duty to tell the truth about the bill and about the emergency. I see no reason why we should delay the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the proposition laid down by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], who is a very able and experienced legislator; and I do not desire to be found in opposition, as a rule, to the gentleman, because I think his services invaluable to the country, especially in the line of protecting the Treasury. Now, the gentleman on my right, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], said that this should not be taken as a precedent. It will not be taken as a precedent, because I think the conditions of this moment are unlike anything that has taken place since the war of 1812 or possibly the war with Mexico.

The committee sought early consideration of the bill for the reason that the items were pressed upon them by the heads of the War and Navy Departments as being urgent and emergent, and for the further reason that they meet the indorsement and approval of the committee after consideration. And inasmuch as our Volunteer Army are entering the State camps and it is absolutely necessary that money should be provided, the committee unanimously—and I want to assume full responsibility, although I think I stand as strongly for the protection of the Treasury as anybody—requested the chairman to ask the House to give immediate consideration to this bill. If the bill carried legislation, if the bill carried any doubtful or objectionable items, I would insist upon ample consideration sufficient to develop the real situation.

Referring to the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan about exorbitant rates charged in certain cases for the transportation of troops, let me say to him that this is not the place to consider that question. The amount appropriated for the transportation of troops has been reported as required by law, and if any administrative officer of the Government connected with the transportation of troops shall be found guilty of malfeasance in office, in due time this House and the country will be advised of the fact. I know nothing of the matter to which the gentleman refers, but if it be true, this is not the time and place to consider it. We are making appropriations for the transportation of troops, and if the executive officers are guilty of maladministration we will look up that matter later on, after we shall have driven the Spaniards from the Island of Cuba.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this is not a proper occasion to call attention to maladministration, if there has been any, of officers, when we are making appropriations directly to those officers? To illustrate: I have understood that the officers of the Government are paying for horses $125 to $150 that can be purchased for $50 to $75. Do I understand, when we are appropriating a large sum of money for the purchase of horses, we have no right under circumstances of this character to question such appropriation and such expenditures as are being made by those officers?

Mr. DOCKERY. If I employed language that justifies the construction indicated by the gentleman from Utah, it was far from my purpose, and I have been unfortunate in the use of language. I think it is proper at any time, in any place, to call attention to abuses that may exist in the public service, whether here or in the Executive Departments. But what I say is that the time and place to reform these abuses, the methods by which they are to be reformed, would not be germane to appropriation bills like this.

The alleged abuse should be investigated by some committee of the House charged with the duty to investigate such bad conduct, if it exists. For instance, I would assume that if the executive officers having charge of the movements of our armies should be guilty of maladministration such as has been suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, it would be proper for the gentleman from Utah to introduce a resolution calling attention of the Committee on Military Affairs to that abuse and the necessity for redress.

Mr. KING. Suppose it is disclosed, as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TODD], that payments are being made for transportation very largely in excess of that which is just and proper, and that the Committee on Appropriations have predicated the amounts which they have incorporated in this bill upon those grossly improper amounts which have been paid. Is it not the proper occasion at this time to inquire into and understand the nature of the appropriations—the basis upon which these appropriations have been predicated?

Mr. DOCKERY. Undoubtedly; but the gentleman will see at once that we can not halt the movements of our troops at this time, when they are headed toward Cuba, to stop and investigate some alleged malfeasance or abuse of power. We are appealed to to make this appropriation, and if any quartermaster is guilty of conduct that warrants discipline, Congress can apply the remedy in another way.

Mr. KING. Are not the members of the House entitled to know whether the appropriation is based on unjust and unfair rates, as stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TODD], or upon rates fair and just? How does the House know, without an adequate statement and proper discussion, whether the appropriation for the $5,000,000 is based upon improper contracts, contracts at $14 for transportation from Detroit, for instance, as stated by the gentleman from Michigan, instead of $7?

Mr. DOCKERY. At this juncture of affairs the House is practically compelled to accept the estimates of the Secretary of War as reviewed by the Committee on Appropriations. We can not stop our armies in their movements to Cuba to investigate the conduct of an officer who may or may not have swindled the Government. I do not think there is any real difference between the gentleman from Utah and myself.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. My inquiry is whether or not unanimous consent has yet been given for the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has been given.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine, and then I will ask for a vote.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire in a few moments to call the attention of the House and the country to the valuable light which this bill, the enactment of which is so necessary, sheds upon the probable expense for carrying on this war, and the revenue and means to be provided for that purpose. We have already appropriated $50,000,000. That amount has been used in providing for coast defenses, the purchase of naval vessels, and fitting out of naval vessels for operation, and to some extent for the Army. This bill provides for appropriations for the Army——

Mr. TODD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make an objection to the bill being considered further except in Committee of the Whole. This will not delay the bill, and is the usual and proper manner.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked for objections and there was no response.

Mr. TODD. I did not hear the Chair ask for unanimous consent the second time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should have been attending if he wanted his rights.

Mr. TODD. I will ask the Chair if the Chair did not hear me make my objection before I spoke the second time on the subject to which my remarks referred?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not. The gentleman from Maine has the floor.

Mr. DINGLEY. This bill provides for the appropriation of $26,000,000, all but $100,000 of which is for appropriations for the Army for the next fiscal year, or two months longer—$34,000,000 for the present fiscal year, besides the appropriations one year ago.

In addition to that, there are items of considerable extent available for the present fiscal year, making the appropriations that will undoubtedly be used in this fiscal year for naval and military operations in excess probably of $100,000,000.

There are five millions more to come, I am informed, in the fortifications bill. So the gentleman will see it is estimated that in two months' military operations we shall have expended $100,000,000. I simply desire to call the attention of the House and the country to the side light afforded by the figures which have been presented to us, in order that we may be able to consider carefully what the country will require in the way of revenues and loans in order to meet such expenditures.

Mr. CANNON. I now ask for a vote on the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the bill and report may be printed in the usual manner, so that they may be obtained from the document room.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

HOMESTEAD LAWS, RIGHT OF WAY, ETC., IN ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to call up the conference report on House bill No. 5975.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 5975, "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for the right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 6, 9, 16, 47.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 7, 8, 11, 13, 16, 17, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 48, 49, 50, 52, 54, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out amend so as to read as follows:

"That the homestead land laws of the United States and the rights incident thereto, including the right to enter surveyed or unsurveyed lands under the provisions of law relating to the acquisition of title through soldiers' additional homestead rights, are hereby extended to the District of Alaska, subject to such regulations as may be made by the Secretary of the Interior."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "forty," in lines 11 and 12, and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighty;" so as to make the amendment read as follows:

"Provided, That no entry shall be allowed extending more than 80 rods along the shore of any navigable water, and along such shore a space of at least 80 rods shall be reserved from entry between all such claims, and that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to authorize entries to be made, or title to be acquired, to the shore of any navigable waters within said District."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "extent" in line 17; so as to make the Senate amendment read as follows: "And it is further provided, That no homestead shall exceed 80 acres in extent" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "The right to take for railroad uses, subject to the reservation of all minerals and coal therein, public lands;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Additional 40 acres to be limited on navigable waters to 80 rods on the shore line:" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to give to such railroad company, its lessees, grantees, or assigns, the ownership or use of minerals, including coal, within the limits of its right of way or of the lands hereby granted."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the amendment insert the following:

"Provided further, That all mining operations prosecuted or undertaken within the limits of such right of way or of the lands hereby granted shall, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, be so conducted as not to injure or interfere with the property or operations of the road over its said lands or right of way."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 55 strike out the word "created" and insert in lieu thereof the word "erected;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That all charges for the transportation of freight and passengers on railroads in the District of Alaska shall be printed and posted as required by section 6 of an act to regulate commerce as amended on March 2, 1889; and such rates shall be subject to revision and modification by the Secretary of the Interior."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House provision numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment so as to read as follows:

"That any such company, by filing with the Secretary of the Interior a preliminary actual survey and plat of its proposed route, shall have the right, at any time within one year thereafter, to file the map and profile of definite location provided for in this act; and such preliminary survey and plat shall, during the said period of one year from the time of filing the same, have the effect to render all the lands on which said preliminary survey and plat shall pass subject to such right of way."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Or if the map of definite location be not filed within one year as herein required, or if the entire road shall not be completed within four years from the filing of the map of definite location."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "for an easement;" in line 16 strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "twenty;" in line 19 strike out the words "unappropriated and unoccupied;" in line 29 strike out the words "or map of general route" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of preliminary survey;" in line 40 strike out the word "said" and insert the word "the" in lieu thereof; in line 72 strike out the word "for" and the words "less than;" and in line 73 strike out the words "thirty nor more than" and insert in lieu thereof the word "exceeding;" in line 78 strike out the words "or tramway;" in line 79, after the word "mile," insert the words "or one-half mile of tramway, at a cost of not less than $500;" in line 82, after the word "line" and before the word "actually," insert the words "hitherto constructed or;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That where within ninety days after the approval of this act proof is made to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that actual surveys, evidenced by designated monuments, were made, and the line of a railroad, wagon road, or tramway located thereby, or that actual construction was commenced on the line of any railroad, wagon road, or tramway prior to January 31, 1898, the rights to inure hereunder shall, if the terms of this act be complied with as to such railroad, wagon road, or tramway, relate back to the date when such survey or construction was commenced; and in all conflicts relative to the right of way or other privilege of this act the person, company, or corporation having been first in time in actual survey or construction, as the case may be, shall be deemed first in right."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 5 strike out the words "now or;" in line 6, after the word "Alaska," insert the words "in good faith;" in line 8, after the word "may," insert the word "each," and after the word "purchase" insert the words "one claim only," and strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu the word "eighty;" so as to make line 8 read as follows: "may each purchase one claim not exceeding 80 acres of such land for any;" strike out all after the word "lands," in line 14, down to the word "Provided," in line 16, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and ingress and egress shall be reserved to the public on the waters of all streams, whether navigable or otherwise;" in line 17, after the word "allowed," insert the words "under this act;" in line 18 strike out the word "forty" and insert the word "eighty;" in line 19 strike out the word "forty" and insert the word "eighty;" in line 20, after the word "sold," insert the words "or entered," and in the same line strike out the word "section" and insert the word "act;" in line 27, before the word "wharves," insert the word "and," and in the same line strike out the words "or other like uses;" in line 28, after the word "wharves," add the word "and;" in line 29 strike out the words "and so forth;" in line 30 strike out the word "the" and insert the word "said" before the word "secretary;" in the same line strike out the words "of the Interior" and insert the words "and a roadway 60 feet in width, parallel to the shore line as near as may be practicable, shall be reserved for the use of the public as a highway;" in line 38, after the word "claims," insert the words "substantially square in form and," and, after the word "initiated," insert the words "prior to January 21, 1898," so as to make the line read "vided further, That all claims substantially square in form and lawfully initiated prior to January 21, 1898, by survey;" in line 44, strike out the words "all the limitations" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the requirements;" and in the same line, after the word "act," insert the words "except as to area, but in no case shall such entry extend along the water front for more than 160 rods;" in line 49, after the word "natives," add the words "Provided, That the Annette, Pribilof Islands, and the islands leased or occupied for the propagation of foxes be excepted from the operation of this act:" in line 58, strike out all after the word "the" down to the word "and" in line 60 and insert in lieu thereof the words "admitted in evidence as if taken before the register and receiver of the proper local land office;" in line 79, after the word "lands," add "or any part thereof:" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out all of section 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 12. That the President is authorized and empowered, in his discretion, by Executive order from time to time to establish or discontinue land districts in the District of Alaska, and to define, modify, or change the boundaries thereof, and to designate or change the location of any land office therein; and he is also authorized and empowered to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register for each land district he may establish and a receiver of public moneys therefor; and the register and receiver appointed for such district shall, during their respective terms of office, reside at the place designated for the land office. That the registers and receivers of public moneys in the land districts of Alaska shall each receive an annual salary of $1,500 and the fees provided by law for like officers in the State of Oregon, not to exceed, including such salary and fees, a total annual compensation of $3,000 for each of said officers.

"SEC. 13. That native-born citizens of the Dominion of Canada shall be accorded in said District of Alaska the same mining rights and privileges accorded to citizens of the United States in British Columbia and the Northwest Territory by the laws of the Dominion of Canada or the local laws, rules, and regulations; but no greater rights shall be thus accorded than citizens of the United States or persons who have declared their intention to become such may enjoy in said District of Alaska; and the Secretary of the Interior shall from time to time promulgate and enforce rules and regulations to carry this provision into effect."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the words "section 13" and insert in lieu thereof the words "section 14;" in line 4 strike out the words "at the port of Wrangell" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at any of the ports;" in line 9, after the word "States," insert the words "and to persons who have declared their intentions to become such;" in line 12 strike out all after the first comma down to the end of the section and insert in lieu thereof the words "that corresponding privileges have been and are being granted by the Government of the Dominion of Canada in respect of goods, wares, and merchandise passing through the territory of the Dominion of Canada to any point in the District of Alaska from any point in said District; and the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint three commissioners to meet a like number of commissioners appointed on the part of the Government of Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada, the said commissioners to formulate and consider a plan for the settlement and final determination of the North Atlantic fishery question and the ultimate adjustment of any other questions the solution of which would further promote the friendly relations now existing between the two countries in respect of mutual interests in trade and commerce on the American continent, the findings of the said commissioners to be reported to Congress through the President of the United States."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment of the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

HENRY C. HANSBROUGH,
THOMAS H. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the point of order on this report. I will not submit the point of order now, but desire to reserve it until we can have some explanation of this matter. It seems to cover new territory——

Mr. LACEY. Yes; the new Territory of Alaska.

Mr. LOUD (continuing). And embraces legislation that, as I understand it, was not in the original bill.

Mr. LACEY. I ask for the reading of the statement of the conferees, which will explain exactly what has been done with reference to the points of disagreement.

The statement was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

Statement of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 5975.

The effect of the amendments agreed upon in conference will be as follows: Soldiers' homestead additional rights may be located in the District of Alaska. The amount of land embraced in this class of entries is quite small and it was deemed advisable to allow such rights to be located in Alaska to the end that they might be extinguished as soon as possible. The agreement limits homesteads to 80 acres.

2. Terminals and junction stations on railways are increased from 20 acres to 60 by the conference report, but the companies must pay for 40 acres of the same at the rate of $1.25 per acre. It is also provided that such stations shall not cover more than 80 rods of frontage on any shore line. It is also agreed that additional ground may be taken where, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, it may be necessary for heavy cuts or fills, the change made requiring the submission of the question to the Secretary of the Interior. All minerals, including coal, within the limits of the right of way are expressly reserved, and the same may be mined, but shall be so mined as not to injure or interfere with the operations of any railroad. As to the provision in regard to wharves and piers, the amendments place the same under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the right to use all navigable waters is reserved to the United States in trust for the people of any State or States which may hereafter be created out of said District.

The change in this respect is made with the view to make the purpose of the act more clear than the original phraseology. It is also agreed that the Secretary of the Interior may regulate the rates of transportation on railroads for freight and passengers, but that the rates shall be posted as required by the interstate-commerce act. The scope of the act has been enlarged to include tramways and wagon roads, with such provisions in relation to the same as will not allow the monopolizing of any canyon or pass. It is also agreed that when a preliminary actual survey and plat of the proposed road shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior, the company filing the same shall have one year in which to make its profile of definite location. The Senate amendment recommended by the conference committee provides that after filing the map of preliminary survey with the Secretary of the Interior, the definite location may be made in sections of 20 miles each, and also that the failure to file a map of definite location within one year, or the failure to complete the entire road within four years after filing the map of definite location, shall work a forfeiture of the right of way for the uncompleted portion.

3. The Senate amendment, together with the modifications recommended by the conferees, provides for wagon roads, wire rope, aerial, or other tramways, giving terminals of not to exceed 20 acres, the terminals to be paid for at the rate of $1.25 per acre. These roads shall not be permitted to hold lands along the tide water more than 40 rods along the shore line. Minerals, including coal, are also reserved. A preliminary survey is required to be filed the same as in case of railways, and the maps of definite location in the same way. These companies are to be allowed to charge tolls where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that public convenience requires their construction, and where the expense of constructing the same is not less than an average of $500 per mile. Tolls can not be collected unless upon written authority from the Secretary of the Interior, which shall specify the rates.

Such rates of toll for freight and passengers are required to be posted where the toll is to be collected. A failure to keep such rates posted and an attempt to collect such toll without written authority shall constitute a misdemeanor, to be punished by fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, with imprisonment, in case of nonpayment, not exceeding ninety days. It also provides that where such wagon roads or tramways have been heretofore constructed at a cost of not less than $500 per mile for wagon roads or not less than $500 per half mile of tramway, the owners shall have a prior right to apply for a right of way and stations, as authorized in this act. A failure to construct or build a wagon road or tramway shall, after one year, cause forfeiture of the uncompleted part. In case of failure to keep a wagon road or tramway in good condition, the Secretary of the Interior may prohibit the collection of tolls pending the making of the necessary repairs.

4. As to mortgages on railways, tramways, and wagon roads, the same are also to be recorded in the office of the secretary of the District of Alaska, and also in the office of the secretary of state of the State or Territory in which the company was organized.

5. A mechanic's lien is provided, taking precedence of any mortgage in favor of contractors, subcontractors, material men, or laborers constructing wagon roads, railways, or tramways.

6. In section 7, in regard to reservations, the conferees recommend the adoption of the Senate amendment striking out the provision as to reservations by treaty stipulation, and the Senate recedes from its disagreement as to such reservations by act of Congress "heretofore passed;" the effect being to exclude from the act reservations provided for by act of Congress.

7. As to the right of transfer of wagon roads, tramways, and railways under this act the House recedes from its disagreement as to the Senate amendment authorizing such transfer after at least one-fourth of the proposed mileage shall have been completed.

8. Some controversies having arisen between individuals and corporations as to work already done and surveys already made, the Senate amendment on this subject has been modified and a provision inserted, which we quote, as the terms of the same clearly appear in the amendment:

"Provided, That where within ninety days after the approval of this act proof is made to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that actual surveys, evidenced by designated monuments, were made, and the line of a railroad, wagon road, or tramway located thereby, or that actual construction was commenced on the line of any railroad, wagon road, or tramway prior to January 21, 1898, the rights to inure hereunder shall, if the terms of this act are complied with as to such railroad, wagon road, or tramway, relate back to the date when such survey or construction was commenced; and in all conflicts relative to the right of way or other privilege of this act, the person, company, or corporation having been first in time in actual survey or construction, as the case may be, shall be deemed first in right."

9. Section 9 has been rewritten, so as to make it a little more explicit as to surveys, and also so as to include wagon roads and tramways.

10. The act of 1891 authorized the taking of land for purposes therein provided in substantially square form, not to exceed 160 acres. The Senate amendment, as modified in conference, authorizes the taking, for similar purposes, not to exceed 80 acres, the price to be paid to be $2.50 per acre. This applies to future selections for this purpose. In order to prevent a monopoly of shore rights on navigable waters, it is also agreed that such lands shall not abut more than 80 rods on any shore, and that a roadway along such shore or parallel thereto is reserved to the public 60 feet in width. Every alternate 80 rods fronting on navigable waters is reserved to the Government.

As to lands taken or in process of being taken under the act of March 30, 1891, it is proposed by the conferees to preserve all existing rights, and to authorize patents to be taken out, requiring, however, the claimants to make their proof under this act and also limiting such claims to those initiated prior to January 21, 1891, the date at which this bill passed the House of Representatives. It is also recommended that such entries shall not be held valid for more than 160 rods of frontage on any navigable waters. The purpose of these limitations is to prevent the use of the act of 1891 to unduly monopolize any of the waters for fishing and for other purposes. In some instances such claims have not been taken in square form, so as to conform to the shore rights authorized under the act of 1891, and it has not been deemed proper to extend them beyond what was contemplated under the said act.

11. For the use of the natives of Alaska the Secretary of the Interior will be authorized to reserve suitable tracts for landing places along water front of any stream, inlet, bay, or sea or seashore and the Annette and Pribilof islands, and also reserved from this act, as well as islands that are now occupied under lease for the propagation of foxes. The Senate amendments make provision for the taking of testimony in proving up or contesting claims, and also for publishing the necessary notices thereto, adopting the course in a general way pursued under the laws now in force in regard to public lands in other parts of the country. And the conferees, with some slight modifications, have accepted the same.

12. The conferees agreed to the Senate amendment numbered 54, or section 11, giving authority to the Secretary of the Interior to make rules and regulations for selling the timber in the District of Alaska, similar to the provisions in operation in other parts of the United States, and also authorizing the permission of residents, settlers, individual miners and prospectors for minerals to use the timber for firewood, fencing, buildings, mining prospecting, and domestic purposes as may be actually needed by such persons for such purposes.

13. Section 12 has been stricken out and in lieu thereof sections 13 and 13 inserted, the effect of which will be as follows: Section 13 authorizes the President to increase the number of land districts and to appoint registers and receivers therefor, and regulates the salary, increasing the minimum salary from $500 per annum to $1,500 per annum, and allowing the fees provided by law for like services in the State of Oregon, the annual compensation not to exceed $3,000 for each of said officers.

Owing to the unsettled condition of the country and the rapid influx of people it was deemed best to leave this in the hands of the President, so that land offices might be provided when the necessity of their existence should become suddenly apparent, instead of waiting for the slow process of Congressional action. Section 13 has been inserted, and section 13 of the Senate amendment has been changed to section 14. The effect of these two sections as now modified by the conference committee is as follows: Section 13 extends to native-born citizens of the Dominion of Canada the same mining rights and privileges in the District of Alaska, or may be, that are accorded to American citizens in the Dominion of Canada, not to exceed, however, such privileges as are enjoyed by an American citizen in Alaska.

Section 14 is modified so as to extend the bonding privilege at all ports in Alaska to American citizens and citizens of the Government of the Dominion of Canada, when the President of the United States shall by proclamation announce that corresponding privileges have been and are being accorded by the Dominion Government in behalf of citizens of the United States and those who have declared their intention to become such, in respect of goods, wares, and merchandise passing through the territory of the Dominion of Canada to any point in the District of Alaska from any point in such District.

In regard to the North Atlantic fishery question the President of the United States is authorized to appoint three commissioners to meet a like number of commissioners appointed on the part of the Dominion Government, the said commissioners to formulate and consider a plan for the settlement of this vexed question, and also to take under advisement the adjustment of other questions in relation to the trade and commerce of the two countries; the findings of the said commissioners to be reported to Congress through the President of the United States.

JOHN. F LACEY,
W. R. ELLIS,
JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] reserves the point of order upon the report.

Mr. LOUD. I did, Mr. Speaker. Of course this is almost entirely a new bill, and it is hard to determine as to the new legislation which has been incorporated in the report from the hurried reading of the conference report. I desire, therefore, simply to reserve the point of order until we may have some discussion of the bill and an explanation of certain features in controversy between the two Houses.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOODY. I understand the gentleman from California does not press the point of order at the present time, but reserves it. I should like to ask if that reservation—in case the gentleman from California does not finally make the point of order—will inure to other members who may desire to press the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. LACEY. I am perfectly content, Mr. Speaker, to have all parts of this bill, or the report, considered by the House. I shall not insist on pressing any portion of it to which objection has been made.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of my distinguished friend from Iowa in charge of this bill, if he will give me his attention for a moment, to what appears to be an omission from the report—something I understood was in the report, but which I now fear has been omitted. I refer to one of the provisions of the Senate amendment which provided that, in any contest between rival applicants for any right of way, it should be adjusted in a certain manner. It was the intention, as I understood it, to make provision for all cases of this kind where there was a conflict between parties.

Many cases involving the question of priority have been raised on the border, and some of them in the district that I have the honor to represent. It is my desire that the bill should make provision to meet the conditions that have arisen there, and which are constantly arising with reference to this question, and I propose that any party or parties who after ninety days from the passage of the bill shall make proof before the Secretary of the Interior of such preceding right shall be entitled to recognition. I understood such a provision as that was to go into the bill. It does not seem to be there. I hope by inadvertence only it was left out.

I fear the report places the whole matter in this attitude: First, it requires that all of these people shall complete their proof within ninety days, irrespective of distance or inconvenience or any other difficulties that may intervene, and, secondly, it calls for a character of proof before the Secretary of the Interior, which may exclude them from the right to make their proofs before any court in which the case is pending.

I understood the provision which was in contemplation to meet this point had been agreed to by my distinguished friend, and would be embodied in the conference report. It was a provision which was intended to avoid the chief trouble which I apprehend will arise from the report in its present condition. I regret therefore that this particular feature seems to have been eliminated from the report and forms no part of the bill. The matter is left entirely to the discernment and judgment of a commission.

Now, I regard commissions, as a rule, as an unfortunate way of dealing with questions with which we should deal ourselves. It is a kind of delegation of the powers of the representatives of this Congress which, in my judgment, ought to be rarely exercised. And while I have no doubt at all that in the exercise of his power the Chief Executive will meet in every way the views of gentlemen who favor this mode of dealing with the subject, still I believe the matter is one with which we ought to deal ourselves—one which we can settle without difficulty ourselves—and there is no necessity for its consideration by any other body. To avoid that, my suggestion and my amendment, that there should be a provision that not more than two members of that commission be of any one political party, should have obtained.

Then, sir, to conclude my suggestion before the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. LACEY] begins his statement, the proofs which are required to be made within ninety days, in order to give any person preceding rights, do not allow a sufficient time. One can not come from Alaska before the Secretary of the Interior and make his proof in such a short time.

Secondly, these proofs should be submitted before a tribunal having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, where the suits are now lodged.

Third, this commission, if it is to be appointed by the distinguished Executive, ought to be appointed under a clause limiting its membership to consist of not more than two of any one political party, in order that hereafter there may be no suspicion of partisanship in any of its conclusions.

Mr. Speaker, you will observe that not only the fishery questions, in which New England is largely interested, together with a portion of my district, are involved in this, but the provision also permits, in its elastic form, this commission to take jurisdiction of the disputed border question, which is one of the international disputes of this nation, and which at one time gave promise to involve us in much trouble and annoyance. For that reason, among others, it is all the more important that that commission should be as nearly nonpartisan as we can, in the performance of our duty, make it.

I make these suggestions to the chairman in order that he may keep in view the fact that I made these suggestions to the conference committee. They have possibly forgotten them. They ought not to have been forgotten, and I should like to have him address himself to the question as to whether these amendments ought not now to prevail.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I think that amendment No. 51, as modified in the conference agreement, fully protects the rights of the people to whom the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] has referred. As to requiring the proof to be filed within ninety days, that refers to matters and controversies heretofore. There will be no trouble about that. They are required to file their proof with the Secretary of the Interior; but if there is litigation pending between individuals as to whom this proof should inure to the benefit of, that would be a matter for the court to decide, and the conference committee thought that the best thing to do in regard to controversies of the kind referred to by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] was to provide that in all conflicts relative to the right of way, or other privileges under this act, the person, company, or corporation having been first in time, in actual survey or construction, shall be deemed first in right.

Now, the difficulty that my friend from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] has been apprehending grows out of the fact that what has been done in the way of making improvements, tramways, wagon roads, preparation for railways, and things of that kind in the District of Alaska heretofore, has been done without any authority of law whatever, and by reason of being without authority of law, no rights would be recognized by the court. They would be treated as trespassers, and their rights would be disregarded, and perhaps the persons who are in possession at the time of the passage of the law would be the first in point of time and would be the only ones that the court could consider.

Inasmuch as many works of a public character have been attempted heretofore in contemplation of the enactment of this law, the committee thought that it was no more than right to legalize their action and to give preference in point of time to those who made the first survey or who did the first work. Now, that being the case, where controversies have arisen in court like the Brackett Case and other matters which my friend from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] has in his mind, the courts will unquestionably regard the action heretofore as being no longer unlawful, it having been legalized by Congress, and the question of priority between individuals would have to be settled by the courts.

The Secretary of the Interior would no doubt determine for himself whom the patents should issue to, as to whom the grants should go under the provisions of this law; but if previous controversies have arisen in the courts, the patents that would be issued would undoubtedly inure in trust for the real parties who had the equitable right, to be subsequently determined by the court. It often occurs that a patent is issued by the Land Office or by the Interior Department to persons who have not the actual legal or equitable right. The court subsequently decrees the patentee to be a trustee and orders him to make a conveyance, or appoints the commissioner to make the conveyance for him, to the persons to whom the rights should equitably inure.

Now, I think we have fully protected all the rights of persons who have become involved in controversies among themselves in relation to these rights of way, both for wagon roads and for tramways. I believe there are no such controversies as to railroads. There may be, however, in the future.

Mr. FISCHER. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. FISCHER. Have you not provided in this bill for some legislation concerning islands which have heretofore been turned over to the Indian Bureau for reservation purposes, particularly Annette Island, and is there not a bill now pending in the Indian Committee on which there have been a number of hearings, involving the question of the settlement of the government and affairs of that island in particular?

Mr. LACEY. We have expressly endeavored to steer clear of that controversy. The provision in amendment No. 55 provides that Annette, Pribilof, and the islands for the propagation of foxes shall be exempted from the operation of this act. So that we leave these islands just where they were.

Mr. HULL. Will my colleague yield to a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. Is there any legislation in the conference report outside of the matters in dispute between the two Houses?

Mr. LACEY. I think not.

Mr. HULL. I did not catch the full report very clearly in the reading, but I understood that in this conference report there is a provision to create a commission to adjust trade relations between Canada and the United States, and if there is, it is a matter which is entirely out of the jurisdiction of the committee, and is new legislation of a most important character.

Mr. LACEY. Section 13 attempted to adjust various matters in controversy between the Dominion of Canada and the United States.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Where did the proposition originate?

Mr. LACEY. The proposition was attached to this bill in the Senate. It passed though the gantlet of the point of order there. Of course, representing the Committee on Public Lands in this matter, I had no desire to have this bill loaded down with any international problem of that kind, and, in fact, the bill has now been hung up for six or eight weeks in conference by reason of the fact that section 13 was attached to the bill. That involved the question of fish bait along the coast of Maine and all these various matters that have given rise to so much annoyance in the past; and there was an attempt made to provide for in that kind of way that which was entirely within our previous contention on the subject—that, in fact, the Dominion of Canada yield to us the various claims that they made on that subject.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. How the Committee on Public Lands could possibly obtain jurisdiction of a question of fish bait it is impossible for me to conceive, except for the fact that they are sometimes caught by earthworms. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. I do not think there was anything relating to the jurisdiction considered as being dependent on the question of earthworms. The proposition was simply this: That we were granting certain rights in relation to railroads built through American soil into the Klondike region, and that involved a controversy between Canada and ourselves in regard to the bonding privilege.

That was the point on which jurisdiction hung. In the Senate they attempted to give Canada the bonding privilege, and they held that it must yield up its contention on the question of fish bait and matters of that kind; and it was endeavored to meet the question so that it was entirely satisfactory to New England. I think the provision was drafted by my friend from Massachusetts, and it was certainly——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have jurisdiction of the question of the bonding privilege and commercial relations.

Mr. LACEY. The Senate would have jurisdiction in relation to this proposition, and the point of order was made, and after they passed that point of order, or it was not made, they proceeded to insert this in the Senate, and we were confronted with section 13 as an amendment to the bill. After it got into the bill it was just like an amendment concerning forest reserves, which was put into an appropriation bill. When that amendment was put in an appropriation bill, the Committee on Appropriations called members of the Committee on Public Lands to their assistance, and when this matter was injected into a land bill we conferred freely with various members of the Committee on Ways and Means and the New England delegation, who are not associated with the committee, on this question, and we were told that we were acting entirely outside of the beaten path with reference to that controversy, and we were warned to be careful.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I represent a very fair proportion of the border line between New England and Canada, and I have never heard of this at all until this moment.

Mr. LACEY. I consulted a gentleman who is sometimes nicknamed "Fishbait."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Who is that?

Mr. LACEY. I would hardly suggest the identity in this connection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What part of New England does he represent?

Mr. LACEY. A part of Maine. He lives at Lewiston, Me.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. A Senator?

Mr. LACEY. I do not know, but I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] drafted that amendment.

Mr. MOODY. Not the amendment that is here.

Mr. LACEY. I mean the original amendment. I thought I could see that it was the kindly work of somebody that was trying to take very good care of New England; and I thought it was satisfactory, and he had conferred with other members of the delegation.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me one moment?

Mr. LACEY. I thought it was entirely satisfactory.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman refers to one of the Senators from Maine. I want to say in reference to this matter, this bill as it originally passed the House was a bill relating entirely to matters of the public lands in Alaska.

Mr. LOUD. A bill of about four pages.

Mr. DINGLEY. The Senate attached a provision to it for the purpose of settling certain controversies with reference to bonded goods on Stikine River, and they provided that certain privileges would be granted on condition that Canada would agree to certain privileges to the deep-sea fisheries of the country.

Now, that came to the House, and the House nonconcurred, and it went into conference. It seems the conferees have gone beyond the differences between the two Houses, which did include the fishery question, and have provided for a commission to consider the differences between Canada and the United States, not only with reference to the differences on the Stikine River, Alaska, not only in relation to the fisheries, but with reference to the trade relations between the two countries. The conferees went outside of their jurisdiction the moment they stepped in that direction. The provision that attracted my attention was that which provided that it should not be ratified by Congress.

To two gentlemen who showed it to me I remarked that if anything of that kind was to be done, the findings of this commission should be approved by Congress and not simply by the President of the United States, because it might involve the entire overturn of our tariff respecting the imports from Canada. The more I have thought of that matter, the more I am persuaded that we are getting into pretty deep water. Here is a commission intrusted not only with the differences between Canada and the United States as to the bonded privileges on the Stikine River, not only with reference to our fisheries, but now in this report of the conferees it is intrusted with our commercial relations with Canada. To be sure, their report of findings is to be approved by Congress, and, although it did not occur to me when the matter was first shown to me, I do now object to putting into one bag the differences respecting the seal fisheries, the differences respecting the deep-water fisheries, and the differences with reference to the Stikine River and bonded privileges, and the whole question of duties on imports from Canada.

This commission is exactly what Canada has been asking for for some time. It seems we have at last reached what Canada has sought, viz, a commission. That is all well enough from some points of view, but I do not like to have so many things bundled up in one commission, where they may be trading back and forth, trading off the interests of the border States on the north in respect to a great many articles that concern the farmers for some little thing in reference to the Alaska seal fisheries that is perhaps of no value. While at first it seemed to me that that might be done without any great danger, the more I have thought of it, the more I am persuaded that we are getting into deep water, and the appointment of a commission to consider all the differences when they are all bundled up together, as they are here, does not seem to me wise; and if adopted we may find ourselves obliged to approve of some things that we otherwise would never have thought of.

It seems to me that our trade relations ought not to be connected and bundled up with anything else.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY. Does not the tariff act passed at this present session in reference to our trade relations with Canada properly guard and render unnecessary the appointment of a commission?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly. I call attention to the fact that the Canadian commissioners who were here sought for precisely this thing, and we declined to put under one commission matters that had no sort of relation to each other, for fear that there might be granted to them certain things for others which were of no sort of consequence to us.

The whole northern tier of States, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, have their interests possibly affected by this commission, that is principally to be appointed in the manner that has not been discussed by Congress at all, coming in on a conference report in this matter entirely beyond the jurisdiction of the conferees, and I must say it seems to me unwise. At first it seemed to me that it might be done with the approval of Congress, but I confess I do not like to see all these matters bundled together and submitted to a commission whose membership I know nothing about.

I make this suggestion because it will inevitably be a matter of grave importance in the future, and I regret that we should have gone outside and of the matters that were within the jurisdiction of the conferees, matters relating to the navigation of the Stickine River and the bonding privilege at Wrangell; and if the Senate has added the northeastern fisheries, I have no objection to that. But when commercial relations between the two countries are proposed to be submitted to a commission, I think they have gone too far. There was no such matter as this in disagreement between the two Houses; therefore it is subject to a point of order if anybody chooses to make it.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, as my agency in the Senate amendment to this bill has been alluded to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], I desire to explain it to the House. When this bill left the House, it was simply an Alaskan land bill in which I had no peculiar interest or any interest beyond the general interest which we all have in legislation that concerns the country. After the bill reached the Senate it was proposed in the committee of that body in charge of the bill to insert a section granting certain rights of transportation in bond within the District of Alaska which would inure to the benefit of Canadian interests. That committee thought it wise to attach to the grant of the right of transportation in bond certain conditions for the benefit of American interests. Among other subjects was considered the interests of the northeastern fisheries. It had been suggested to the Senate committee that I had some special knowledge and concern in regard to the fisheries, and at the request of some Senators I drafted a form of condition in relation to the fisheries in these words:

Provided, That the fishing vessels of the United States having authority under the laws of the United States to touch and trade at any port or ports, place or places, in the British dominions of North America shall have the privilege of entering such port or ports, place or places, for the purpose of purchasing bait and all other supplies and outfits in the same manner and under the same regulations as may exist therein applicable to trading vessels of the most-favored nations, and of transshipping their catch to be transported in bond through said dominions without payment of duties, in the same manner as other merchandise destined for the United States may be thus transported.

This provision was inserted in the bill in Senate amendment No. 56, and became part of section 13 of the bill as amended by the Senate. The section is as follows:

SEC. 13. That under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the privilege of entering goods, wares, and merchandise in bond or of placing them in bonded warehouses at the port of Wrangell, in the District of Alaska, and of withdrawing the same for exportation to any place in British Columbia or the Northwest Territory without payment of duty, is hereby granted to the Government of the Dominion of Canada and its citizens or citizens of the United States whenever and so long as it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, who shall ascertain and declare the fact by proclamation, that no exclusive privilege of transporting through British Columbia or the Northwest Territory goods or passengers arriving from or destined for other ports in Alaska is granted to any person or corporation by the Government of the Dominion of Canada, and that the privilege has been duly accorded to responsible persons or corporations operating transportation lines in British Columbia or the Northwest Territory of making direct connection with transportation lines in Alaska, and that the Government of the Dominion of Canada has consented to and is allowing in behalf of citizens of the United States the entry free of duty of all miners' outfits and a supply of provisions and clothing, the whole not exceeding in quantity 1,000 pounds for each citizen of the United States proposing to engage in mining in British Columbia or the Northwest Territory, and that the Government of the Dominion of Canada has removed all unequal restrictions as to the issuance of miners' licenses to citizens of the United States operating or intending to operate in British Columbia or the Northwest Territory, and that the fishing vessels of the United States having authority under the laws of the United States to touch and trade at any port or ports, place or places, in the British dominions of North America shall have the privilege of entering such port or ports, place or places, for the purpose of purchasing bait and all other supplies and outfits in the same manner and under the same regulations as may exist therein applicable to trading vessels of the most favored nations, and of transshipping their catch to be transported in bond through said dominions without payment of duties, in the same manner as other merchandise destined for the United States may be thus transported.

I will attempt to show later the significance of the provision relating to the fisheries. The House nonconcurred in the Senate amendment and the bill went to the conference committee. By the report of that committee now before the House for action the condition with respect to the fisheries has been stricken out and in its place is inserted the following:

And the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint three commissioners to meet a like number of commissioners appointed on the part of the Government of Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada, the said commissioners to formulate and consider a plan for the settlement and final determination of the North Atlantic fishery question and the ultimate adjustment of any other question the solution of which would further promote the friendly relations now existing between the two countries in respect of mutual interests in trade and commerce on the American Continent, the findings of the said commissioners to be reported to Congress through the President of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I now make the point of order that the conference committee has exceeded its authority by reporting upon a subject which has not been committed to it by the House. In support of the point of order, I suggest that the section reported by the conference committee is neither germane to the original bill nor to Senate amendment No. 56, for which it is a substitute. As I understand the question, it is not conclusive against the provision reported by the committee that it is not germane to the original bill as it left the House. It must also appear that it is not germane to the Senate amendment. The conference provision is clearly not germane to the original bill, since that bill dealt entirely with lands within the District of Alaska and had nothing to do with the general trade relations between the United States and the Dominion of Canada.

It is equally clear that the conference provision is not germane to the Senate amendment. The Senate amendment attached to a grant of right of transportation in bond in the District of Alaska a condition that certain privileges which may be broadly termed commercial privileges should first be granted to American fishermen. In the place of this condition there is substituted a proposition authorizing the appointment of commissioners by the Government for the settlement of the North Atlantic fishery question and of every other question relating to the mutual interests of the two countries in trade and commerce on this continent.

It is difficult to describe two questions that are further apart than the proposition contained in the Senate amendment and that in the substitute proposed by the conference committee. The latter is not germane to the former, and I submit that, being not germane either to the original bill or to the Senate amendment, the point of order is well taken and must be sustained.

But before asking the Chair to pass upon the point of order, I desire to more fully explain the significance of the Senate amendment. This will require me to touch at some length, but as briefly as I may, upon the history of the controversy with regard to the Atlantic fisheries.

It is the oldest diplomatic question which this country has. It antedates the Constitution itself. More than that, it began before the Declaration of Independence. By unfriendly legislation the British Parliament sought to exclude the New England colonies from a participation in the Atlantic fisheries in the hope that they might be thus, to use the language of Lord North, "starved into submission." When the Revolutionary war had so far progressed that a treaty of peace and independence seemed possible, the Massachusetts legislature, on October 17, 1781, by a resolution instructed the delegation in Congress to represent the importance of the fisheries to that State and to insist that the continuance of the right should be secured in the treaty of peace.

Accordingly our commissioners were instructed upon the importance of the question, but apparently the acquisition of American rights in the fisheries was not insisted upon as an ultimatum. Fortunately for the country as well as for New England, John Adams was one of the commissioners to negotiate the treaty of peace. He was determined to secure the fisheries regardless of instructions, and insisted that no treaty should be made without a clear acknowledgment of the right to the fisheries. Accordingly in the definite treaty of peace, concluded September 3, 1783, at Paris, the third article contained the following provision on the subject:

It is agreed that the people of the United States shall continue to enjoy unmolested the right to take fish of every kind on the Grand Bank, and on all the other banks of Newfoundland; also in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and all other places in the sea where the inhabitants of both countries used at any time heretofore to fish. And also that the inhabitants of the United States shall have liberty to take fish of every kind on such part of the coast of Newfoundland as British fishermen shall use (but not to dry or cure the same on that island), and also on the coasts, bays, and creeks of all other of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America; and that the American fishermen shall have liberty to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks of Nova Scotia, Magdalen Islands, and Labrador, so long as the same shall remain unsettled; but so soon as the same or either of them shall be settled it shall not be lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such settlements without a previous agreement for that purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground.

It will be observed that the article provided that our people should "continue to enjoy unmolested the right" of the deep-sea fisheries and should "have liberty to take fish" along the shores of the British provinces. This practically gave to the United States as complete an enjoyment of the fisheries as was possessed by the subjects of Great Britain. Americans continued to enjoy these full rights until the war of 1812. It should be noted that by Article VIII of the treaty it was provided that the navigation of the Mississippi should be free to the subjects of Great Britain. When the time arrived for negotiating a treaty of peace at the conclusion of the war of 1812 there were three important considerations which largely affected the treaty.

First. New England, and more especially Massachusetts, had been opposed to the war and hostile to the Administration. Massachusetts especially had carried its hostility so far as to border upon disloyalty. There were many Americans who would have regarded with indifference any sacrifice which this country might be compelled to make in the final treaty.

Second. A large part of this country was opposed to the continuance of the British right of novigation of the Mississippi.

Third. Canada complained that Canadian interests had been sacrificed by the treaty of 1783, and insisted, among other things, that the fisheries should be treated as wholly English. A memorial from Newfoundland, dated November 8, 1813, pointed out that the exclusion of American competition in the fisheries during the war had doubled the number of men employed on the Labrador shores and urged that foreigners should be excluded from a share of the fisheries, "from which a large proportion of our best national defense will be derived." The British commissioners were instructed that as a condition of the treaty the fisheries should be regarded as British.

England regarded our rights in the fisheries secured by the treaty of peace at the end of the Revolution as terminated by the war of 1812. With these conditions it was fortunate for the American fisheries that John Quincy Adams was one of the American commissioners, claiming, as his father had done before him, that the fisheries were the natural right of the revolted colonies. He insisted that they were not affected by the war; that the fishery rights secured at the end of the Revolution were in the nature of reservations of previously existing rights, and not a grant from the British Crown; that they were executed provisions, as the independence of the colonies and the settlement of the boundary. This contention carried with it the theory that the British right of navigation of the Mississippi was also unaffected by the war.

The inevitable result of such a claim was a conflict between

Henry Clay, one of the commissioners, and Adams, because Clay was opposed to the continuance of the British right of navigating the Mississippi. By the tact of Gallatin the differences were finally reconciled and our commissioners offered either to be silent as to both questions or to reserve both without prejudice. The treaty of Ghent was finally signed on September 24, 1814, and was silent on both the Mississippi and the fisheries. A conflict began at once. American fishermen were warned off the coast of the British Provinces and the United States protested. Finally the convention of 1818 was entered into. Its first article is as follows:

Whereas differences have arisen respecting the liberty claimed by the United States for the inhabitants thereof, to take, dry, and cure fish on certain coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, it is agreed between the high contracting parties that the inhabitants of the said United States shall have forever, in common with the subjects of His Britannic Majesty, the liberty to take fish of every kind on that part of the southern coast of Newfoundland which extends from Cape Ray to the Rameau Islands, on the western and northern coast of Newfoundland, from the said Cape Ray to the Quirpon Islands, on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, and also on the coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks from Mount Joly, on the southern coast of Labrador, to and through the Straits of Belle Isle, and thence northwardly indefinitely along the coast, without prejudice, however, to any of the exclusive rights of the Hudson Bay Company.

And that the American fishermen shall also have liberty forever to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks of the southern part of the coast of Newfoundland hereabove described, and of the coasts of Labrador; but so soon as the same, or any portion thereof, shall be settled, it shall not be lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such portion so settled, without previous agreement for such purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground.

And the United States hereby renounce forever any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, or cure fish on or within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America not included within the abovementioned limits: Provided, however, That the American fishermen shall be admitted to enter such bays or harbors for the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever. But they shall be under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any other manner whatever abusing the privileges hereby reserved to them.

By this article the right of Americans to take fish from the high seas was by implication conceded. Americans were given the right of the inshore fisheries on certain defined coasts of the British possessions and "renounced forever" the liberty of taking fish within 3 marine miles of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of certain other parts of the British dominions, with a proviso that they should be admitted to enter such forbidden territory for purposes of shelter, repairing damages, and purchasing wood and water.

This convention regulates the rights of the countries in the fisheries to day, although, as I shall show, it has upon more than one occasion been modified temporarily. By the treaty concluded June 5, 1854, commonly called the Elgin treaty, the American fishermen were given the right of the inshore fisheries along the coast of the British provinces, and it was agreed that the following articles should be admitted into each country free of duty:

Grain, flour, and breadstuffs of all kinds.
Animals of all kinds.
Fresh, smoked, and salted meats.
Cotton wool, seeds, and vegetables.
Undried fruits, dried fruits.
Fish of all kinds.
Products of fish and of all other creatures living in the water.
Poultry, eggs.
Hides, furs, skins, or tails, undressed.
Stone or marble in its crude or unwrought state.
Slate.
Butter, cheese, tallow.
Lard, horns, manures.
Ores of metals of all kinds.
Coal.
Pitch, tar, turpentine, ashes.
Timber and lumber of all kinds—round, hewed, and sawed, unmanufactured in whole or in part.
Firewood.
Plants, shrubs, and trees.
Pelts, wool.
Fish oil.
Rice, broom corn, and bark.
Gypsum, ground or unground.
Hewn or wrought or unwrought burr or grindstones.
Dyestuffs.
Flax, hemp, and tow, unmanufactured.
Unmanufactured tobacco.
Rags.

Here was a reciprocity in what? In the products of the farm, the forest, the mine, and the deep sea, and nothing else. In the negotiation of this treaty little regard was given to American interests. This treaty was by its terms terminable on notice after the expiration of ten years. It was terminated by a resolution of Congress which passed the House in December, 1864, by a vote of 88 to 54, and the Senate in January, 1865, by a vote of 33 to 8. The next attempt to settle the fishery question was by the treaty of Washington, concluded on the 8th day of May, 1871, commonly known as the Alabama claims treaty. Our experience under this treaty proved even more unfortunate than that under the Elgin treaty. By its terms Americans were given the inshore fisheries along the maritime provinces and British subjects certain rights of inshore fisheries on our coast.

Fish oil and fish were admitted reciprocally free of duty, and commissioners were provided for to determine the amounts which the United States ought to pay to Great Britain for the balance of advantages accruing to the American fisheries. This commission met at Halifax, and on the 23d of November, 1877, awarded that the United States should pay five and a half millions of dollars to the British Government. It would have been much better, Mr. Speaker, to have paid five and a half millions of dollars to have been spared the treaty of 1871 than to have obtained its so-called advantages for nothing. Our markets were thrown open to the products of Canadian fisheries. Soon after the Halifax award the Canadian Government began to pay bounties to its fishing vessels and fishermen, and from the year 1882 to 1896, inclusive, paid more than two and a quarter millions of dollars in bounties. On this subject I insert the following table and information taken from the Thirtieth Annual Report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries of Canada, made and printed during the current year:

The following table shows the number of claims and fishermen and the amount of bounty paid each year since 1882:

Year.	Number of claims.	Number of fishermen.	Amount paid.
1882	11,972	29,932	$172,285.47
1883	13,086	33,399	190,344.95
1884	12,468	31,297	185,710.98
1885	14,124	33,544	161,539.39
1886	14,900	29,523	160,903.59
1887	15,416	34,387	165,757.53
1888	15,599	34,887	159,185.53
1889	17,078	38,343	158,526.54
1890	17,959	39,050	158,241.01
1891	18,506	38,859	156,891.65
1892	14,442	29,064	159,752.14
1893	13,636	28,013	158,234.10
1894	14,350	29,222	160,006.86
1895	14,789	30,806	163,567.99
1896	14,975	29,486	154,389.77
Total	223,290	493,834	2,364,405.92

The bounty was paid each year on the following basis:

1882. Vessels, $3 per ton, one-half to the owner and the other half to the crew.

Boats at the rate of $5 per annum, one-fifth to the owner and four-fifths to the men.

1883. Vessels, $2 per ton, and boats $2.50 per man, distributed as in 1882.

1884. Vessels, $3 per ton, as in 1882 and 1883.

Boats from 14 to 18 feet keel	$1.00
Boats from 18 to 25 feet keel	1.50
Boats from 25 feet keel upward	2.00

And boat fishermen $3 each.

1885, 1886, and 1887. Vessels, $2 per ton, as in previous years. Boats measuring 12 feet keel having been admitted in 1885, the rates were: Boats from 12 to 18 feet keel, $1; from 18 to 25 feet keel, $1.50; from 25 feet keel upward, $2, and fishermen, $3 each.

1888. Vessels, $1.50 per ton, one-half each to owner and crew. Boats, the same as in 1885, 1886, and 1887.

1889, 1890, and 1891. Vessels, $1.50 per ton, as in 1888. Boats, $1 each. Boat fishermen, $2.

1892. Vessels, $3 per ton, one-half each to owner and crew. Boats, $1 each. Boat fishermen, $3.

1893. Vessels, $2.90 per ton, paid as formerly. Boats, $1 each. Boat fishermen, $3.

1894. Vessels, $2.70, distributed as in previous years. Boats, $1 each. Boat fishermen, $3.

1895. Vessels, $2.60 per ton, half each to owner and crew. Boats, $1 each. Boat fishermen, $3.

1896. Vessels, $1 per ton, which was paid to the owners, and vessel fishermen $5 each, clause 5 of the regulations having been amended accordingly. Boats, $1 each, and boat fishermen, $2.50 per man.

Since 1882 12,280 vessels, totaling a tonnage of 452,016 tons, have received the bounty. The total number of vessel fishermen which received bounty is 93,732, being an average of 8 men per vessel.

The total number of boats to which bounty was paid since 1882 is 210,873, and the number of fishermen 400,102. Average number of men per boat, 2.

The highest bounty paid per head to vessel fishermen was $31.75 in 1893, the lowest 33 cents; while the highest to boat fishermen was $6, the lowest $2.

The general average paid per head is $4.79.

In the meantime, while the Canadian industry flourished, our own began to decay. Our fishermen are paid better wages, the cost of labor and material used in construction is higher, and the laws for protection and comfort of seamen are more rigid. Although the United States were entitled to the enjoyment of the so-called privileges conferred upon them by the treaty of 1871 for the period of twelve years, and although they had been with gross injustice compelled to pay five and a half millions of dollars for these privileges, six years before the fisheries provisions would expire the Senate unanimously passed a resolution declaring that the fishery arrangements should be terminated at the first possible moment.

Great Britain insisted that we should enjoy the advantages which we had obtained to the bitter end. So they continued until terminated by action of Congress at the first possible moment, on July 1, 1885. From that time to this day Canada has sought to open our markets to the products of its fisheries without payment of duty. From July 1, 1885, to the present time the convention of 1818 has been in force without modification. In 1818 no British ships from British colonies were permitted to enter the ports of the United States, and, reciprocally, no ships of the United States were permitted to enter the ports of British colonies.

Accordingly the convention of 1818 in permitting the entry of American fishing vessels to the colonial ports for certain restricted purposes made an exception in favor of American fishing vessels over American trading vessels. But in 1830 our ports were opened to British vessels coming from the British colonies on this continent and reciprocally by an order in council it was provided that the—

Ships of, and belonging to, the United States of America may import from the United States aforesaid into the British possessions abroad goods with produce of those States, and may export goods from the British possessions abroad to be carried to any foreign country whatever.

We now admit and since that time have admitted British vessels to our ports without any discrimination between fishing vessels and trading vessels and have contended that our own fishing vessels, when they have authority to touch and trade in foreign ports, should be permitted to enter ports of the British colonies for general purposes of trade, although they are forbidden by the convention of 1818 to fish within 3 marine miles of British shores. But Canada has persistently denied our claims in this regard. It is contended that a fishing vessel has no right to enter the ports of the British dominions in North America except for the purpose of obtaining wood, water, shelter, or repairing damage. I have no desire to use harsh language. I welcome the growing feeling of friendliness between the two great English-speaking nations.

I would not place one obstacle in its way, but I am constrained to express my deliberate opinion that Canada is now exercising, and for a long time past has exercised, her rights under the treaty of 1818 for the purpose of compelling this country to open its markets free to the products of the Canadian fisheries. Our fishing vessels are permitted to enter the colonial ports to repair damages, but can not purchase a mast or rope for the purpose of doing it. They may enter to obtain water, but can not purchase a barrel to contain it. They may enter to obtain shelter, but can not ship a man for the purpose of assisting an insufficient crew. They can not purchase bait or supplies. They can not land their cargo and transport it in bond to the American market, although the cargo of a trading vessel has that privilege.

The laws for the enforcement of the Canadian rights under the convention of 1818 are harsh, and every technicality is seized upon to condemn an American fishing vessel. It is but a short time since an American vessel was condemned by an opinion of a majority of the supreme court of Canada for fishing within Canadian waters because, after seining a school of mackerel upon the high seas she drifted by the action of wind and tide within the 3-mile limit before the fish were all conveyed from the seine to the vessel. It would almost seem as if the Canadian policy was designed to harass American fishermen in the pursuit of their legal rights so as to compel them either to abandon their business or open the markets of this country to the products of Canadian fisheries.

It is true that our fishing vessels are permitted to land on the payment of a license fee, but it is a fee which is almost prohibitive in its amount. After the termination in 1885 of the treaty of 1871, Great Britain sought to obtain the appointment of another commission, and President Cleveland in his message of December, 1885, recommended the appointment of such a commission; but the Senate on the 13th of April, 1886, adopted a resolution, by a majority of 25, declaring that no such commission ought to be established. In December, 1886, the President by a special message called attention to the "unfriendly and unwarranted treatment" of American fishermen by the Canadian authorities, and the result was the passage of the act approved March 3, 1887, which is as follows:

[Public—No. 125.]

An act to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels, in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that American fishing vessels or American fishermen, visiting or being in the waters or at any ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied or abridged in the enjoyment of any rights secured to them by treaty or law, or are or then lately have unjustly vexed or harassed in the enjoyment of such rights, or subjected to unreasonable restrictions, regulations, or requirements in respect of such rights; or otherwise unjustly vexed or harassed in said waters, ports or places; or whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any such fishing vessels or fishermen, having a permit under the laws of the United States to touch and trade at any port or ports, place or places, in the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied the privilege of entering such port or ports, place or places in the same manner and under the same regulations as may exist therein applicable to trading vessels of the most favored nation, or shall be unjustly vexed or harassed in respect thereof, or otherwise be unjustly vexed or harassed therein, or shall be prevented from purchasing such supplies as may there be lawfully sold to trading vessels of the most favored nation; or whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any other vessels of the United States, their masters or crews, so arriving at or being in such British waters or ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied any of the privileges therein accorded to the vessels, their masters or crews, of the most favored nation, or unjustly vexed or harassed in respect of the same, or unjustly vexed or harassed therein by the authorities thereof, then, and in either or all of such cases, it shall be lawful, and it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, in his discretion, by proclamation to that effect, to deny vessels, their masters and crews, of the British dominions of North America, any entrance into the waters, ports, or places of, or within the United States (with such exceptions in regard to vessels in distress, stress of weather, or needing supplies as to the President shall seem proper), whether such vessels shall have have come directly from said dominions on such destined voyage or by way of some port or place in such destined voyage elsewhere; and also, to deny entry into any port or place of the United States of fresh fish or salt fish or any other product of said dominions, or other goods coming from said dominions to the United States.

The President may, in his discretion, apply such proclamation to any part or to all of the foregoing-named subjects, and may revoke, qualify, limit, and renew such proclamation from time to time as he may deem necessary to the full and just execution of the purposes of this act. Every violation of any such proclamation, or any part thereof, is hereby declared illegal, and all vessels and goods so coming or being within the waters, ports, or places of the United States contrary to such proclamation shall be forfeited to the United States; and such forfeiture shall be enforced and proceeded upon in the same manner and with the same effect as in the case of vessels or goods whose importation or coming to or being in the waters or ports of the United States contrary to law may now be enforced and proceeded upon. Every person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act, or such proclamation of the President made in pursuance hereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Approved, March 3, 1887.

No action has ever been taken under this law, but it will be observed that by it the President has authority at any time to deny the entry into the ports of the United States of the products of British dominions or of goods coming to the United States from British dominions.

An unsuccessful attempt was made by the treaty concluded at Washington on the 15th of February, 1888, and called the Bayard-Chamberlain treaty, to settle the fishery controversy. This treaty contained the old provision for the reciprocal entry free of duty of fish and the products of fisheries. For that and other reasons which it is unnecessary to mention the treaty failed of confirmation in the Senate. Thus it will be seen that whenever the British Government has sought to settle the old controversy concerning the fisheries one element in the settlement has been the free admission of Canadian fish to our markets.

The tariff question has been complicated with the fishery question, or, to be entirely fair, it is considered by Canada to be an essential part of the fishery question. But let it be understood once for all that the fishery interests will never consent to any settlement of the fishery question which involves the abandonment of our tariff upon fish. The British Government has nothing to sell which we would purchase at that price. While a fair and just reciprocity with Canada is desired by us all, we will consent to no reciprocity which includes the free exchange of the products of the fisheries. The fishing industry stands upon grounds peculiar to itself. The considerations applicable to it are entirely apart from the general policy of protection. The fisheries have been considered by all nations as the nursery of the seamen of the commercial marine and the best resource of navies in time of war. The industry has been encouraged by every nation.

For many years this country paid a bounty to its fishermen, but that policy has been abandoned. Canada, as I have shown, pays a bounty. France pays a bounty, and Japan began to pay a bounty in April of this year. The competition which our fishermen principally meet is the Canadian competition and the French competition, and both are sustained by national bounties. Shall we, then, do anything which will endanger the only encouragement which is left to the industry, our protective tariff? Without it the industry would inevitably decay and perish. Even with it there is a yearly, monthly, daily struggle for existence.

Just a few words more and I have done. I was, of course, heartily in favor of the amendment adopted by the Senate, but I am told that in the form adopted it was not considered as friendly legislation by the Canadian authorities. I desire that this country should be upon terms of friendship with Canada, and I am willing that the amendment should go out. But when the substitute proposed by the conference committee first appeared I was doubtful about its expediency, although I have received assurances that there was no disposition to interfere with the tariff upon fish. The more I have considered the report of the conferees the greater has been my doubt. I have talked with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] about this subject a great deal and I have conferred with my constituents. The more I consider the amendment the more I dread it. I have shown that whenever we have had a commission upon this question the result has been injurious to American interests.

It is undoubtedly for the reason that Canada has always been represented upon these commissions by at least one man who has had thorough knowledge of the practical necessities of the Canadian fisheries. We have not always been thus represented. I have no fault with Canada's action in this respect. I commend it rather. It is an evidence of the good government which I am glad to see the Dominion is enjoying. It is an evidence of the capacity of her public men in which I rejoice. I wish her every prosperity, but I am not willing to imperil an industry which is of the highest national importance. If we are to have any commission, it should be a commission whose members should be subject to confirmation by the Senate and whose powers should be more restricted than the almost illimitable powers which are given by the committee's substitute.

These are the days, Mr. Speaker, when "they that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters," should not be forgotten. There have been recently enlisted in our Navy in the single port of Gloucester alone nearly 300 of the best seamen who can be found on the face of the globe, and more are ready, if needed. They are brave, hardy men, accustomed to danger and indifferent to it. They hardly increase the peril of their lives by stepping from the deck of a fishing vessel to the deck of a man-of-war. More than 3,000 of them in the last quarter of a century have sailed from the port of Gloucester never to return. Even in times of profound peace there is every year at Gloucester a solemn service of prayer and praise for the dead who have gone as an annual sacrifice to the end that your flag should be carried out upon the deep sea.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, if there is no expression of surprise in my face, it is not because it ought not to be there. [Laughter.] After the New England gentlemen on this floor have succeeded in landing their fish business into a land bill, with which it has no possible connection, then it is possible that we may expect any other kind of attack upon the report of the conference committee, as though it had been trespassing upon their rights; and, Mr. Speaker, it is just a little more than human nature can stand in these troublous war times without at least some sort of a protest against it.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from Iowa that if there was anything that I said which could be construed in the manner in which he has evidently understood it, I desire to withdraw it. I realize the fact that we have embarrassed the Committee on Public Lands and that they have been very kind to us in this matter.

Mr. LACEY. Now, if the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] will make an apology, I will accept them both.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to say that I never made any suggestion to the gentleman or anybody else relating to the fishery question, and therefore I have no apologies to make.

Mr. LACEY. Will not the gentleman state that this amendment was modified to meet his views?

Mr. DINGLEY. I have already stated that, with reference to the single provision that whatever should be done in this matter ought to be referred to Congress, that it ought to be put in and it was put in. As to the fishery question, I never suggested anything about that.

Mr. LACEY. All these difficulties that our friends have imagined here this morning have sprung up in their minds since they received some very fiery letters, no doubt, from some gentleman in Philadelphia, who has come to the conclusion that there is great danger to the city of Philadelphia unless this clause is stricken out of the bill.

Mr. MOODY. I will say that that suggestion does not apply to me.

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Public Lands Committee do not care anything about this provision. They did not want it in in the first place. They have been trying to get it out for eight weeks. They have submitted it to everybody in this House who seemed to know the difference between a smelt and a herring, trying to get a full understanding of the matter. We have even gone to the trouble of asking the Associated Press to publish this in full. It is out of their usual line, but we asked them to do it because we felt that something was getting into this bill that ought not to be in a land bill.

It has been published in the dispatches of the Associated Press. Every part of the United States has had an opportunity to examine it, and now, at the eleventh hour, the criticism is indulged in here and the point of order is made. I do not care what is done with the point of order. I do not care what the Speaker rules upon it. If you hold that it is subject to the point of order, let it go out, and we will go back and try again, and see if the gentlemen from New England will let our land bill alone long enough for us to get it through. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I hope my friend——

Mr. LACEY. I hope I may be spared any criticisms from the chairman of the Naval Committee. I am sure he will let me off.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. LACEY. I will yield to my friend from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I simply want to ask him not to include me in the category of those gentlemen who, he says, have been contending to have the great sea fisheries of the United States transferred to the Rocky Mountains, or some interior portion of the country.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, no, these gentlemen have taken the Rocky Mountains and pitched them into the sea off the coast of New England. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am entirely immune from criticism on that point. But on behalf of a constituency that is directly interested in matters of that kind, in a territory extending immediately along the border, I certainly feel that I ought to be permitted to enter a mild protest against having the whole of our tariff system, to which we have been trying to adjust ourselves, laid liable to be ripped open and torn to pieces by some gentlemen connected with the Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. LACEY. A mild protest from my friend from Maine will be a delightful thing for us to hear in this House. [Laughter.] I yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, the provision concerning the fishery question came into the bill, together with some other provisions, contrary to our desire, and we should have liked very much to have excluded it. But there were gentlemen in the other Chamber who wanted it in the bill and passed it in the Senate as an amendment to the bill. The conference committee attempted to do what they thought was for the best and proposed the substitute you are now asked to accept. Now, I want to appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] not to insist upon his point of order in this case, for the reason that this provision gives no power to the commissioners to waive any of the rights of the United States. It only appoints a commission for the purpose of determining and formulating a plan and submitting it to Congress.

We need not accept it if it is not good; and unless the fishery questions are settled according to the wishes of the gentleman from Massachusetts, he can have an opportunity to voice his opposition thereto, and if his objections are well founded, then we will not accept the suggestions of the commission. But there are provisions in this land bill that ought to be enacted into law as soon as possible. There are various rights in Alaska granted by this bill that ought to be considered at this time.

Mr. TALBERT. Is the question at issue something that has been put into the bill by the conferees?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. TALBERT. Foreign to the bill and not in it originally?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It arose in this manner. Section 13 was put into the bill by the Senate. It related to various matters of dispute between the United States and Canada. It arose very largely because of the sentiment that existed in Canada that they should not give American miners the same rights that Canadian miners had in the Klondike region, and the result was that section 13, relating to matters of difference between the two Governments, among which is the fishery question, was put into the bill. It was put into the bill, as I understand it, by the gentlemen from New England, or at their solicitation.

Mr. TALBERT. Was it not amended by the Senate?

Mr. MOODY. Put into the bill on the suggestion of a Senator from the West.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Upon the request, as I understand it, from a gentleman from New England.

Mr. TALBERT. Did it come in in the shape of an amendment?

Mr. MOODY. It was moved in a spirit of broad patriotism. The gentleman who proposed it believed that when certain rights were to be allowed to Canada, that certain disputed rights of American fishermen should be conceded by Canada at the same time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is right. There was an attempt to formulate some kind of a compromise by which the fishery rights to which we are entitled should be acknowledged by Canada.

In answer to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] I will state that section 13 was put in as an amendment by the Senate. The conferees attempted to reconcile the differences between the Senate and House by a harmless little amendment on the subject of the appointment of a commission to formulate a proposition of compromise of the differences between this Government and Canada, and to report the same to the President. The commissioners are not to bind the Government, but they are to report to the President, and he is to submit it to Congress for action of approval or disapproval.

Mr. LOUD. Was not that a new section?

Mr. SHAFROTH. We did not put it in; it was the other gentlemen.

Mr. LOUD. What other gentlemen?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The gentlemen of the Senate.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the gentleman understand the well-known principle that the party who added the legislation must ultimately give way?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, that may be, if you are going to act on it, and are compelled to do so.

Mr. LOUD. You have had the matter in conference for a couple of months.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This is not one of those bills, Mr. Speaker, that has to be passed; one that the Government is dependent upon for its existence, as an appropriation bill. This is a bill that could be laid aside by a failure to report; consequently the Senate does not have to yield.

Mr. ELLIS. I will ask my colleague if it is not a matter of fact that the committee of conference was desirous to hurry this bill along on account of a certain matter in respect to that country and on account of a lack of legislation upon that subject, and they yielded in a spirit of that kind in order to get it before the House?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is what we did.

Mr. RIDGELY. If the gentleman will permit me, I did not catch the explanation of the chairman of the committee on the reading of the bill; but if I understand it, so far as the miners are concerned, the bill provides that the same privilege may be granted to Canadian miners on our side as the laws on the Canadian side give to ours.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is it.

Mr. RIDGELY. I understand the Canadian law levies a tax or a percentage upon all the precious metals mined in their territory?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; a royalty.

Mr. RIDGELY. Now, the question I want to ask is, If a Canadian comes on our side and mines, will our Government levy on what he mines the same tax as is levied in Canada?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to pass upon the point of order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Canadian miner would have the same privilege only as they grant to our miners.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In this discrimination that takes place, does that apply to all the mining regions or the Klondike?

Mr. SHAFROTH. In my judgment, it is the whole Northwest.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I believe it does not apply in all. Until now American citizens have had the same right in Canada as the Canadians, while the Canadians had no right on our side of the line.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the reason why it is necessary that this bill should be passed soon is that there should be settled the rights of locators upon lands and the rights of parties who are attempting to construct railroads in Alaska. They have located some roads and are building them. If they can not get the right of way which they are supposed to be entitled to, it leaves the matter in so chaotic a condition that the parties engaged in the construction of the roads have to stop work. On that account it seems to me we ought as soon as possible to pass this bill and let these persons proceed with the development of the country.

Another thing, Mr. Speaker, certain rights of frontage upon navigable waters in Alaska are defined in this bill. It is proposed in this bill to limit the right of a cannery to 80 rods along the shore of navigable streams. It is also provided that an intervening space of at least 80 rods shall exist between claims held by private parties, the title to which shall remain in the United States, in order to prevent a monopoly in any of these fisheries. This measure ought to go through speedily because we are getting into difficulties with persons attempting to locate all the shore front, who are claiming that they have vested rights.

Now, Mr. Speaker, concerning the criticism made by the gentleman from Washington, I wish to say that I was not at the meeting of the committee of conference when he appeared before it. He says that it is too short a time to require that the proof be presented in ninety days. Mr. Speaker, when it is considered that the proof is required only in past cases, where the railroads have been located and surveyed, it seems to me that ninety days is a very reasonable time. We want these surveys that have been made to be established as soon as they possibly can by proof. On account of the urgency of this measure and the fact that the provision objected to is harmless, it seems to me that the gentleman from Massachusetts ought to withdraw his point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair dislikes to pass upon such matters as this, but it is a well-established principle that no conference committee can introduce a new subject, one that was not in dispute between the two Houses, and it is evident that everybody in the House realizes that this amendment which has been presented is really beyond the power of the committee of conference. That being so, and the point being made, there is no other course but to sustain the point of order, which the Chair accordingly does.

Mr. LACEY. That, of course, will be equivalent to a rejection of the whole conference report, as it must either stand or fall as a whole. I therefore move that the House insist on its disagreement and ask for a further conference.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. LACEY, Mr. SHAFROTH, and Mr. ELLIS.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 2319. An act for the relief of the administrators of Isaac P. Tice, deceased, and others;

H. R. 5885. An act to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act to punish the carrying or selling of deadly or dangerous weapons within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved July 13, 1892.

H. R. 1595. An act to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1316) to provide for organizing a naval battalion in the District of Columbia, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. SMITH as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 59. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Skelton;

S. 1217. An act for the relief of holders of certain District of Columbia tax-sale certificates, and for other purposes;

S. 3308. An act to authorize the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Red River at or near the city of Shreveport, La.; and

S. 3903. An act to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10131) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill and report an agreement between the two branches. As the papers have all been read in detail, it may be sufficient for me to say that the conferees on the part of the Senate have yielded on amendment No. 22. The House conferees insisted on disagreement in accordance with the instructions of this House, and the bill is now reported with a full agreement eliminating amendment 22, which was the subject of controversy in our last session.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that the gentleman have the report printed without being read.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If there be no objection, I will ask to have the report printed in the RECORD without being read.

There was no objection.

The report of the committee of conference is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9378) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 4, 11, 22, 27, 38, 39, and 54.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 41, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 73, and 74, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And whenever, within the next twelve months, an exigency may exist which, in the judgment of the President, renders their services necessary, he is hereby authorized to appoint from civil life and commission such officers of the line and staff, not above the rank or relative rank of commander, and warrant officers, including warrant machinists, and such officers of the Marine Corps, not above the rank of captain, to be appointed from the noncommissioned officers of the corps and from civil life, as may be requisite: Provided, That such officers shall serve only during the continuance of the exigency under which their services are required in the existing war: And provided further, That such officers so appointed shall be assigned to duty with rank and pay of the grades established by existing law; and warrant machinists shall be paid at the rate of $1,200 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Navy to enlist, at any time after the passage of this act, as many additional seamen, landsmen, and boys as he may deem necessary to man the ships of the Navy, or in use by the Navy as a temporary force therefor during the existing war, and for pay of the same and of the temporary additional officers and warrant machinists hereinbefore authorized, $8,830,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and to enable the Secretary of the Navy to enlist, at any time after the passage of this act, the following additional force for the Marine Corps as a temporary force during the existing war, namely, not more than 60 gunnery sergeants with rank of first sergeants, not more than 80 corporals, and not more than 1,500 privates; and for pay of the same, including the temporary additional officers hereinbefore authorized, and for provisions, clothing, fuel, military stores, transportation, and recruiting, and for contingent expenses on account of said additional force, $567,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "; in all, torpedo station, $97,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to build one of said docks of granite or concrete faced with granite, and in such case the limit of the cost of said dock is increased $200,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "of domestic manufacture;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 5 and 6 of said amendment strike out the words "Sabine Pass, Tex., or in the waters adjacent thereto," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in the harbor of Sabine Pass, or the waters tributary thereto, Texas;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "That hereafter all first-class battle ships and monitors owned by the United States shall be named for the States, and shall not be named for any city, place, or person until the names of the States shall have been exhausted: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to interfere with the names of States already assigned to any such battle ship or monitor;" and the Senate agree to the same.

S. G. HILBORN,
A. J. CUMMINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
M. S. QUAY,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The question was taken; and the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

SURGEONS IN UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 9638) to increase the number of surgeons in the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the number of medical officers of the Army be increased by the addition of fifteen assistant surgeons with the rank of first lieutenant, to be appointed after examination by an Army medical examining board, in accordance with existing regulations.

SEC. 2. That in emergencies the Surgeon-General of the Army, with the approval of the Secretary of War, may appoint as many contract surgeons as may be necessary, at a compensation not to exceed $150 per month.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second on that.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if this is a permanent increase of the Army force of surgeons?

Mr. HULL. It is a permanent increase of the Medical Department of fifteen assistant surgeons, and is made necessary, as shown by the report of the War Department, if there was no war on hand at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the War Department state that it is necessary?

Mr. HULL. Yes; outside of any war emergency whatever. The emergency clause is a war measure, but the contract surgeons are to be discharged at the close of the war.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How many assistant surgeons are there now?

Mr. HULL. Ninety assistant surgeons.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And this makes 105.

Mr. HULL. Yes. In 1895, on my own motion on an appropriation bill, the number was cut down to 90. Since that time Alaska has called for and received soldiers to guard the country, and five surgeons have been sent there—one since the report was written—and they are calling for more to be sent to Alaska. We have had two regiments of artillery added to the Army, and it will add many posts for coast batteries, and that will take more surgeons; and the present force will be called upon to help supply that deficiency. It is absolutely necessary, according to the report of the Surgeon-General's Department, that the number covered by this bill be provided for. Even if there was no war with Spain, with the present number and distribution of troops, we should be compelled to add this number of 15.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The permanent force is increased by 15?

Mr. HULL. Fifteen assistant surgeons.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the others will be retained only while the war is in progress, and then will be discharged?

Mr. HULL. They will be used only for the emergency.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the second being considered as ordered? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is recognized for twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] for twenty minutes in opposition.

Mr. HULL. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that I want to say anything further.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not had time to consider this bill——

Mr. HULL. If the report can be read, it will give as full information as it will be possible to give on this subject. I will say that if in the future at any time the consolidation of posts near the large cities should take place, as it was thought would be done in 1895, it is easy to pass a provision, as we did in 1895, by which there shall be no additional appointments; but with the present situation in the country, I do not believe that is likely to come for a good many years. I want to say, in addition to that, that I am very clearly convinced that in 1895, when I insisted on an amendment reducing this force, I made a great mistake, and if it is not repaired it will cripple the service. In the present emergency a part of the troops are left in different places, no matter if there are only a few of them. They are so situated that it is absolutely necessary to have a surgeon, if they are to be kept there at all.

Take the two additional regiments of artillery that will be distributed along the coast, it is absolutely necessary that they have a surgeon at these shore batteries. When we reduced the force Fort Washington had no troops and no surgeon. Now that troops are there an assistant surgeon must be provided. If you employ a contract surgeon, you will pay more money out each month than you would if we have an assistant surgeon.

Of course every member of the House understands that the fifteen assistant surgeons provided for in this bill will have to be selected, after examination by the Surgeon-General, from civil life. All medical appointees are selected from civil life because the Military Academy makes no provision for the education of medical men.

Mr. McEWAN. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether I understood the gentleman right when he said it provided for a permanent increase of the board.

Mr. HULL. It provides for 15 assistant surgeons, bringing the number up to 105.

Mr. McEWAN. Was the number formerly 105?

Mr. HULL. The number was formerly 125.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do these surgeons have to be examined under the civil-service rule?

Mr. HULL. No; nothing to do with the civil service. But they have to pass an examination, showing their eminent qualifications for the position.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who examines them?

Mr. HULL. The Surgeon-General, and——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do they have to come to Washington to be examined?

Mr. HULL (continuing). They have to be under the age of 30, I think.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Have you any provision in the bill for the appointment of surgeons for the volunteers?

Mr. HULL. No; they are to be appointed by the governors of the States. The governor appoints one surgeon and two assistant surgeons for each regiment of volunteers.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does the law limit the qualifications of surgeons to any particular school of medicine?

Mr. HULL. No; but I would say to my friend from Kansas that the universal practice has been to take the regular school, but there is nothing in the law that requires it.

Mr. CLARDY. I think, if the gentleman will allow me, that the Medical Department requires that every surgeon shall be a graduate of a medical college, and that he shall have not only a medical degree, but a fair literary education. If the gentleman will examine the instructions on that subject, it provides that for every applicant for appointment under the Medical Department of the Government there is an exceedingly strict examination required. I think very few of the young physicians can stand it. It requires a young man of superior skill and ability to pass the examination.

And now another question, if the gentleman will permit me, as to the contract surgeons: Is it not a fact that in sending our countrymen to the region where yellow fever is prevalent, or may be prevalent, it is exceedingly important to provide that they shall be protected as far as possible, and that the surgeons who shall be sent with them for their medical care shall be, as far as possible, immunes from yellow fever?

Mr. HULL. I assume, Mr. Speaker, that every contract surgeon who is sent out with our troops to Cuba and elsewhere will go under the direct supervision and orders from the Surgeon-General of the Army, and the present Surgeon-General of the Army is one of the greatest experts in the world on yellow fever and kindred diseases. He will make out the lists of appointments and select men who are suitable to the location to which they are assigned.

My understanding is that largely the Regular Army surgeons will go to Cuba with the troops who may be sent to that island, and the new men will be placed where they need surgeons, mainly out on the frontier, where few people are left now in the camps and forts, excepting the care takers and those left in charge of military supplies for the various points where our troops have been stationed, and where no regular surgeons are present.

Mr. TALBERT. Let me ask the gentleman if this bill is not the second one of the same character that has been introduced within the last few days?

Mr. HULL. No, sir; this bill is the only one of this kind that has been introduced.

Mr. TALBERT. The only bill increasing the number of Army surgeons?

Mr. HULL. Yes; the only one.

Mr. RIDGELY. I would like to ask the gentleman further, in connection with my former question, whether the amendment refers to any particular school of medicine, or if there is such a law now upon the statute books; and if there is such a law, whether the committee will not bring in a proposition to modify it?

Mr. HULL. I will answer the gentleman from Kansas by saying that there is no law limiting the service proposed by this bill to any one particular school of medicine.

Mr. RIDGELY. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. MORRIS. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa where the examinations are held for this service?

Mr. HULL. Right here in Washington. These young men come here and go into strict training for this examination. I believe, as a result, that the United States has as competent a corps of physicians and surgeons as any Government on earth.

Mr. MORRIS. What age are the applicants required to be, and how long a practice must they have had? What is the age limit?

Mr. HULL. From 22 to 30 years, I think——

A MEMBER. No; 21 to 29 years.

Mr. HULL. I am corrected by my friend on the left, who says 29 years. The age limit, then, is from 22 to 29 years.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what the regulations are now for the appointment of surgeons and assistant surgeons in the Army?

Mr. HULL. I think the regulations are that the applicants for appointment must be regular graduates of a recognized medical school. I do not remember exactly the language of the law, but that is substantially the requirement; and, in addition to that, the applicant must be a man of a certain amount of literary ability, and of good education; and he must pass a successful examination before a board appointed to determine his fitness. As I have never been interested in getting into the Army through the Medical Department, I can only answer generally.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This bill, as I understand it, provides for the appointment of fifteen surgeons in addition to the number now provided by law?

Mr. HULL. That is correct, except that all officers of this corps come in as assistant surgeons.

Mr. VINCENT. Does this bill make any change in the age limit as far as it applies to the appointment of surgeons?

Mr. HULL. None whatever. I do not think there ought to be. I think the regulations are good as they are, and they have proven entirely satisfactory. You take a man in the Army, for instance, who may be 45 years old, in good health, and yet he may be in the service only a short time and then go on the retired list. But the regulations providing for younger men in this branch of the service, an able young man who is competent to remain in the service for a great many years becomes more and more efficient as time goes on and earns retirement by service.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

CLAIMS OF UNITED STATES AGAINST TENNESSEE.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for consideration Senate joint resolution No. 6, providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the United States against the State of Tennessee and certain claims of the State of Tennessee against the United States, and ask that the rules be suspended and the joint resolution be passed.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it is claimed that the State of Tennessee is indebted to the United States for railroad equipments and materials purchased for the Memphis, Clarksville and Louisville Railroad Company and the Edgefield and Kentucky Railroad Company by the receivers of said railroad companies, and also for certain coupon bonds issued by said State and originally purchased and held by the United States in trust for certain Indian tribes: and

Whereas the State of Tennessee claims against the United States certain abatements and reductions of said indebtedness by reason of excessive valuations of said equipments and materials, and also certain set-offs and counter-claims growing out of the use by the United States Government for military and other purposes, and the deterioration of the property by the use of certain of the Tennessee railroads upon which the said State had an express and prior statutory lien; and for the removal and appropriation of the property, rails, bridges, etc., of the following roads, namely: The Memphis, Clarksville and Louisville Railroad Company, the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company, the Winchester and Alabama Railroad Company, the Knoxville and Kentucky Railroad Company, and the Edgefield and Kentucky Railroad Company; and

Whereas said matters are of long standing and it is desirable that the same should be adjusted and settled: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to proceed, by conference with such agents, counsel, or commissioners as may be appointed by said State for that purpose, to compromise, adjust, and settle with the State of Tennessee, through such duly appointed agents, all said matters upon such terms as to amount, allowance of interest, etc., as shall do equal and impartial justice to both parties; and if the result of such settlement shall disclose a balance due to the United States from the State of Tennessee, they shall report such agreement, compromise, or settlement to the governor of Tennessee, to be submitted by him to the legislature of said State at its next regular session, and if the payment of such balance shall not be provided for at the next regular session of the legislature of Tennessee, then the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to proceed to collect the same by appropriate proceedings in accordance with the terms of the bonds held by the United States; and in the event the result of said settlement shall disclose a balance due to the State of Tennessee, they are hereby authorized and directed to report the same to Congress with such recommendation as to an appropriation therefor as may be deemed to be proper and just: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be deemed to be a declaration of priority of right in favor of the State of Tennessee as between it and the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company with respect to the claim on account of the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad; but the question of the rights of the State and of said company as to said claim shall be determined as is hereinafter provided: Provided further, That the sum for the value of the iron rails, spikes, chairs, etc., taken by the United States military railroad authorities from the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad during the years 1863 and 1864 shall not be used in arriving at a settlement of the accounts between the State of Tennessee and the United States, unless the Attorney-General of the United States, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall find that the proceeds for amount of said claim belong to the State of Tennessee: Provided further, That the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company or the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company as its successor shall, by agents, counsel, or otherwise, have the right to appear and have an equal voice with the State in determining all questions relating to the said claim of the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company or the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company as its successor. And the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War are hereby authorized and directed to determine the legal and equitable rights, respectively, between the State of Tennessee and the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company or the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company as its successor with respect to said claim; and if they shall find that the proceeds or amount of said claim belong to the State, the same shall be allowed as a credit in the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the State of Tennessee; and if they shall find that the proceeds or amount of said claim belong to the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company or the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company as its successor, they shall report the same to Congress for appropriate legislation by Congress.

They are authorized to settle all claims and demands of whatever kind or nature, and any compromise or settlement they may make with said State of Tennessee, as aforesaid, shall be fully reported back to Congress, giving the basis thereof, for its further action. The said compromise or settlement is not to be effective or final until approved by Congress.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The first question is, Is a second demanded?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, we had better have a second. Let a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Otherwise there would be no debate. The gentleman asks for a second and asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Speaker, the whole question here is involved in a claim between the United States and the State of Tennessee growing out of transactions that occurred partly in the war and partly after the war. In the decision made the other day in regard to the State of Arkansas much more radical action was taken in behalf of the State than what the State of Tennessee now asks.

The whole matter arose out of claims between the United States on one side and the State of Tennessee on the other side. These resolutions do not provide for a settlement of those claims, but simply provide for the appointment of a board to report upon the matter to Congress. The Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of War are appointed in behalf of the United States. Under the act of our legislature certain men are appointed to represent the State of Tennessee. Whatever conclusion this board may arrive at is to be submitted to Congress.

There is no question which affects the United States in the least in the way of appropriations. All we ask is that these claims be referred to this board so that they may consider them. I am not going to discuss the merits of the question, because I think the Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War will fully represent the United States. On our side there are State attorneys and gentlemen appointed by the legislature to meet the officials appointed on behalf of the United States and to try to adjust these matters in such a way that Congress can control and handle the matter. Let me repeat again that no sort of obligation is imposed upon the United States by the decision of this board. The effort is simply to put the matter into a shape where Congress can handle it. Now, what is the state of facts?

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me just there?

Mr. COX. Let me make this statement, please. These resolutions were drawn by the Attorney-General of the United States and the attorney-general of the State of Tennessee, and I have here a letter from the present Secretary of the Treasury earnestly advising the passage of these resolutions, so that we can at some time reach a conclusion in regard to the matter.

Now, what is the importance of this legislation? Tennessee wants to know how she stands. The Government of the United States wants to know how it stands in reference to our State. There are hung up in the State of Tennessee, in legal proceedings, $100,000 of railroad bonds that either belong to the United States or belong to the State of Tennessee, together with their accumulated interest. The State of Tennessee says, "Present your claims and I will present mine, and then upon the report of these officers, representing us respectively, we will submit the matter to Congress to see what is right and proper in regard to the matter."

Now, these resolutions have passed the Senate three times. They have come to this House and been favorably reported by the Committee on War Claims. I do not see what can be the objection to sending the matter to three distinguished officers of this Government, on the part of the United States, to meet officers upon the part of the State of Tennessee. When they arrive at a conclusion they can send the matter back to Congress to see what shall be the proper adjustment of the matter.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX. With pleasure, because I want to get at the truth of this matter.

Mr. CANNON. I did not hear this act read.

Mr. COX. It is a joint resolution.

Mr. CANNON. Well, is there anything in the joint resolution that binds the United States as to the legality of any claim?

Mr. COX. Not a single dollar.

Mr. GAINES. The compromise or settlement is not to be effective or final until approved by Congress.

Mr. CANNON. I want to see if I understand the matter aright. The United States makes certain claims against the State of Tennessee?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Whether well or ill founded?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And the State of Tennessee makes certain claims against the United States, whether well or ill founded?

Mr. COX. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. If I understand the gentleman, this bill creates a commission upon the part of the United States to meet a commission upon the part of the State of Tennessee?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. To consider these claims?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And to make a report of the opinion of the commission to Congress?

Mr. COX. That is all there is in it except one thing. It goes a little further than that as against the State of Tennessee, but not against the United States. That will lead me into a detailed statement of facts. There were about $30,000 in bonds executed by the State of Tennessee to the United States for buying supplies. I mean rolling stock and things of that kind. Now, if these commissioners find that the State of Tennessee owes that amount of money, a first lien is reserved on the railroads for the payment of it, and there is not a dollar that can be taken from the United States Treasury under this resolution unless Congress shall approve it.

Mr. TALBERT. After this board makes its report to Congress, is not this joint resolution so worded as to forestall action of Congress?

Mr. COX. The very object of it is not to forestall Congress.

Mr. TALBERT. Then Congress is left free to act?

Mr. COX. I would not think that the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Attorney-General would make a recommendation that would forestall Congress.

Mr. GAINES. The very end of the act reads:

The said compromise or settlement is not to be effective or final until approved by Congress.

Mr. COX. No; and I do hope, inasmuch as you passed a bill the other day to adjust these matters in the State of my friend from Arkansas, that you will not treat Tennessee any worse, and you will get back here a condensed report from the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney-General, with representatives from the State of Tennessee, submitting the facts to the Congress of the United States. We will never come to a settlement any other way. You can not sue our State.

Mr. TALBERT. I think it is right.

Mr. COX. It is absolutely right. I never saw a more just thing in this House. [Cries of "Vote!"] I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DINGLEY. One moment. I would like to ask what is the intention of this provision:

Provided further, That the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company, or the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company, as its successor, shall, by agents, counsel, or otherwise, have the right to appear and have an equal voice with the State in determining all questions relating to the same claim of the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company, or the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company, as its successor.

Mr. COX. That is right.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is that a controversy between the State and this railroad company?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is a controversy between the State and the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company. That company insists that if there is anything due on account of the road it should go to the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company, which owns it by assignment or purchase at an assignee's sale. That is not a matter that affects the Government, but is a matter between the railroad and the State of Tennessee.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do I understand that this bill was drawn by the attorney-general—what attorney-general?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, these joint resolutions were drawn by the attorney-general of the State of Tennessee.

Mr. DINGLEY. The State attorney-general?

Mr. COX. Well, now if the gentleman will permit me. I carried these resolutions to the Secretary of the Treasury and he has recommended it in four reports, and there is a letter in the report most earnestly advocating the passage of this resolution.

Mr. DINGLEY. This is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. COX. The present Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. McMILLIN. And recommended by the preceding Administration as well. It is eminently just.

The question was taken on suspending the rules and passing the joint resolution; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended, and the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, there is a similar House resolution, identically the same with this, and I ask that it be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House joint resolution of similar purport will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

COMMISSION TO EXAMINE INTO THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution H. Res. 190 as it appears amended.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 190) to create a commission to examine into the postal service.

Resolved, etc., That a joint commission is hereby created, consisting of four Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and four Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Said commission shall make full inquiry and examination into the postal service, including rates and methods of transportation, rental of cars, subsidies, pneumatic-tube systems, rural free delivery, etc., and also the classifications of mail matter and charges thereon, especially second-class matter, and the rulings and practices that have obtained thereunder, and such other features of the postal service as said commission may, in the course of its duties, deem proper to subject to their inquiry and examination.

Said commission is authorized to employ experts to aid in the work of inquiry and examination; also to employ a clerk and stenographer and such other clerical assistance as may be necessary, said experts and clerks to be paid such compensation as the said commission may deem just and reasonable.

The Postmaster-General shall detail, from time to time, such officers and employees as may be requested by said commission in its investigation.

For the purposes of the investigation said commission is authorized to send for persons and papers, and, through the chairman of the commission or the chairman of any subcommittee thereof, to administer oaths and to examine witnesses and papers respecting all matters pertaining to the duties of said commission.

Said commission shall, on or before January 1, 1899, make report to Congress, which report shall embrace the testimony and evidence taken in the course of the investigation, also the conclusions reached by said commission on the several subjects examined, and any recommendations said commission may see proper to make with the view of correcting any abuses or deficiencies that may be found to exist.

The sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the necessary expenses of said commission, such payments to be made on the certificate of the chairman of said commission.

Any vacancy occurring in the membership of said commission, by resignation or otherwise, shall be filled by the presiding officer of the Senate or House, respectively, according as the vacancy occurs in the Senate or House representation on said committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. LOUD. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman whether his bill directs the commission to report by bill or otherwise, and whether or not it gives such a report privilege?

Mr. LOUD. No.

Said commissioners, on or before January 1, 1899, to make a report to Congress.

It gives no power, I will say to the gentleman, beyond reporting to Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am satisfied that there is a very wide field for investigation and reform, and I hope the gentleman, if he is going to enter upon this work, will insert a provision so as to give the report of the committee the privilege of consideration at any time; otherwise he would find——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that it is doubtful if such a law would bind either House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would suggest to the Speaker that this was done by the resolution organizing the commission that investigated the business methods of the Departments some years since, and but for that privilege I think we would have had some trouble in securing consideration.

Mr. LOUD. I want to say a word. Of course this commission will gather such evidence relating to disputed points as they can—about disputed points that have repeatedly come to Congress. Gentlemen well know that statements have been made here upon the question of the probability of operating a postal car for some $500 or $600 a year. Such a statement is made upon the floor by members who have been elected to this honorable body, and probably they have been made in good faith.

On the other hand, we find the Post-Office Department furnish such information to Congress as seems to determine beyond the possibility of doubt from that side that it would cost $11,000 a year to operate a railroad post-office car. When we come to consider the wide divergence of opinion, the statements that have been made repeatedly on the floor of the House, we thought it advisable to present such testimony to the House and the country that the House and country might know what amount of money is being paid to railroad companies for the transportation of the mail and whether such amount is in excess of what it should be. Now I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia who introduced this resolution.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was introduced by me some four or five days after the lengthy debate we had on the Post-Office appropriation bill. My object in introducing the resolution was to lay a foundation in some way, as the gentleman from California has just said, to enable the House at some time in the future to learn what the real truth was upon these disputed questions. Take the question, as he stated, of the postal car. One statement is made that we pay in a single year, as a rental of one of these cars, every dollar it would cost to buy the car. Other gentlemen deny that. When they come to the rates that are being paid for the transmission of mail, we find it stated by gentlemen on one side that the rates now being paid are two or three times larger than those which ought to be paid. We find other gentlemen saying that the rates are very moderate, and that the railroads can not afford to carry them for any less than they are now carried.

Take the question of the pneumatic tube. We have made appropriations for some of these, and I understand there is a question before the Senate to add four or five hundred thousand dollars more for tubes in other places. Some gentlemen think that ought not to be ingrafted on the postal system, while others think it will be of great service in the future. It seemed to me, in the discussion of that bill, that if honest-minded men on either side of the House were able to get at the facts, it would enable them to form some satisfactory conclusion, and I thought there would be nothing better than for Congress to appoint a commission which would be impartial who could examine into these questions thoroughly and minutely and lay all the facts before Congress.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman if this commission of four Senators and the Representatives are to draw any pay?

Mr. FLEMING. They draw no pay for their services. The appropriation is small. I presume, of course, their actual expenses of travel will be paid, but no salary is attached to it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the committee think it wise to have the commission consist of Senators and Members of the House rather than to have it consist of departmental officers? I ask the gentleman if it is not true that the Department has already, through the Postmaster-General heretofore, going back as far as Mr. Vilas, laid before Congress reports of facts covering the very questions mentioned in this bill, especially in relation to the cost of the postal-car service?

Mr. FLEMING. I will answer the questions separately. First, as to whether the commission should consist of members of the House and Senate rather than members of the departmental service. I think it is very patent that it would be a great deal safer to have the membership of the commission taken from the Senate and House, because we get now the benefit of all the expert knowledge of the heads of bureaus by the provision in the resolution that the commission shall have the power to summon before it all such departmental clerks and heads of bureaus. Furthermore, the bill provides that the commission may employ experts in any particular line, so there will be no necessity and no propriety in having the commission consist of heads of departments.

As to the other point, whether or not some of the officers have not already made reports from which these facts could be derived, I will say in answer that the reports seem to be conflicting. When gentlemen during the debate on the Post-Office appropriation bill laid those reports before the House, other gentlemen got up and read letters written since the reports were made from prominent officials, contradicting the facts stated in the written reports, and it is for that very purpose of getting at the truth in these contradictions that it was thought best to have a commission appointed. The cost is a mere bagatelle, and of course everything will depend on the character of the men placed on the commission. I take it that we can rely on the presiding officer of the Senate, and the presiding officer of the House, and we are just as likely to get a good quality of men to serve there as we could get in any other way. In fact, it is the only practicable way I know of. Let the responsibility rest there, and I have no doubt the officers of the Senate and the House will give us a good commission.

Mr. BRUCKER. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me a question?

Mr. FLEMING. Certainly.

Mr. BRUCKER. I would like to ask him if in the last Post-Office appropriation bill there were not two items, one of $200,000, appropriated directly to certain railroads, as it was claimed, for the purpose of facilitating the distribution of the mail, and the question I would like to ask is this: Whether or not the resolution is not broad enough to include the inquiry——

Mr. FLEMING. I will answer the gentleman that it is not only broad enough, but specific enough to require them to do it.

Mr. HULL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, as I stated a moment ago, I am satisfied there is a very wide field for inquiry and executive and legislative reform in the postal service. Of course the value of the work that is to be accomplished by the commission will depend largely upon the personnel of the commission.

Mr. DINGLEY. Entirely.

Mr. DOCKERY. As the gentleman from Maine suggests, "entirely." I agree with that suggestion. If active, efficient members are appointed by the presiding officers of the two branches, who are in entire harmony and sympathy with the work, I am sure the report of the commission will be of great service to the taxpayers of the country. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from California that by unanimous consent this bill should be amended at two or three points.

The bill, it seems, originally provided for the appointment of three Senators and three Representatives. For some reason I do not know, the committee has amended it so as to authorize the appointment of four Senators and four Representatives. I shall ask unanimous consent to amend the bill in this particular. It is a matter of exceeding difficulty to get the members of a joint commission together, and that difficulty increases just in proportion as you increase the number of members.

The gentleman who has just spoken has stated with much force and effect the advantage of having a commission constituted from the membership of the two bodies. The information thus secured is available and can be utilized by the two bodies in the passage of legislation to an extent not possible if the members of the commission be named from persons other than members of Congress. If, however, we provide that the commission shall consist of four members from each body, instead of three, we increase the difficulty in securing meetings of the commission. I would in fact prefer that there should be but two members of the commission from each body, rather than four.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman will allow me to say that personally I favored a commission of two members from each body, and my conclusion was arrived at after a long and thorough investigation. I took into consideration the fact that with two members from each body there would necessarily be one from each party in each House, and thus we would have a commission as small as it could possibly be made. But when the bill came before the committee the number was worked up from two to four. Objections were made in the first place to appointing only two members from each House. The gentleman can well understand, perhaps, why objections might be made. Some gentlemen thought that with a commission so small as to embrace only two Senators and two Members of the House there would not be a sufficient representation from the different sections of the United States. Finally we were obliged to accept the bill in the shape in which it now is, providing for four members of the commission from each body.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent at this time to change the text of the bill so as to provide that the commission shall consist of three Senators and three Representatives.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Why not say two and two?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think three from each House will be a fair compromise.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill be so amended as to require the appointment of three Senators and three Members of the House, instead of four members from each body. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Before proceeding further the exact form of the amendment had better be settled.

Mr. DOCKERY. My proposition is to strike out "four," in line 4, and insert "three," and to strike out "four," in line 5, and insert "three."

Mr. OGDEN. I hope the gentleman from Missouri before pressing that amendment will take into consideration that the effect will be to place two Republicans from the House and two from the Senate on this commission and only one member of the minority party of each House. As a member of the committee, allow me to say that this measure was brought in with the expectation that an absolutely nonpartisan commission would be appointed; that the presiding officers of the two bodies to whom the appointing power is to be intrusted would divide the membership of this commission equally between the two parties. We believed that by making the commission consist of eight members, instead of four, as originally proposed, the members of the commission might be better distributed over the different sections of the country.

The proposition of the gentleman from Missouri will reduce the membership of this commission from eight to six, and of necessity there will be four members of the dominant party and two of the minority party. Does the gentleman, with all the light before him, think it wise to reverse the action of the committee in this respect? Will it not be best for him to allow the bill to go through as reported?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. Of course I do not wish to urge my views in opposition to those of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. But I was looking at this question solely from the standpoint of the public interest. It had not occurred to me that the political views of the membership of this proposed commission was important, and I do not yet think that it should be a material consideration.

But having had two years' experience upon one of these commissions, I desire to say to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. OGDEN], for whose opinion I have a very high regard, that it is a matter of the greatest difficulty to secure a meeting of the members of joint commissions. We can easily get meetings of a committee of this body, but in view of the necessity of accommodating the business of a commission to the committee assignments in this and the other body, it is often a matter of very great difficulty to secure a meeting of all the members of a commission consisting of eight members, or even of six. My opinion was that three of each body would be preferable to four, and I still think so.

One further suggestion. I observe that on the second page of the bill the committee has stricken out the words "not exceeding two" before the word "experts," thus giving the commission authority to employ experts without restriction as to number. It seems to me—I merely submit this as a suggestion—that the provision of the bill as originally presented is preferable in this respect. Certainly two experts would be ample for the purposes of the commission. I submit this suggestion to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING], who drew the bill.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, it at first occurred to me that two experts would be sufficient. But on reflection I took into consideration this fact: That in the examination of railroad rates there might be necessary, for instance, an expert in that line; that when the commission came to examine the pneumatic-tube system, a special expert might be required for that kind of work. So with regard to free rural delivery, an expert specially familiar with that branch of the service might be necessary. For this reason I do not know but that the committee, in making the amendment referred to by the gentleman from Missouri, may have improved on the original bill. It was doubtless their expectation that these experts in different lines of business would be employed only temporarily.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well; I will not press that point. Now, I wish to suggest to the gentleman from California that in the last paragraph, in line 24, page 2, after the word "make," there ought to be inserted the words "by bill or otherwise;" so that the clause will read: "Any recommendations said commission may see proper to make by bill or otherwise, with the view of correcting any abuses or deficiencies," etc. With this amendment you would have specific authority to report your conclusions either by bill or joint resolution for the action of the House.

Mr. LOUD. Does the gentleman hold that that will give to the commission any special privilege?

Mr. DOCKERY. None whatever under the rule, except the direction to report conclusions in a crystallized form, either by a joint resolution or a bill; and it seems to me that the House should be entitled to your conclusions either in the one form or the other, inasmuch as this is likely to involve an expenditure of some $20,000. To that, however, I do not object. But I do think that the commission should be directed to report conclusions by a bill or otherwise, thus bringing something tangible before the House for consideration.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I ask whether or not the language of the resolution would not, in the judgment of the gentleman from Missouri, be broad enough to cover that point? It was so intended that if the commission should find it necessary to report some provision of law, they might do so either in the shape of a bill or otherwise.

Mr. DOCKERY. The words I suggest are in harmony with the usual form of such resolutions.

Mr. FLEMING. Personally, I have no possible objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. If the commission brings in a report, accompanied by a bill, it submits its conclusions for the action of the House. And that is what Congress has a right to expect from such a commission. We can then act upon the report understandingly. But we want the conclusions in crystallized form—in the shape of a bill or a joint resolution. Of course if the commission finds there is no occasion for reform in this matter, no bill would be reported, and nothing would be necessary excepting the report of the commission stating the facts.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman proposes to insert the words "to report by bill or otherwise?"

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. I have no possible objection to that modification.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the words be inserted, "by bill or otherwise," after the word "make," in line 24, on page 2. So that the provision will direct that this commission shall report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. LOUD. There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the insertion of the words to which the gentleman from Missouri has called attention?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOUD. I ask now, Mr. Speaker, a vote on the proposition.

Mr. DOCKERY. Before that is done, if I may be permitted a moment, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. OGDEN] perhaps did not understand the request a moment ago, and in justice to him I think he should have the right to object if he so desires.

I asked, as the Chair will remember, that we change the membership of the proposed commission from four to three in each body, and was informed that the gentleman from Louisiana did not understand that that change had been agreed to.

The SPEAKER. It has been agreed to by consent.

Mr. DOCKERY. So I understood, Mr. Speaker; but if the gentleman from Louisiana did not understand it, he should, I think, have the right to object.

Mr. OGDEN. I did not object at the time. I preferred the bill as it was originally reported and which proposed to make this commission consist of four members from each body. The membership of this commission was discussed fully and carefully in the committee, and the number reported—that is to say, four from the House and four from the Senate—was adopted as a measure of compromise. Some members desired more and others less, but this number was finally agreed upon. It seems to be a popular idea that we should have a commission of eight instead of four.

For my own part I would infinitely prefer four to eight, and especially as the report is something to which the credence of the legislative body must be given. The report of a commission when it is returned, if it should be returned by a nonpartisan membership, would carry more weight and more effect, I take it, than if there was a majority of the membership of either side preponderating on the board.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the gentleman from Louisiana prefers a membership of two from each body?

Mr. OGDEN. If the gentleman from Missouri will accept a further amendment, I would move to amend by making this board consist of two members from the Senate and two from the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LOUD. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY].

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that this is to be a commission composed of two members from the House and two from the Senate?

The SPEAKER. That is what the bill provides in its present form.

Mr. SPERRY. And the House has so decided?

The SPEAKER. The Chair submitted the suggestion, and there was no objection.

Mr. SPERRY. I am very sorry that they have done so. I rose for the purpose of——

Mr. STEELE. Of course if the gentleman objects, that would settle the matter.

Mr. SPERRY. That was my purpose.

The SPEAKER. Of course the Chair will regard the objection of the gentleman as effective, if that was his purpose in rising.

Mr. SPERRY. That was my purpose.

The SPEAKER. Then objection is made.

Mr. SPERRY. And my point is that we have a very large country and a very great diversity of interests; and, in my opinion, throughout the whole country, North, South, East, and West, there is need, and imperative need, for the most careful and vigilant exercise of the operations of the Post-Office Department, especially with reference to the investigation proposed to be made by this commission.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will ask my friend if he would not prefer to have it four from each House, as it was at first?

Mr. SPERRY. Yes; I would very much prefer that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That can be done by unanimous consent, and I think that will meet the unanimous wish of the House.

Mr. SPERRY. Not that I wish to doubt the appointment that the Chair would make, but there are various reasons why I think there should be four instead of a smaller number. There are some people who are very much interested in the railroad matters connected with the postal service. There are others very much interested in rural free delivery. There are others who are very much interested in relation to the salaries of clerks and carriers, and in relation to the operations of the Postal Department, so far as carrying the mails upon the cars is concerned.

Now, many of these objections arose in the committee, and in order that it might not be said that two men were subsidized, if they were capable of it, it was thought better to have four from the House and four from the Senate. Then they could be divided politically, and it did appear to me as well as to others on the committee that four would be a better number. I hope it will not be changed. Now, here are the postal laws and regulations which have been running since the days of Benjamin Franklin, and it is almost impossible to know what the postal laws and regulations of the country are. I hoped that there would be a first-class commission appointed to take this whole subject under consideration, and I think four from each House is preferable to two. Do I understand the Chair to say that two have been decided upon?

The SPEAKER. Three have been decided upon, by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. SPALDING. You can change it back to four, by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPERRY. I think the exigencies of the case demand that there should be four. The country demands that there should be a thorough investigation into this whole subject from top to bottom, and in my judgment four will accomplish that better than two, and people would be less disposed to find fault with the bill when it is presented. I ask unanimous consent that the number be changed to four.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the action of the House substituting "three" for "four" be rescinded. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and, two-thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the joint resolution was passed.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call up a bill which just came from the Senate. It is the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the amendments of the Senate, except in lines 4 and 5 of page 1, and lines 1 to 8 on page 4.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have the amendments read first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments of the Senate.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out "it."
Page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out "in the discretion of the Secretary of War."
Page 1, line 5, strike out "with Spain."
Page 1, line 6, before "The" insert "First."
Page 1, line 7, strike out "appropriation" and insert "appropriations."
Page 2, line 3, before "The" insert "Second."
Page 2, line 3, strike out "provision" and insert "provisions."
Page 3, after line 16, insert:
"Third. Section 3709, Revised Statutes, so far as the same relates to the bureaus of the War Department and all branches of the Army."
Page 3, after line 16, insert:
"Fourth. All that portion of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes,' which requires purchases of amounts less than $200, made without advertising, to be immediately reported to the Secretary of War."
Page 3, after line 16, insert:
"Fifth. So much of the act approved March 15, 1898, entitled 'An act making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes,' as provides that all employees for the Record and Pension Office of the War Department shall be exclusively engaged on the work of that office."
Page 3, after line 16, insert:
"Sixth. So much of the act approved March 15, 1898, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899,' under the heading Ordnance Department, as provides that not more than $65,000 of the money appropriated for the Ordnance Department in all its branches shall be applied to the payment of civilian clerks in said Department."
Page 3, after line 16, insert:
"And be it further enacted, That during the existing war materials required by the War Department may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be purchased abroad and shall be admitted free of duty."
Amend the title so as to read: "An act to suspend the operation of certain provision of law relating to the War Department, and for other purposes."

Mr. HULL. I renew my motion.

Mr. DINGLEY. I notice a provision in relation to the importation of articles purchased abroad. I should like to ask the gentleman if that is in addition to the bill we passed the other day?

Mr. HULL. The bill limited it to just one department.

Mr. DINGLEY. Limited it to naval and military supplies.

Mr. HULL. The recent bill you passed?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes.

Mr. HULL. I was talking about the Army bill. There was one exception in the Army bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. But we passed a bill to admit free of duty all articles purchased abroad for this purpose. Why should this be added?

Mr. HULL. That bill is now in the Senate, and it may be some time before it becomes a law. The War Department is bringing in a great deal of war material, and it is held in the custom-house, and the Secretary of War asked the Senate to put on this amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. We have already passed a bill admitting these articles. My query is, Why is this additional legislation necessary?

Mr. HULL. That bill, as I understand it, is the revenue measure that we passed here a day or two ago. It has not yet become a law.

Mr. COX. Is this the bill that passed through the Committee on Military Affairs, to suspend the operation of the law with regard to advertising by the quartermaster?

Mr. HULL. It is.

Mr. COX. Well, then, why is it that the amendments offered by the Senate have not got back to the committee?

Mr. HULL. Because the bill has just come to the House, and the Senate will probably not be in session, and it is simply to suspend the other matters.

Mr. COX. This is not the way to consider these matters.

Mr. HULL. Well, of course the House can pass on the matter of whether it wants to suspend these others or not.

Mr. COX. I do not hesitate to say that I am going to vote for any bill that in my judgment is proper, but when a bill comes back from the Senate with amendments of this kind, and when they are not sent to the committee, I am not going to consider it if I can prevent it.

Mr. HULL. I am asking to concur in all but these two amendments.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will ask the chairman——

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri, to whom the bill was submitted also, that it was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and there was one objection raised by my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] relating to the suspension of the provision of section 3709, and he stated that ought to be left out. Afterwards I was informed by one of the Senators, if I may be permitted to refer to them here, that the Secretary of War claimed that under the regulations adopted in the Department it was necessary for him to pass on each suspension separately, and by limiting this to the War Department it could do no harm. It simply saves work; and in the absence of the gentleman from Missouri I spoke to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who both agreed that it could do no possible harm to put it in this bill.

Mr. COX. This is a very serious matter, in my judgment. Here is a bill passed by the Committee on Military Affairs. It goes to the Senate and an important amendment is put on the bill, and it comes back to this House for the purpose of passing the bill. Ought not that committee to have the right to consider these amendments?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I will say to my friend from Tennessee that if I had had any idea that there would be objection on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs or any of its members, I would have been glad to have submitted it to them.

Mr. COX. Well, then, I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HULL. That would mean a delay of two or three days. The whole Quartermaster's Department is tied up through inability to supply the different camps of volunteers with clerical force and supplies necessary to carry on those camps.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Speaker, in reply to that I will state that the committee can meet in the morning, and we will consider that matter and send it back to the House with an intelligent consideration of the matter that is put on in the Senate. I do not think this is the way to pass these important bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the bill, with Senate amendments, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HULL. I hope that that will not carry.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HULL. Division, Mr. Speaker!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 43.

Mr. COX. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Twenty gentlemen have risen—not a sufficient number; and tellers are refused. The noes have it, and the motion is rejected.

Mr. HULL. I now renew my motion to concur in all except two amendments. I want to say to the House the Senate has already agreed to adjourn over until Wednesday, and by agreeing to this they will recede from these two amendments of suspension, and the bill will become law.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in all the amendments except the two specified. Will the gentleman state what amendments he desires to be excepted?

Mr. HULL. Simply the amendment on page 1, lines 4 and 5. Strike out the words "in the discretion of the Secretary of War," and on page 4 the proviso.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to ask for the reading of the bill as it came from the Senate?

The SPEAKER. The amendments have been read. The gentleman moves to concur in the amendments except amendments No. 1 and No. 11.

Mr. HAY. As I have not seen the bill, I can not tell exactly where they come in.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments in which it is proposed to concur.

The Clerk read the amendments in which concurrence was requested.

Mr. MAGUIRE. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HAY. A point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the amendments reported to the House——

Mr. COX. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MAGUIRE. It seems to me that the amendments in which the gentleman desires that we shall vote to nonconcur are not sufficiently distinct from the others read by the Clerk.

Mr. HULL. These are the amendments reported for concurrence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has had read the amendments in which the gentleman asks concurrence.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I thought the Clerk had read all the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COX. The parliamentary inquiry I want to make is this: The whole operation of that bill is to suspend the statute that requires the Quartermaster to advertise for supplies. That is the whole point in that bill. Now, I want to know if this bill makes that permanent legislation under the construction that applies there?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Iowa may possibly answer the question.

Mr. HULL. It does not make it permanent only during the war with Spain. At the discretion of the Secretary of War even during that war he can suspend it. I may say that the provisions of this bill do more than extend the service of the Quartermaster's Department so far as the clerks are concerned. If the bill becomes a law the Quartermaster can immediately purchase supplies for the boys going into camp, such as clothing and tents to make them comfortable, without waiting to get bids from all over the United States.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAY. My point of order is that the amendment put upon the bill by the Senate is not germane to the bill as it went from the House.

The SPEAKER. That point might be raised in the Senate, but not here. One parliamentary body can not criticise the proceedings of another, not under the rules.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the Senate declines to remain in session, and therefore the object I had in view is no longer attainable. I therefore move to nonconcur in all the amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion of Mr. HULL was agreed to.

Mr. FISCHER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman rise with reference to the bill called up by him on last suspension day?

Mr. FISCHER. No, Mr. Speaker.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. No. 8226, entitled "A bill to make certain grants of land to the Territory of New Mexico, and for other purposes," not to interfere with appropriation or revenue bills.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 10197) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriation for support of the Army for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes.

ROBERT PLATT.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Speaker, on the 4th day of April, under suspension of the rules, I called up Senate bill 1126, and the bill was read, and the House thereupon adjourned. I would like to know if that was not unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's measure is unfinished business. The Chair asked the gentleman if his purpose in rising was to call up that bill.

Mr. FISCHER. I did not understand the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will substitute for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] the unfinished business of last suspension day which has just been brought to his attention, and the Clerk will again read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill authorizing the President to appoint Lieut. Robert Platt, United States Navy, to the rank of commander.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint Robert Platt, lieutenant of the junior grade, United States Navy, not in the line of promotion, to the rank of commander, United States Navy, not in the line of promotion, and that for purpose there be, and is hereby, authorized one additional commander, not in the line of promotion, but in all other respects to be entitled to the rank, pay, emoluments, and privileges of commander in the Navy of the United States.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second.

Mr. FISCHER. A second was demanded on last suspension day, and upon that the House adjourned. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISCHER] is recognized for twenty minutes in favor of the measure and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] for twenty minutes in opposition.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Speaker, this bill has passed the Senate on two occasions, and has been pending before the House for some time. Lieutenant Platt occupies a peculiar position in the Navy. For bravery and heroic conduct during the last war he was made a lieutenant in the Navy without right of promotion, and the Department has not the right to retire him. He is to-day above the age of 64 years, and while apparently in good health, he is not fit for active sea work. The Secretary of the Navy, in order that he might overcome the obstacle presented by this peculiar condition of affairs, asks that this bill be passed. Unless it shall be passed, Lieutenant Platt will remain on the rolls of the Navy Department under full pay as a lieutenant in the Navy.

Mr. KING. Then this bill will save some money to the Government?

Mr. FISCHER. I would not answer it in that way, for I doubt if it would. Under this bill he will be given the pay of a lieutenant, but if it should be at any time desired to put him under waiting orders he might be put at so low a salary that he could not sustain himself.

He was a very heroic officer during the war. He was born in South Carolina and was one of the few of that State that remained true to the North. By the letters which are printed in the report it appears that he led the fleet commanded by Admiral Dupont at the battle of Port Royal. His vessel led the fleet in the battle and he sustained almost entirely all the fire for nearly half the battle.

After he had successfully conducted the fleet into the harbor of Port Royal, the Government assigned him to other duty and placed him in command of a small schooner, the name of which I do not now remember; but it was a small one, registering only 90 tons, and with that small sailing vessel he captured three of the largest prizes captured during the last war. I have the letter here from Major Moody, of the Marine Corps, which certifies that Lieutenant Platt was, without exception, one of the bravest men during the war. This gentleman is above the age of 64 years, and if it was not for the special enactment now upon the statute books he might be retired by the Secretary of the Navy at any time, and should have been retired when he reached the age limit.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is he on the retired list now?

Mr. FISCHER. No; and he can not be retired.

Mr. DOCKERY. What list is he on?

Mr. FISCHER. He is on the active list, having been made a lieutenant in the Navy by such an act that he can not be promoted. He has been a lieutenant ever since the battle of Port Royal.

Mr. DOCKERY. What were the circumstances requiring the passage of a special act to put this officer on the active list?

Mr. FISCHER. The only reason I can give for it, so far as the facts are disclosed to me, is this: Either that there was no rank which would permit such promotion without the act of Congress or that his acts during the war were of such a character that Congress possibly considered it either wise or proper that they should by this enactment rate him up to the position of lieutenant.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is his salary now as a lieutenant of the junior grade?

Mr. FISCHER. On waiting orders he gets, I think, about $800 a year; on active duty, I believe, his pay would be $1,200.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is he not now on active duty?

Mr. FISCHER. I believe that within the last two weeks he has been assigned to some duty at the navy-yard; but his health is not of the best, and he is over 64 years of age.

Mr. DOCKERY. What will be his salary if he be promoted to the rank of commander, as this bill proposes?

Mr. FISCHER. It is the purpose of the Secretary of the Navy to retire him at $1,200 a year. He would get just as much pay as he does to-day, he would not interfere with any other officer, and the Department would be relieved.

Mr. BURKE. Allow me to ask whether this is the ordinary procedure where an officer is on the retired list?

Mr. FISCHER. This is an exceptional case.

Mr. BURKE. Why should you make an exception in favor of this man as against others?

Mr. FISCHER. The gentleman does not understand me. I mean it is an exceptional case in this respect: This officer is now on the roster by act of Congress. He is the only officer in the Navy under these conditions. That is what I meant by speaking of this as an exceptional case.

Mr. TALBERT. Can he not be retired now from his present position with the salary to which he is entitled as a retired officer?

Mr. FISCHER. This is the only measure that will give the relief desired.

Mr. TALBERT. Then he can not be retired now?

Mr. FISCHER. No; only by an act of this kind.

Mr. TALBERT. Can he not be retired as a lieutenant?

Mr. FISCHER. Yes.

Mr. TALBERT. Then you just want to promote him before retiring him. You do not want to promote him so that he may continue to do service.

Mr. FISCHER. The gentleman does not understand. If this officer be retired as a lieutenant, he will receive $800 a year. He has been a lieutenant for thirty-five years, doing active duty all the time. If this bill should pass, he will be retired upon the retired pay of a commander. That is the intention of the bill and is in accord with the request of the Department. He would then receive $1,200 a year for the balance of his life. He is not in good health and is 65 years of age.

Mr. SHAFROTH. When was the special act placing this officer on the roll as lieutenant passed?

Mr. FISCHER. After the battle of Port Royal—in 1863, I believe.

Mr. STEELE. Would the gentleman be willing to say in the bill that this officer shall be retired at a salary of $1,200 per annum?

Mr. FISCHER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEELE. Then I will move an amendment of that kind.

Mr. FISCHER. I will be quite willing to have the bill provide that the Secretary of the Navy have full discretion to retire this officer on the full pay of a lieutenant.

Mr. STEELE. At $1,200 a year?

Mr. FISCHER. Yes, sir. That is the intent of the bill as read at the desk and as already passed by the Senate.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to see that amendment go in, if the gentleman is satisfied with it.

Mr. FISCHER. I should be quite satisfied with it. It will require the concurrence, however, of the Senate.

Mr. STEELE. Very well. As the gentleman does not object, I move to amend by adding at the end of the bill the following:

And the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, retire the said Robert Platt at a salary of $1,200 a year.

Mr. FISCHER. I accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOCKERY. That would make the bill contradictory in terms.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri wish to reserve an objection?

Mr. DOCKERY. No, I do not object; but if I am not mistaken, the bill with that amendment will be somewhat contradictory in terms.

This bill provides:

That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint Robert Platt, lieutenant of the junior grade, United States Navy, not in the line of promotion, to the rank of commander, United States Navy, not in the line of promotion, and that for this purpose there be, and is hereby, authorized one additional commander, not in the line of promotion, but in all other respects to be entitled to the rank, pay, emoluments, and privileges of commander in the Navy of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, that is the language of the bill, and it means that the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, shall retire him at an annual salary of $1,200 a year.

I think the gentleman from New York did not understand my question when I asked a few moments ago as to the compensation of this officer. I understood him to say that the pay in this case was $1,200.

Mr. FISCHER. The lieutenant's pay in the junior grade is $1,200.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the pay of a commander?

Mr. FISCHER. I do not know exactly, but one grade gets $1,800 and another $2,400.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am informed by a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs that a commander in the Navy is entitled to $3,600.

Mr. HULL. That is correct; the same pay as a lieutenant-colonel in the Army.

Mr. DOCKERY. And we do not want to jump this officer from $800, which he is now receiving, to $3,600, or even $2,200, that he might receive on the retired list.

Mr. FISCHER. I was quite willing to accept the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana——

Mr. DOCKERY. But, if the gentleman will permit me, that leaves the bill a sort of "double-barreled proposition." We do not desire to do injustice to this man, nor do we want to do injustice to the Government. This bill, if passed in its present form, would authorize his appointment to the rank of commander, and I do not know exactly what the compensation would be. I have been casting about for a member of the Naval Committee. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER] is present, and I will ask him to inform the House as to the compensation of a commander.

Mr. STEELE. I have sent for the Naval Directory, which will give all of the figures.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will ask the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER].

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. The pay of a commander is $3,000, after four years.

Mr. DOCKERY. What other kind of pay does he get?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. The shore pay, which I think is $2,600.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for this information.

Mr. LOUD. Would not longevity cut some figure in regard to his pay?

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). And we have this condition of affairs, Mr. Speaker, that it is proposed here to increase the pay of this officer on the retired list. I want the House to understand what it is doing in reference to the matter. As I understand it, $800 is the pay this gentleman is now entitled to receive. If this bill passes, according to the statement of the gentleman from Louisiana, this officer would get shore pay of $2,600 or sea pay of $3,000. It is a tremendous jump from the present compensation. In other words, this is virtually a pension raising the pay from $800 a year to $2,600, or an increase of $1,800 per annum.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. If the gentleman will permit me, I desire to interrupt him.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Of course the gentleman knows than an officer on the retired list receives only three-fourths of the active duty pay.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, that would be $2,250.

Mr. DOCKERY. But this bill does not retire him. The gentleman will observe that it creates an additional commander in the Navy, and authorizes the President to appoint this particular gentleman to that office. Instead of retiring him it puts him on the pay roll of the Treasury Department with additional compensation.

Mr. FISCHER. It will be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy, under the operation of the bill, to retire him at once after the passage of the act.

A MEMBER. Should not the word "lieutenant" be inserted before the word "commander," then?

Mr. DOCKERY. Why not retire him now?

Mr. FISCHER. Well, he was appointed under a special act of Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman will permit me, and I would like him to correct me if I am wrong, I desire to make a statement or an inquiry. This gentleman was put on the roll of honor by Congress as a lieutenant of the junior grade for gallant services. That, as I understand, gave him $800 per annum and was done by a special act of Congress. You come now and propose to create the rank of "additional commander in the Navy" and name this officer to fill it. That will give him increased pay of $2,600 on shore duty and $3,000 if he is on sea duty. So that, call it what you please, you increase the compensation from $800 at the lowest point now to $2,600 at the lowest rate under this bill.

Mr. FISCHER. The gentleman says that he has been pensioned. That is not quite right. He has been actively employed of late years on the Fish Commission boat.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, I accept the amendment as to phraseology.

Mr. STEELE. I have here the Naval Register, showing the rates of pay.

Mr. FISCHER. I wish to say that while he was promoted by a special act of Congress for especial bravery, he was also deprived of the right of further promotion. If that were not so, he would have reached the rank of a commodore by this time.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. If he will stick to the service now, maybe he can get to be a commodore before long.

Mr. FISCHER. I can not hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

Mr. STEELE. The Navy pay table in the Naval Register shows that a commander gets $3,500 per year at sea, $3,000 per year on shore duty, and $2,300 on leave or waiting orders.

Mr. FISCHER. How much on the retired list?

Mr. STEELE. Three-fourths of that.

Mr. FISCHER. What is a lieutenant-commander's pay?

Mr. STEELE. A lieutenant-commander, the first four years after the date of his commission, gets $2,800 at sea, $2,400 on shore duty, and $2,000 on waiting orders or leave. After the first four years he gets $3,000 at sea, $2,600 on shore duty, and $2,200 on leave. Now, a lieutenant——

Mr. FISCHER. Of the junior grade.

Mr. STEELE. He gets $1,800 on sea duty the first five years; $1,500 on shore, and $1,200 on waiting orders.

Mr. FISCHER. That is a lieutenant of the senior grade, is it not?

Mr. STEELE. No; of the junior grade.

Mr. DOCKERY. What will this officer get as a retired officer?

Mr. STEELE. Under my amendment he would get $1,200. Otherwise he would get $2,625.

Mr. FISCHER. What pay would he have on the retired list as lieutenant-commander?

Mr. STEELE. As lieutenant-commander he would get three-fourths of $3,000.

Mr. FISCHER. I am asking about a lieutenant-commander.

Mr. STEELE. I am talking about a lieutenant-commander. I am reading from the Naval Register.

Mr. DOCKERY. This bill creates the rank of commander.

Mr. STEELE. As commander, retired, he would get three-fourths of $3,500.

Mr. FISCHER. I am told that the actual figures show that the retired pay of a lieutenant-commander is $1,500 a year.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is not a lieutenant-commander.

Mr. FISCHER. No; but I am suggesting that possibly we might agree on an amendment making his pay that of a lieutenant-commander on the retired list.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman wants to have him retired at $1,200, after his service of thirty-four years, he might retire him as an ensign.

Mr. FISCHER. That possibly would be civil service, but we do not agree to that.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking about the money.

Mr. FISCHER. I was speaking about his having the pay of a lieutenant-commander.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me say to the gentleman from New York that we have finally developed the exact result of the bill, which would be to put this gentleman on the retired list at $2,625 a year.

Mr. FISCHER. I do not want to do that.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am satisfied the gentleman does not want to do that. There may be merit in the case. I have no doubt he is a worthy officer.

Mr. FISCHER. He is.

Mr. DOCKERY. But I suggest to the gentleman that he allow the bill to go over to the next suspension day, to retain its place as unfinished business.

Mr. FISCHER. I should like to have it disposed of, and I will offer an amendment making it lieutenant-commander.

Mr. DOCKERY. No; that gives him $2,250.

Mr. FISCHER. No; $1,500.

Mr. STEELE. A lieutenant-commander has $3,000 a year, all the same.

Mr. GARDNER. No; but this man is to be retired.

Mr. STEELE. Then he gets three-fourths of that.

Mr. FISCHER. Three-fourths of what?

Mr. STEELE. Of $3,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Three-fourths; and one-fourth of $3,000 is $750, and multiplying that amount by 3 you have $2,250 as compensation, or else my mathematics are all wrong. Now, I suggest to the gentleman from New York, whom I would like very much to accommodate if I could do so without giving him the privilege of too extended an invasion of the Treasury, to let the bill go over until next suspension day, retaining its place as unfinished business, and then we can examine into it and ascertain if there is any merit in the bill. Let it go over. It can not pass now, I am sure.

Mr. FISCHER. I think I had better let the matter go over. Mr. Speaker, we seem to be so much at sea upon this bill [laughter] that I have concluded, if I shall not lose my position, to let it go over until next suspension day.

The SPEAKER. With the consent of the House the gentleman may withdraw the bill and let it be considered as unfinished business.

Mr. HICKS. I think we had better dispose of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. But we do not want to do that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

GRANTS OF LAND TO THE TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I have modified the resolution offered a while ago, and I call it up and move its adoption in the modified form.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon Wednesday next, after the expiration of the morning hour, it shall be in order to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6230) entitled "A bill to make certain grants of land to the Territory of New Mexico, and for other purposes," such consideration not to interfere with appropriation or revenue bills.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand a second.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. MAHON. I object. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that we have got some bills on the Union Calendar that have never been reached, and the only time we can reach them is after the call of committees. I have waited all winter, and I am very anxious to get at a certain bill, and the Committee on Public Lands has had considerable time for the discussion of its measures.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, the Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, provides that the bill be taken up after the expiration of the morning hour, which, of course, will be by a vote of the House after an hour's time has been spent.

Mr. MAHON. We can then move to go into Committee of the Whole on the Union Calendar, and we have been waiting patiently for that opportunity for months.

Mr. LOUD. You can not do so then unless you specify some particular bill.

Mr. LACEY. I say that this bill proposes giving——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania requires that a second be ordered.

Mr. LACEY. I thought unanimous consent was given that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the gentleman from Iowa will take their places on the question of ordering a second.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly evident that there is no quorum. I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 898. An act for the relief of William H. Atkins, formerly commissary sergeant, United States Army—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 3308. An act to authorize the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Red River at or near the city of Shreveport, La.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 1217. An act for the relief of holders of certain District of Columbia tax-sale certificates, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 59. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Skelton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3908. An act to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion, the Chair will announce as conferees on the military bill the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HULL, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MARSH, and the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. HAY.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting an estimate of appropriation for additional employees, War Department—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for deficiency in "Rent, pension agencies"—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitted the views of the minority on the bill (H. R. 4363) amending "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine-Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893 (Report No. 1238, part 2); which said views were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which were referred House Document No. 439 and Senate Document No. 250, relating to deficiencies in the appropriations for support of the Army, and House Documents Nos. 416, 419, and 443, submitting estimates for deficiencies in the appropriations for printing and binding for the Navy and Treasury Departments, contingent expenses, Navy Department, and for pay, miscellaneous, of the Navy, reported a bill (H. R. 10197) making appropriations for support of the Army for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 1246); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRODERICK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7935) to grant to the State of Utah the Industrial Christian Home in Salt Lake City, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1247); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mead, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1242); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STURTEVANT, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10135) to increase the pension of Robert Litzinger, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1243); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RAY of New York, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 312) for the relief of Ellen Wright, hospital nurse, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1244); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2541) granting a pension to Clara R. Rodgers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1245); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1609) to remove the charge of desertion against James Norris; and the same was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LIVINGSTON: A joint resolution (H. Res. 252) tendering the thanks of Congress to Commodore George Dewey, United States Navy, for his victory over the Spanish fleet at Manila—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of citizens of Evansville, Wis., favoring legislation providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: Petitions of citizens of Burlington and Strong City, Kans., in favor of the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DE VRIES: Petitions of the Presbyterian Church of Elk Grove and Methodist Episcopal Church of Sheridan, Cal., for the passage of bills to protect State anti-cigarette laws, to forbid the transmission of lottery messages by telegraph, and to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Sheridan and Presbyterian Church of Elk Grove, Cal., in favor of the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of liquor in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petition of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Modesta, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GROUT: Petition of Charles R. Taggart and the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Topsham, Vt., favoring legislation providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Charles R. Taggart and the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Topsham, Vt., favoring the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. HOOKER: Petitions of the Methodist Episcopal Church and First Universalist Church of Sherman, N. Y., and Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Ceres, N. Y., in favor of a bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Ceres, N. Y., for the passage of bills to prohibit the interstate transmission of gambling matter by telegraph, to raise the age of protection for girls, and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Sherman, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Erie Conference League, of Sherman, N. Y., for the passage of a bill to raise the age of protection for girls—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KERR: Petitions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and a union service of four other churches of North Fairfield, and citizens of Brinkhaven, Ohio, for the passage of bills to prohibit interstate gambling by telegraph, to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years, and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the Methodist Episcopal Church of North Fairfield, and Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor and Epworth League of Brinkhaven, Ohio, favoring the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. KNOX: Petition of Joseph Laurent and others, praying for the abolition of duties on goods imported into the United States—to the Committee on Ways on Means.

By Mr. LACEY: Petitions of the Appalachian Mountain Club, of Boston, Mass., and J. B. Castleman, president Park and Outdoor Art Association, Louisville, Ky., against the passage of House bill No. 8428, in reference to Executive order of February 22, 1897, suspending indefinitely the orders creating forest reservations—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LATIMER: Petition of R. S. Hill and 15 other citizens of Anderson, S. C., in favor of the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LEWIS of Georgia: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Macon, Ga., protesting against the imposition of an additional revenue tax on tobacco, snuff, and cigars in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McCORMICK: Petition of the Christian Endeavor Union of Logan, Kans., asking for the passage of a bill to forbid the sale of intoxicating beverages in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MANN: Petition of 1,500 members of the Central Body, Milk Dealers' Association, protesting against the passage of the so-called anti-scalping bill or any similar measure—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. NORTON of Ohio: Petition of J. G. Hahn and 32 other members of Grange No. 345, Patrons of Husbandry, of Berlin Heights, Ohio, favoring postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and Christian Endeavor of Palmyra, Nebr., for the passage of a bill to raise the age of protection for girls—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the United Brethren Church of Mount Zion, Otoe County, Nebr., favoring the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws, and to forbid the interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 3, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stricken out the resolution offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. The Chair thinks that ought not to be journalized, because precedence was given to unfinished business that had the right of way. Without objection, the Journal as corrected will be approved.

There was no objection.

PUBLIC LANDS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 1586, to provide for the sale of public lands in Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all public lands within the State of Missouri shall hereafter be subject to disposal at private sale in the manner now provided by law for the sale of lands which have been publicly offered for sale, whether such lands have even been offered at public sale or not: Provided, That the actual settlers shall have a preference right, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask the gentleman from Missouri if, where money has been invested by settlers in lands, this bill protects them?

Mr. BLAND. The bill protects them.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine reserves the right to object.

Mr. DINGLEY. The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, Mr. Speaker, informs me that he has examined the matter, and I have no objection.

Mr. BLAND. I understand the gentleman from Maine, Mr. Speaker, withdraws his objection upon the statement of the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment to the bill as section 2.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding to the bill the following:

"SEC. 2. That in cases arising from and after the passage of this act the distinction now obtaining in the statutes between offered and unoffered lands shall no longer be made in passing upon subsisting preemption claims, in disposing of the public lands under the homestead laws, and under the timber and stone law of June 3, 1878, as extended by the act of August 4, 1892, but in all such cases hereafter arising the land in question shall be treated as unoffered, without regard to whether it may have actually been at some time offered or not, except in the State of Missouri, in which the lands are still subject to disposal at ordinary private cash entry; and the public land remaining undisposed of in that State shall be treated as offered, without regard to whether it may have actually been at some time offered or not."

Mr. LACEY. House bill 5877 on the Union Calendar is on the same subject as the bill now before the House. This bill now before the House applies to Missouri only. The distinction between offered and unoffered lands is applicable to other States, and House bill 5877 covers other States. It was drawn by the Commissioner of the Land Office, introduced by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE], and has been on the Union Calendar some time.

Mr. BLAND. I have no objection to the amendment. I think it is proper.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does that affect the land grants to agricultural schools and colleges?

Mr. LACEY. It does not. There was a distinction between offered and unoffered land growing out of rulings made a long time ago, which distinction has been abrogated by subsequent legislation. There are, however, a number of pending claims for patents in the Land Office, and matters in which these old distinctions are kept up and for which there is no longer any reason. The Department has been anxious to abolish it and annul the distinctions altogether. It used to be that before lands could be open for entry they had to be offered at public sale, at auction.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand that; but you understand the grants by the Government to the different State agricultural colleges——

Mr. LACEY. Yes; but this has no bearing on that; it is purely a departmental question.

Mr. HARTMAN. As I understand, it is merely to facilitate the entry upon lands by bona fide settlers under the law.

Mr. LACEY. Yes; that is it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call attention that the word "lands" in the fifteenth line ought to be in the singular, or else the word "it" should be changed to "they" in the next line.

Mr. LACEY. I will accept the suggestion of the Chair. I think it would be better to have the bill go into conference, if it passes, in order that it may be all brought into one section. Inasmuch as we are legislating on one line in the House, and the Senate is legislating on another, if the bill should pass I would move to have a conference upon it.

Mr. SIMPSON. Does this bill provide for the sale of homestead and preemption lands where they are not good lands for agricultural purposes?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

Mr. LACEY. Nothing of the kind. It simply abolishes this distinction between offered and unoffered lands. Has the change suggested by the Chair been made?

The SPEAKER. The change will be made. The word "lands" in the fifteenth line will be changed to the singular. The question now is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then read a third time, and passed.

Mr. LACEY. I move to amend the title by substituting the following: "To abolish the distinction between offered and unoffered lands, and for other purposes."

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BLAND, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. LACEY. I move that the House ask for a conference with the Senate on the amendment disagreed to.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. LACEY, Mr. ELLIS, and Mr. LEWIS of Washington.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, House bill 5877, on the Union Calendar, was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 4468) to provide for a volunteer brigade of engineers and an additional force of 10,000 enlisted men specially accustomed to tropical climates; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

PARKING IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to call up the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 5880) to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia control of street parking in said District was concurred in.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment and ask for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. COWHERD, Mr. JENKINS, and Mr. CURTIS of Iowa as conferees on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRUMM. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

PROCUREMENT OF MILITARY INFORMATION.

Mr. HULL. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his demand for a moment in order that we may take up and pass a bill which I think very important in connection with the military information division of the War Department.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the bill to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] refers is an important one, and will take but a moment.

Mr. BRUMM. I reserve the right to object. Let us see what the bill is.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 251) to limit section 3 of "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898 and 1899, and for other purposes."

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the prohibition of the purchase of "law books, books of reference, and periodicals for use of any Executive Department, or other Government establishment not under an Executive Department, at the seat of government," as set forth in section 3, page 45, of "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898 and 1899, and for other purposes," shall not apply to the provision "for contingent expenses of the military information division, Adjutant-General's Office, and of the military attachés at the American embassies and legations abroad, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $3,640," as duly set forth in the act "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898," approved March 2, 1897, and in the act "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899," approved March 15, 1898.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand that this joint resolution simply gives the Department the right to use a certain contingent fund of about $3,000 for the purchase of books which are important for military information.

Mr. HULL. The bill simply enables the War Department to obtain current military information from our military attachés abroad and from other sources.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If this bill is going to cause any discussion, I must object.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has a letter on this subject from the Adjutant-General, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does this bill operate for only a single year, or does it repeal altogether the original act?

Mr. HULL. It does not repeal the original act at all. It simply suspends it until June 30, 1899. It is made necessary by reason of a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, which has tied up the military information bureau, so that, as we learn, it is practically paralyzed and unable to get information which is badly needed just now.

Mr. McMILLIN. I presume the measure proposed is a proper one in this emergency, but I think the original act, applying to the purchase of documents in general by the Departments, was an important and wise one.

Mr. HULL. This matter has been submitted to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], who has charge of the proviso on this subject in the legislative bill, as well as to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], who are also members of the Committee on Appropriations, and they all unite in asking that this measure be passed at once.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that the letter of the Adjutant-General on this subject be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 25, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the fact that section 3, under subhead "Court of Claims," in the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, will be destructive in its effect upon the military information division of this office. The section in question reads as follows:

"SEC. 3. That hereafter law books, books of reference, and periodicals for use of any Executive Department, or other Government establishment not under an Executive Department, and the seat of Government shall not be purchased or paid for from any appropriation made for contingent expenses or for any specific or general purpose unless such purchase is authorized and payment therefor specifically provided in the law granting the appropriation."

The appropriation for the contingent expenses of the military information division of the Adjutant-General's Office is as follows:

"For contingent expenses of the military information division, Adjutant-General's Office, and of the military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $3,640."

As this reading does not in itself specifically show that this fund is available for the purchase of books of reference and periodicals, it may be well to invite attention to the fact that when this appropriation was first made it was made specifically for several objects, including purchase. The note accompanying the estimate of expenditures is as follows:

"NOTE.—The increase of $3,640 over the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year is asked by the Adjutant-General of the Army for contingent expenses of the military attachés at United States legations abroad. He says: 'This amount will enable the military information division to provide the sum of $10 per week for each of the seven military attachés at London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg, Rome, and Brussels for the purpose of procuring books, plans, maps, photographs, etc., desired by the division, and to pay necessary expenses for carriage hire, copying, messenger service, etc., pertaining to the duties of their office. This appropriation is very essential, and the amount asked for is much less than that allowed by foreign governments for the purpose.'"

This appropriation has not in any way been changed in amount or purpose since it was first granted for the purchase of books and periodicals. If payments from this appropriation for periodicals were disallowed the principal reason for the appropriation itself would at once cease to exist.

The above has been explained to the Comptroller of the Treasury. He decides, nevertheless, that hurtful as the section in question is there is no way of escaping its provisions except by act of Congress. The recent crisis has fully demonstrated the value and importance of the military information division of this office, yet this division seems about to be completely paralyzed by the sweeping away of the appropriation necessary for its current expenses. In order to keep abreast of current military progress and keep posted in regard to military strength and preparations of foreign nations it is necessary that there should be a fund at hand by which the military information division can provide itself with all sources of current military information.

The fund at present is inadequate and the division has been seriously hampered by being restricted to its present small appropriation. The Adjutant-General in his last estimate urged its increase to $6,000. If the use of any portion of this appropriation for periodicals and books of reference be disallowed it will result in a practical emasculation of the efficiency of the military information division.

It is, therefore, earnestly recommended that favorable attention be given to the draft of the joint resolution herewith presented.

Very respectfully,

H. C. CORBIN, Adjutant-General.

Hon. JOHN A. T. HULL, M. C.,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NAVAL BATTALION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, I desire consent to take up at this time the bill (S. 1316) to provide for the organization of a naval battalion in the District of Columbia, which comes to the House with certain House amendments disagreed to by the Senate and with request for a conference thereon. I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. BRUMM. There is no demand, I presume, Mr. Speaker, for the reading of the bill in full.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, it had better be read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. HILBORN. I now move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman state what the amendments are?

Mr. HILBORN. The House put certain amendments on the Senate bill, which were disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman about the Naval Reserve force in the District of Columbia—as to its organization and status.

Mr. HILBORN. It is a part of the Naval Militia.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that. It is, then, a militia system for the Navy similar to that which is provided for the Army?

Mr. HILBORN. Exactly. It bears precisely the same relation to the Navy that the militia force does to the Army.

Mr. CANNON. And this is for the District of Columbia?

Mr. HILBORN. Yes; entirely.

Mr. CANNON. And appropriations for the Naval Militia, if any were made, are precisely similar to those made for the militia of the District of Columbia?

Mr. HILBORN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. And the bill carries no salaries or emoluments for these officers of the militia for the Navy?

Mr. HILBORN. None.

Mr. CANNON. And no expense except such as grows out of the furnishing the militia with arms and such equipments as are supplied by the United States; that is to say, that no salaries are provided in the bill?

Mr. HILBORN. None whatever.

I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that this bill was presented by myself and provided for the organization of a naval battalion in addition to the regular militia of the District of Columbia. It was objected to by the gentleman from Texas, and it was finally provided that this force should be a part of the militia of the District. In that form the bill was considered and passed the House, but the Senate objected to the amendments placed upon the bill. They therefore send the bill back, nonconcurring in the House amendments and asking a conference between the two Houses.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senate asks a conference on the disagreeing votes?

Mr. HILBORN. That is all that is proposed.

I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked.

Mr. BAILEY. Do I understand the gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this measure?

Mr. HILBORN. Oh, no. I only ask that the House insist on its amendments.

Mr. BAILEY. I was under the impression that it was a privileged report.

Mr. HILBORN. I only ask that we accede to the conference asked.

Mr. BAILEY. But if it has not been referred to the committee and reported back, it would require unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this, being in the nature of a private bill, would require unanimous consent of the House for its consideration.

Mr. BAILEY. That was my impression, Mr. Speaker. But I shall not object to the motion of the gentleman from California, which is, I understand, simply to concur in the Senate request for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request to the House.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILBORN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move now that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced Mr. HILBORN, Mr. FOSS, and Mr. MEYER of Louisiana as conferees on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I now insist on the regular order. But before proceeding to the consideration of the Calendar I find under the head of "Special orders" on the Calendar a bill that has really been passed. I refer to the bill (H. R. 628) to pay the heirs of the late John Roach, deceased, $330,151.42 for labor and material, dockage, detention, etc. This bill has been disposed of and I want to get it off the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Calendar will be corrected as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the bill will be laid upon the table.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, the bill, No. 629 of the Senate, to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims in the case of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South against The United States should also be taken from the Calendar, as it has been disposed of.

I move that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

CALVIN P. LYNN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3953) granting an increase of pension to Calvin P. Lynn, with a Senate amendment thereto reducing the rate of pension from $20 to $12 per month.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAY of New York. I now move a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, and Mr. BOTKIN.

MARIA E. HESS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 864) granting a pension to Maria E. Hess, widow of Florian Hess, with a Senate amendment thereto reducing the rate of pension from $12 to $8 per month.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I now move a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. MIERS of Indiana.

JOHN X. GRIFFITH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8636) granting an increase of pension to John X. Griffith, with a Senate amendment thereto reducing the rate of pension from $50 to $30 per month.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the House ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. WARNER, and Mr. BOTKIN.

JOHN B. HAYS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8834) granting a pension to John B. Hays, with a Senate amendment thereto reducing the rate of pension from $30 to $20 per month.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me? I notice, so far as these bills have been taken from the Speaker's table, the Senate amendments seem to decrease the amounts fixed by the House bills. Am I correct in my hearing?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. How long since this departure has been taken? Has that been running through the session? I have not noticed it.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, I will say that because the House would not give an extravagantly large pension to the widow of a brigadier-general they retaliate here in a few cases by cutting down the pension that is voted to a private soldier or to an imbecile child. We will try to settle that.

Mr. DOCKERY. The new departure only applies to pension bills. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I was not sure that my hearing was correct about it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAY of New York. I ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. KERR, and Mr. DRIGGS.

FLORENCE N. WALDRON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5245) granting a pension to Florence N. Waldron, with a Senate amendment thereto reducing the rate of pension from $20 to $12 per month.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAY of New York. I ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, and Mr. DRIGGS.

GEORGE BARNES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3653) granting a pension to George Barnes, with a Senate amendment thereto reducing the rate of pension from $24 to $12 per month.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the House ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. BARBER, and Mr. MIERS of Indiana.

CHARLES E. TAYLOR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5809) granting a pension to Charles E. Taylor, with a Senate amendment thereto reducing the pension from $40 to $30 per month.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

SALLIE WORK.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2119) to grant a pension to Miss Sallie Work, with sundry Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

FREDERICK G. MOORE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1295) to increase the pension of Frederick G. Moore, late of Company I, One hundred and fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, with sundry Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM S. ADAMS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7449) granting a pension to William S. Adams, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Volunteers, with Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

EMORY T. HIPPLE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6088) for the relief of Emory T. Hipple, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

EVA SEELEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6928) granting a pension to Eva Seeley, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM C. RYAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7052) granting a pension to William C. Ryan, with Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

MARY C. CASE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2762) granting a pension to Mary C. Case, with Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

GRACE GUDGELL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6515) granting a pension to Grace Gudgell, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. CALISTA HADLEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3889) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Calista Hadley, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN F. MOULTON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 802) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Moulton, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

MARY B. HULINGS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8197) for the relief of Mary B. Hulings, with a Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

HANNAH C. PILE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5372) for the relief of Hannah C. Pile, with Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

KATHERINE L. CUSHING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4469) increasing the pension of Katherine L. Cushing, widow of William B. Cushing, late commander in United States Navy, with Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. GARRISON.

The motion was agreed to.

ANNIE SAFFELL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 137) for the relief of Annie Saffell, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

RICHMOND LOCOMOTIVE AND MACHINE WORKS.

The SPEAKER. Also the following unfinished business which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 1183) to pay to the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works its claim for damages and losses incurred in the construction of the armored battle ship Texas.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question. This matter has been reported favorably by the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have been recognized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts, but the chairman of the committee is entitled to be recognized.

Mr. BRUMM. There has been a full discussion of the bill.

Mr. MOODY. There has been very little discussion whatever.

Mr. BRUMM. It was under discussion some hours.

Mr. MOODY. I have read the discussion, and I heard it also.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

Mr. MOODY. The House is quite thin, and I do not want a great deal of time.

Mr. BRUMM. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MOODY. Fifteen minutes at the outside.

Mr. BRUMM. I think I will insist on the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that there were—ayes 43, noes 35.

Mr. MOODY. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER (having counted the House). One hundred and thirty-two gentlemen present—not a quorum.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. If there is no quorum, Mr. Speaker, of course there can be no business done.

Mr. MOODY. I will suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] that I do not propose to delay the claim or to make any heated argument against it.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I hope my colleague will be conceded ten minutes—say fifteen minutes on a side.

Mr. BRUMM. No; we do not want any time.

Mr. MOODY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Can the demand for the call of the House be waived?

Mr. YOST. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the House be waived.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can withdraw his point of no quorum——

Mr. MOODY. Then I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). And then by unanimous consent the vote on the previous question can be vacated.

Mr. STEELE. The fact remains that there is still no quorum.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question was negatived, then an arrangement could be made with the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is well enough to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that that would take the business from his hands.

The SPEAKER. That would be the effect of it.

Mr. MOODY. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have no desire to take the control of the bill from his hands.

Mr. BRUMM. I would like to ask if there is any way in which we can dispense with the call of the House?

The SPEAKER. The difficulty about the matter is that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MOODY. Is it too late, Mr. Speaker, to call for tellers on the question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Is it not true that after the point of no quorum has been made, the only thing is a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. The only thing that can be done is to call the House under the rules, to close the doors, and proceed with the vote by yeas and nays, which are considered as ordered.

Mr. MOODY. I suggest that the Speaker could take judicial knowledge that a quorum is now present.

The SPEAKER. If there is a quorum present, the Chair can take notice of that, and on the suggestion the Chair will count the House again. [After counting the House.] One hundred and seventy-four members are present—not a quorum. The doors will be closed, and the yeas and nays under the rule are considered as ordered and also a call of the House. The question is on the motion for the previous question.

Mr. HARTMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order now to submit this proposition for unanimous consent: That the point of "no quorum" be withdrawn, that the ordering of the previous question be vacated, and that at the end of twenty minutes' debate, ten minutes of which shall be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the previous question may be considered as ordered?

The SPEAKER. That would not be in order now, it appearing that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, if the House should vote down the motion for the previous question, then it will be possible to get some discussion on the merits of the bill?

The SPEAKER. That will be possible.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 118, nays 78, answered "present" 24, not voting 135; as follows:

So the previous question was not ordered.

Mr. BELL. I desire to be recorded as present. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. LOW.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to withdraw my vote and be recorded as present. I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. FARIS.

Mr. McRAE. I ask that my colleague, Judge TERRY, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. BELFORD, and therefore desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded present.

Mr. BARTLETT. I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present." I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. TAYLER, but for the moment overlooked that fact.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask that my colleague, Mr. CRANFORD, be excused on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. GROW, has voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I have a general pair with the gentleman, which expires to-day; but I answer "present."

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from Rhode Island, Mr. BULL, has voted?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. As I am paired with the gentleman, I desire simply to be recorded as present.

Mr. LORIMER. I wish to withdraw my vote. I am paired with my colleague from Illinois, Mr. CAMPBELL, and wish to be recorded as present.

Mr. NORTON of South Carolina. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. WISE.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. WEYMOUTH with Mr. CRANFORD.
Mr. FARIS with Mr. CLARK of Missouri.
Mr. PRINCE with Mr. HINRICHSEN.
Mr. HOOKER with Mr. CATCHINGS.
Mr. BELFORD with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

Mr. ROBBINS with Mr. BENNER of Pennsylvania.
Mr. FOOTE with Mr. GRIGGS.
Mr. HEPBURN with Mr. CARMACK.
Mr. LYBRAND with Mr. LENTZ.
Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. SIMS.
Mr. MILLS with Mr. MCCORMICK.

Mr. DOVENER with Mr. SPARKMAN.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS with Mr. MCDOWELL.
Mr. TAYLER of Ohio with Mr. BARTLETT.
Mr. GROW with Mr. MAGUIRE.
Mr. PEARCE of Missouri with Mr. STRAIT.
Mr. COCHRANE of New York with Mr. BODINE.
Mr. COLSON with Mr. SMITH of Kentucky.
Mr. SULLOWAY with Mr. TERRY.
Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. DAVEY.
The following pairs were announced:
For this day:
Mr. LOW with Mr. BELL.
Mr. KERR with Mr. SWANSON.
Mr. MILLER with Mr. VANDIVER.
Mr. BULL with Mr. NORTON of Ohio.
Mr. CHICKERING with Mr. DE VRIES.
Mr. OLMSTED with Mr. VEHSLAGE.
Mr. JENKINS with Mr. FITZGERALD.
Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. FITZPATRICK.
Mr. BELDEN with Mr. DRIGGS.
Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. HANDY.
Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.
Mr. NORTHWAY with Mr. BLAND.
Mr. MCCALL with Mr. WILSON.
Mr. PERKINS with Mr. FOWLER of North Carolina.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this being a very important vote, I think it ought to be recapitulated.

The vote was recapitulated by the Clerk.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. MAHANY, and desire to be recorded simply as present and not voting.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, if we can come to some understanding now, and I do not doubt that we can, I am perfectly willing that the gentleman should have fifteen minutes in opposition to the pending bill, and we will retain fifteen minutes on this side, to be used if necessary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that fifteen minutes on a side be granted for the consideration of the pending bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, what I shall have to submit to the House is hardly worth the time that it has cost us to obtain it. I have usually—and, with one single objection, invariably—voted for the bills reported by the two Committees on Claims to this House. And it has been by the merest accident that my attention was drawn toward the merits or demerits of this claim, and which induced me to give it some consideration.

It is perfectly clear that when this bill was before the House, and was considered by this body, it was neither explained by its supporters nor was it understandingly, with knowledge of the facts, passed by the House. And I make that remark with the greatest respect to my friends upon the committee, and especially my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I have only been trying, if the gentleman will permit me, to get information on the subject and to bring out all of the facts bearing upon the case.

Mr. MOODY. The result of the gentleman's effort, at all events, was to attract attention to the case, which it might otherwise possibly not have had.

Nor does the report of the committee show any special reason why the bill should be passed by Congress. The report fails, in my judgment, to disclose certain facts in the case which ought to have been presented and which have a direct bearing upon the whole question at issue. The report, as you will observe, is extremely brief, and there are a number of exhibits attached consisting of letters from the Department which bear upon the nature of the claim.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that there are sound reasons why this claim, although it has been favorably considered by the Committee of the Whole, should not be paid; and I have felt it to be my duty, and I desire to say in the first place that I have no interest in the subject-matter of the claim—I have felt it to be my duty to ask the House for a little fuller consideration of the matter than seems to have been given to it heretofore. I do not desire to oppose any just or proper claim against the Government, but I have believed it to be my duty to present my objections to the payment of this claim.

This claim, as the report shows, is for the payment of certain damages incurred by the contractors for the building of the machinery of the war ship Texas, and the foundation of the claim is that the work of the Government, which was to proceed pari passu with the machinery of the vessel, contracted for by these parties, was not kept up, and therefore delayed the work on the machinery and damaged the claimants to the extent of $80,000.

The proposition, Mr. Speaker, to which I refer is embodied in the contract. That contract is now before us for consideration and is printed in the report.

It is signed, no matter when. It provides that the Richmond Locomotive Works should build the machinery of the ship Texas, and should have it done in two years and a half from the date of the contract; that they should then begin to attach it to the vessel, and that three and a half years from the date of the contract the machinery should be completed and in the vessel. There were some delays on account of a fire in the locomotive works at Richmond, which in my view are not material to the consideration of this case. The hull was delayed by the Government, but it does not affect the legal aspects of this case.

Now, then, the Government agreed that if the Richmond Locomotive Works should have the machinery done ahead of time they should receive a certain premium, and if they should be behind time that they should pay a penalty; and the method of ascertaining the premium or penalty is pointed out in the contract. Now, although the contractors agreed to have the work done at a definite time, the Government expressly declined to have its work done at any definite period of time. The contract contemplated that there might be delays on the part of the Government, and so, as the contract had provided for the delays on the part of the contractors, it went on to provide for the delays on the part of the Government, and it has this provision in the contract, and that is really the whole gist of this case. It is found on page 13 of the report:

> All delays which the Secretary of the Navy shall find to be properly attributable to the Navy Department, or to its authorized officer or agents, or any or either of them, and to have been a delay operating upon the final completion, erection, and connection of said machinery within the time herein specified therefor, shall entitle the party of the first part—

To what? To damages, as they would be, or to penalties, as in the case of the contractors' delay? No. The Government expressly declines to be liable to damages on account of delay, and it is to be entitled—> to a corresponding extension of the period herein prescribed for such completion.

Evidently the purpose of this contract was to bind the contractors to have their work done at a given point of time and compel them to use vigilance in observing the progress of the governmental work and to time their work accordingly. Now, the contractors, being intelligent gentlemen, when this contract was presented to them for consideration saw very clearly that, although they were bound to pay a penalty to the Government, the Government was bound to pay them no penalty in case of Government delay, and they went, accordingly, to the Secretary of the Navy and called his attention to this fact, and said, in substance, "Mr. Secretary, you have not provided for any damages to be paid to us in case of delay on your part."

And they carried to the Secretary a form of contract, a typewritten form of contract, to modify the very provision to which I have called the attention of the House; and the Secretary, scouting the idea that there would be delay, absolutely declined to modify the contract in the manner in which the contractors desired it to be modified. And in spite of that fact, having fairly in mind the exact thing that I shall hereafter show actually occurred, delay on the part of the Government, and having presented that point to the Secretary of the Navy by way of a modification of the contract, and he having refused to modify the contract, they signed the contract with their eyes open, taking the chance of the very contingency that has happened.

Now, Mr. Speaker, by law, by equity, by any rules that direct fair dealings between man and man, the contractors when they signed this contract were bound by it, and ought not to come into Congress and claim damages in any other way than the contract provides for.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly.

Mr. BRUMM. Does the gentleman contend that if the Government had delayed a long time, beyond the delays incidental, almost necessary to the work—that notwithstanding that, if there were reasons for delay, this Government might not be responsible for not having acted in good faith?

Mr. MOODY. Not under the contract. If it had been for an unusual length of time, I would concede that something should be given.

Mr. BRUMM. This was a delay of seventeen months or more.

Mr. MOODY. It is not so extraordinary a case as would warrant making that exception. The hull of the Texas was delayed in its completion by the Government; in my opinion not only delayed in an incidental way in which delay is liable to occur, but delayed by unwarranted action on the part of the Government, by fitting out some other vessels with armor plate before the Texas was fitted, although the armor of the Texas was ordered first. That caused some delay. The contractors make it the ground of the damage, and they have presented their bill to the Government. Now, I call the attention of the House to that bill for damages to show how unwise it is to let these claims go through in this manner, to the method of computation of compensation which these gentlemen have adopted. Let me say in passing that I desire to be entirely fair to both sides of this claim. By a section added to the naval appropriation bill this claim was sent to the Navy Department to be audited, and we have a report of the Department on this bill, in which it substantially admits the payment of this claim.

We have here a showing of the way in which these contractors got at their loss. It is on pages 26 and 27 of the report, and it is the most extraordinary method of computing damages with which I ever came in contact. They show that they have paid out for labor and materials $522,000, in round numbers. They add to that $151,000 for contingencies. They compute and add interest in the amount of $59,000, and they add profits of $52,000. That, altogether, makes an outgo on their part of $785,000; and against that outgo they credit all the payments which they have received from the Government. The balance is the claim which they make against the Government.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman certainly is in error about that. There is no interest in this.

Mr. MOODY. That is the way the claim is made out. There is another item of interest, which is an entirely different item from this. The item of interest to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania is referring is interest upon the final sum which is claimed to be due against the Government. The interest of which I am speaking is an element in the computation by which that final sum is arrived at, and they are two different things.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to a fact which I think he will admit, that those items he speaks of are not charged against the Government at all. They have made a showing of their business, showing a full statement of what it costs, enumerating these items, not to charge them against the Government, but to show a clear loss of a hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. MOODY. Now, let me call the gentleman's attention to page 26. Here is a statement of the claimants themselves. It says:

> Statement from our books of Texas account, showing cost of original contract, replace and extra work and amount received therefor, May, 1889, to December, 1894, inclusive, and that we are short the amount claimed.

And they are shown, in the method which I have pointed out to the House, to be short $108,000, and the claim for that $108,000 is the claim which this House is considering at this time, and the House will see that it includes a claim for $52,000 profit.

Now, what kind of a way is that to get at the damages on account of the delay of the Government in the performance of this particular contract? Why, it appears by this report that this contractor, during the time of his work under this contract, had a fire by which his works and machinery were in whole or in part consumed. He had a strike by which there was great loss. Part of this work was done during the stringency of 1893, and there was loss to him on that account. There might have been improvidence in signing the terms of the original contract. No allowance is made for any of these things, but they take their books. They find out what it cost them to do this work.

They add to that $52,000 profit, and without regarding the fact that they might have made all this loss by the fire, the strike, or by their own improvident contract, they come to Congress and charge $108,000 as the loss by reason of the delay of the Government, and the bill reported by the committee, although it does not allow the whole of the claim, is based upon it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have tried to state this case fairly, as I understand it, with both sides of it as I understand it. I have withheld nothing one way or the other. I am entirely indifferent as to the result. I have discharged my responsibility to the House. The House may do with it as they please, and I have not a word of fault to find. I happen to know these facts, which have not been produced before, and I submit them to the sound discretion and judgment of the House.

Mr. BRUMM. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I can hardly touch this case in five minutes; but I see it is exceedingly curious, and it is considered as a joke around this House, that the citizens of this country desire to be paid their honest claims against the Government. What do gentlemen say to me because I have taken an interest in these private claims and have felt compelled to in good conscience? They say, "What are you going to get out of it?"

Of course there is not a man in this country who has the slightest idea that I am to "get" anything out of it, but these words show the spirit with which these claims are met. It shows the spirit of many in this House, who would pay the citizens of this country nothing due them under any circumstances. Why, a member of this House, a member of the Populist party, came to me the other day and said:

> When I came to this House I came with the idea that everybody was robbing the Government, but from what I have seen since I have been here, it seems to me the Government is robbing everybody.

Mr. MOODY. Will my colleague tell me the name of the gentleman to whom he has just referred?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. No, sir, I will not, because I do not want him made conspicuous. I do not want to have his bills and business for his constituents objected to when he gets on the floor to serve his people, by way of punishment for having made an honest remark. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. It would put him in bad repute with his constituents.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I presume it would put him in bad repute with those of his constituents who do not know the circumstances as we know them. I can stand these things, but what touches me is to see this want of justice to the poor people whom I see day after day in the galleries and in these corridors, who are seeking payment of their claims; not the rich, but the poor, and those who have been made poor by claims against the Government and whose means are wasted in seeking justice at the hands of this House. It has come to be a fashion to deny them justice without regard to whether their claims are just or unjust.

Now, my friend says that these claimants ought to have watched the ship and seen whether it was being constructed or not. He may know all about courts of law——

Mr. MOODY. I did not say exactly that.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. These were your words, "They took the chances and were bound by the law of the contract to watch the construction of the ship," which they actually did, and they found the ship would not be constructed as the Government agreed to construct it. They could have tried their machinery and could have saved this loss had the Government kept its promises. But the armor plates were taken away from this vessel and used on other vessels because private contractors had the contract for the machinery for this vessel; because the private contractors would suffer the loss and the Government works would not be damaged, the armor plate was taken and put on other Government vessels. It was by the unjust act of the Government that this loss came to these parties. Let me read an extract from a letter:

> Before signing the contract in 1889 I went myself to Secretary Tracy with a typewritten sentence, which I wished included in the contract, that would protect me in case of delay on the part of the Government in building the hull. This he declined to do, and handed it back with this remark: "Young man, you had best hurry home and build your machinery, as the ship will be waiting for you." This took place in the presence of one or more of the bureau chiefs and the Judge-Advocate-General. The Secretary asking the latter when the hull of the Maine would be finished, received the response that it would be ready in some twelve or fifteen months. This seemed to justify the Secretary's admonition to me of haste. As a matter of fact, the Maine was not finished for several years after the date of our conversation. I, you see, could not have done more to protect myself.

Now, let me say that there is not the slightest question on the part of the Government or of anybody on this floor but that these persons were put to the expense of $108,000, positive loss, because of the Government practically dismantling this ship of its armor plate by giving it to other vessels when it should have gone upon this vessel, as the Government agreed. The Government practically said to these parties, "You have our moral obligation, you have our assurance, which is better to you than any provision in any contract, that this ship shall be completed according to the intentions and plans of the Government and shall be completed on time." If there ever was a claim just and equitable in every particular, it is this; and I want to say to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] that were this his private business I know him well enough to know that his sense of justice and integrity would cause him to pay, relatively to his own fortune, any claim against him like this claim against the Government before he slept tonight.

Mr. BRUMM. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB].

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a claim accruing by reason of the fact that the United States Government failed to comply with the spirit of the contract between it and the Richmond Locomotive Works. They gave the armor plate that should have gone to the Texas to three other vessels, and thus delayed the completion of the vessel for seventeen months, and laid the ground for damages by reason of failure on its part.

In answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] it may be well to state that the long, itemized account rendered by the Richmond Locomotive Works was only intended to show the fact that they lost $100,000 by this transaction, and really has nothing to do with the basis of this claim. He has not referred to the potent factor in this whole case, viz, the report of the Secretary of the Navy. These claimants asked the Secretary for a settlement upon the following basis:

Damages	$79,000.00
Interest claim	12,000.00
Dock trial	12,000.00
Insurance	2,000.00
Damage to schooner	600.00
Security	600.00
Total	106,200.00

Now, on page 11 of this report we find, after this matter had been referred to the Secretary of the Navy, the following statement of the account:

Direct damages	$56,000.00
Interest	8,000.00
Dock trial	12,000.00
Insurance	1,100.00
Damage to schooner	600.00
Security	600.00
Total	78,300.00

The Senate committee struck from these items the interest and damages to the schooner and insurance, reporting a balance of $69,000 due these people. This amount, reported by three committees of the Senate and two of the House, is justly due. We state, without fear of contradiction, that these people would make no claim that was not just and equitable. They are men of the highest standing in the city of Richmond. Some of them differ with me along economic lines, but I can safely say that they stand as good a chance to be landed safely in Abraham's bosom as any of the gentlemen on this floor who have persistently fought this measure.

Mr. Speaker, this is a plain and simple claim for damages. It comes before this House with a favorable report from the Secretary of the Navy, and is by far a stronger claim than the one passed here in favor of the heirs of John Roach a few days ago. You voted for that claim. Some on this side laid aside their prejudices and voted for it also. Now, if you could support the Roach claim without a favorable report from the Secretary of the Navy, you can surely vote for this one with the report of the Secretary of the Navy. We have a gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] opposing this claim, and one from the same State [Mr. WALKER] supporting it. I am glad to see some of you gentlemen laying aside your prejudices and supporting these Southern claims, and it reminds me of one of the grandest utterances of a distinguished citizen of the old Bay State. Mr. Webster, after remaining in Tyler's Cabinet after all the rest had left him, returned to Massachusetts to receive the jeers of his people. Standing up in his open barouche in the streets of Boston, he rebuked his people in words like this:

> My countrymen, you have conquered a barren soil and made it bloom and blossom like a rose, you have conquered the winds and waves and made them the messengers that carry your products to the four corners of the earth, but you have never yet learned to conquer your prejudices.

Now that we have been laying to heart the lessons taught us over and over again by our fathers, and have given evidence on more than one occasion of a determination to subordinate party spirit to the general good and obliterate sectional lines, I ask for a unanimous vote on this measure, that justice, so long delayed, may be meted out to these deserving claimants.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. YOST].

Mr. YOST. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] has undertaken to raise two objections to this bill. First, he cited the contract and claimed that under that contract the only compensation the contractors should have for the injury and expense to them caused by delay on the part of the Government, was to give them more time. A further extension of time was the very thing against which they were protesting. It was the time consumed by the Government in getting the hull of the ship ready to receive the machinery which caused the damage, injury, and expense to which they were subjected.

I should not want the gentleman to construe contracts for me. Under the contract, the Navy Department, one of the parties thereto, audited and adjusted this claim. With full knowledge of the injury which had been caused by the failure of the Government to perform its part of the contract, with every facility for investigating every item of expense claimed, the Department made its adjustment and itself reported that these claimants were entitled to over $80,000. The Secretary of the Navy understood the contract thoroughly and was fully able to construe it, and did construe it.

I venture to assert that the gentleman from Massachusetts, were he a judge determining a case of this character, would never undertake to say that this contract contemplated that the Government should compel these contractors to keep this expensive machinery on hand for seventeen months after its completion at their own expense, and that no compensation should be allowed for the damage thus incurred. It would be unreasonable, unjust, and unheard of.

The second objection made by the gentleman from Massachusetts was an attempt to criticise the items of the claim made by the Richmond Locomotive Works. I shall not undertake to follow him in that discussion. It is unnecessary. The bill here does not provide the amount claimed by the contractors. It is based on the findings of the Department. Each item of the claim was subjected to the closest scrutiny, and the amount reduced from $108,000 to $80,000. After considering every possible offset the Government could assert, the Department reported that the beneficiaries of this bill were entitled to $80,000. But this bill does not carry that amount. The Senate Appropriations Committee of the last Congress struck out the items of interest, insurance, and surety which had been allowed by the Department, thereby reducing the amount from $80,000 to $69,000. The House committee was of opinion that the whole amount allowed by the Department was justly due, but the claimants have agreed to accept the smaller amount in order to secure an immediate settlement. Hence this bill calls for $69,000 instead of $80,000.

The matter is so plain, Mr. Speaker, that further discussion is not necessary. I ask for the passage of the bill.

The question was taken on the third reading of the bill; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 51, noes 3.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, it seems that there is no quorum here, and I think there ought to be on the passage of such a bill as this.

Mr. BRUMM. We may as well order a call of the House at once, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CANNON. Would my friend be willing—as evidently no quorum is present and it is hard to get one in the short time remaining—would he be willing to allow this bill to be passed and then move an adjournment?

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, no.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. BRUMM. Let us have a call of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I would ask my friend another question. Is he willing to dispose of the unfinished business on the Calendar and then adjourn?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. No; let us go on with the whole Calendar.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Massachusetts says "No." Let me ask my friend, suppose the unfinished business has been considered——

Mr. BRUMM. It has been disposed of.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to submit this inquiry——

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANNON. I have submitted a request or suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania in charge of this Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman from Illinois speaks of an "arrangement" or submits a suggestion with regard to the pending business to-day. The gentleman from Illinois has made the point that there is no quorum present, and the Speaker has counted the House. Now can anything be done in the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BRUMM. The Speaker has not announced the result of the count.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not yet announced the result, but will do so if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. MOODY. What I desired to say, Mr. Speaker, was simply this: That the delay in the consideration of this matter has resulted from a desire on my part to present certain facts in connection with the pending bill. I feel under some sort of an obligation to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] for the opportunity of allowing me to express my views. And under the circumstances, feeling as I do under obligations to the committee for its courtesy, I hope the gentleman will withdraw the call for a quorum on this vote, as nothing would be lost thereby; and at all events my conscience in the matter would be satisfied.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to make an inquiry as to a matter of fact. I observe that on pages 2 and 3 of the Calendar under the head of "Unfinished business" there are some fifteen or twenty bills. Are those the matters next in order?

The SPEAKER. They are.

Mr. CANNON. And they must be disposed of before we go to the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. They must first be disposed of.

Mr. CANNON. Then I withdraw the point of "no quorum."

The SPEAKER. The point of "no quorum present" is withdrawn.

Mr. CLARDY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether it is his intention that no more legislation shall be carried through this session unless there is a quorum present.

Mr. CANNON. Any member has the right to demand a quorum, without criticism.

Mr. CLARDY. I understand that; but as the gentleman has commenced this operation to-day, I should like to know whether he intends to continue it?

Mr. CANNON. Well, that depends.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it; and the bill is ordered to a third reading.

The bill was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. YOST, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House bill similar in purport to the bill just passed will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

MICHAEL MAHONEY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 9642) granting a pension to Michael Mahoney.

Mr. RAY of New York. Michael Mahoney, who is named as the beneficiary in this bill, is dead. This bill was therefore reported with the recommendation that it lie on the table. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly laid on the table.

W. L. FAXON.

The next business was the bill (S. 116) granting a pension to W. L. Faxon.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BETSEY B. OLIN.

The next business was the bill (S. 497) granting an increase of pension to Betsey B. Olin.

The bill was read.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that the report in this case be read.

The report was read.

Mr. DINGLEY. This seems to be a bill to increase the pension of the widow of a private soldier to $25 a month. I wish to inquire whether there are other cases of this kind and whether $12 a month is not the legal limit in these cases?

Mr. RAY of New York. There have been a very few extreme cases of this kind in previous Congresses, and there has been one similar case in this Congress. The increase of pension which this bill proposes to grant in the present case is only on account of the fact that the husband of this woman died by reason of his army service——

Several MEMBERS. We can not hear.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will speak as loudly as I can. I am very hoarse. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] asks whether there have been other cases like this. I say that in previous Congresses there have been cases like this, and in the present Congress there has been one similar case.

As all gentlemen are aware, the law gives to the widow of a private only $12 a month where the husband died by reason of disabilities incurred or wounds received in the service. This woman is now 80 years of age. She lost her husband by reason of wounds that he received in the service of his country. She is now utterly destitute; she has no property; she has no one on whom she can depend for her living. She is insane. The $12 a month to which she would be entitled under the general law would give her reasonable aid and support and would maintain her outside of the poorhouse were it not for the exceptional affliction which has fallen upon her—insanity. Your committee have thought that because this is an exceptional case which can not be adequately provided for by a general law, and inasmuch as this woman lost her husband because of his service in the Army, it was proper to increase her pension to $25 a month. Such cases as this are very rare indeed.

Mr. TONGUE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. TONGUE. I understand from the report that this applicant is hopelessly insane. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman whether the State of New Hampshire, where she resides, does not make some provision for taking care of insane people in proper asylums at the public expense?

Mr. RAY of New York. I suppose the State of New Hampshire does make such provision. I do not believe there is one of the New England States that does not.

A MEMBER. Nor any other State.

Mr. RAY of New York. I hope not.

Mr. TONGUE. Then I ask the gentleman whether this is not in fact a bill to grant a pension to the State of New Hampshire instead of a bill to pension the widow of a dead soldier?

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not view it in that light. Every old soldier who was shot to pieces in the Army or who is now helpless by reason of disabilities incurred in the service of his country could be left by the General Government without aid or assistance, and in his old age and his destitute circumstances he could be cared for in the public poorhouse of his county or State. So that we might just as well say that when we give a pension in any case to help a poor old soldier or a war widow we are relieving the State from its obligation to take care of its paupers. But we will not say or do that; we will not allow old soldiers or war widows to become paupers. I want to say in this connection that so far as I am concerned, while I have been and am conservative in these matters and would make the generosity of the Government go as far as possible without being extravagant in any case, we can not afford to say that an old soldier——

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Or a war widow.

Mr. RAY of New York. Or the war widow of an old soldier shall ever be permitted under any circumstances to be a charge upon the public or to be put in a poorhouse in order to be cared for.

Mr. TONGUE. I should like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. BRUCKER. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York one question.

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me finish with the gentleman from Oregon first.

Mr. TONGUE. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if there is any better or more proper place for an aged, hopelessly insane person than in a properly regulated insane asylum?

Mr. RAY of New York. Ordinarily not.

Mr. TONGUE. Is this applicant now in an insane asylum?

Mr. RAY of New York. I understand that she is.

Mr. TONGUE. Will not this money, then, go entirely to the State and not to the applicant?

Mr. RAY of New York. Not as I understand it in this case. By way of illustration, in the State of New York, while we have State lunatic asylums and formerly had county lunatic asylums for the care of the insane, when those insane patients have property it must go to reimburse the State to pay for their care while there, or the person may be cared for at home by friends; but we were assured in the committee, by the gentleman from New Hampshire, that if this pension should be granted it would not go to the State, but would apply to the care of this old lady, this war widow, by and amongst her friends as a private patient.

Certainly, if she were in an insane asylum as a mere pauper, it would relieve the State, but we were further assured by the gentleman that if this pension was given her she would be taken by some of her friends outside of the asylum, and that she was in such a condition that she could be better cared for away from the asylum, so that it would not be a gratuity to the State. Of course she gets the $12 anyhow. In a sense it is true that it helps the State, but in a broader sense, under the circumstances of this case, it is not true that it is a gratuity or a donation to the State of New Hampshire, not more than is any pension.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if these are the bills that have passed at the Friday-night sessions of this House which now come up as a part of the unfinished business?

Mr. RAY of New York. This is one of the bills that was discussed and passed in the Committee of the Whole at a Friday-night session.

Mr. TALBERT. And it is now on the unfinished calendar.

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly. I want to say further that the committee would not report a bill granting an increase of pension to any person for the purpose of relieving a county or a State from the care of that person, or simply to let the money go into the coffers of the State which permitted the soldier or the soldier's widow to remain in an asylum or in a poorhouse, because that would be aiding the State and not adding at all to the comfort of the soldier or the soldier's widow. We have been very careful to examine into the facts in regard to it and find out what the result will be where we gave an increase of pension in similar cases. Such cases are very rare. The committee can not consent to allow an old soldier disabled by service in the war, or a war widow, to become a pauper.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] is satisfied with the elaborate explanation of this little pension bill which the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] has given. I desire to add to what has been said on the merits of this measure that this pension bill, with the others upon the Calendar of unfinished business to-day, was passed upon by the Committee of the Whole House at one of the regular pension meetings on a Friday night. At these meetings, held under the rules of the House for the consideration of pension cases, many of the members attend and give most careful attention to this class of legislation.

As I have been a constant attendant at these meetings, I can bear witness to the fact that the greatest care is used by the Invalid Pension Committee and the members who attend those sessions; and whatever other criticisms may be made, it can not be said that a measure passes the Committee on Invalid Pensions unless it is just and meritorious; and when that committee report these bills to the House, I can bear testimony to the action of the House in passing only those measures that have merit and are deserving of consideration.

I am sorry to say, however, that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] who asked the question on this pension bill, and other gentlemen who assume to be and are leaders of this House, have not been often seen in attendance at the meetings provided by the rule for the consideration of pension cases; and with all deference to these gentlemen and their views upon matters of pension legislation, with all deference to their ideas of justice, I say that when the Invalid Pensions Committee, known for its care in the presentation of these pension bills, has given a case fair consideration and reported it favorably when just consideration has been had in Committee of the Whole at a Friday night's meeting, it is not proper to obstruct it here, and I ask gentlemen who are friends of the soldier to hesitate a little before they filibuster and delay these little pension bills which have received the consideration of the House in the Committee of the Whole.

I have no doubt this is a deserving case. If it had not been, it would not have been presented by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions nor have been passed by the Committee of the Whole House. I speak advisedly, for I have attended these meetings, which many gentlemen of this House who justly claim that they are its leaders have not attended, and I have seen the care used in the Committee of the Whole. I would invite those who seek on these days to delay to come some evening when pension cases are being considered. Come then and aid us in legislation for the veterans. [Applause.]

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JACOB M. HAMBURGER.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1807) to remove the charge of desertion against Jacob M. Hamburger, with amendments.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to strike out the initial "M" and insert the initial "N," as it is a mistake.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is that in the body of the bill?

Mr. CORLISS. It is in the title as well as the body of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first put the question on the amendment recommended by the committee. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the committee recommend that amendment also.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1807) entitled "A bill to remove the charge of desertion against Jacob N. Hamburger," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass, with the following amendment:

Strike out of the title of the bill the initial letter "M" and insert "N."

Strike out of line 5 the initial "M" and insert "N;" also add, after the word "discharge," in line 7, the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

It appears from the petition, proof filed with the committee, and official records of the War Department that Jacob N. Hamburger enlisted at the age of 15 years as a musician in the Twelfth United States Infantry, at the city of New York, on the 29th day of February, 1864, for a term of three years. He continued in the service until January, 1866, when he was reported as deserted at Richmond, Va. The official records also show that William Lowe was principal musician of the Twelfth United States Infantry, and had control of the musician, Hamburger, who was a frail boy, less than 16 years of age. It is claimed, and there is sufficient evidence to establish the reasonableness of petitioner's claim, that after Mr. Hamburger had served about a year he was most severely punished with a rawhide by the chief musician, Lowe, who, it is claimed, inflicted the punishment at a time when he was intoxicated. The punishment was so violent as to cause the cheek bone of the petitioner to be broken and his eye affected, from which he has since lost sight. The records show that the petitioner was taken to the hospital for treatment of lacerated wounds, and that the principal musician was placed under arrest, but there is no record of his trial.

The records further show that the petitioner, after being thus unjustly assaulted by the principal musician and treated in the hospital, returned to the service and continued there for a number of months, under the command, however, of a different principal musician. Being subsequently transferred to Richmond, Va., and again placed under the command of William Lowe, who had inflicted such severe punishment, fearing further injury, he left the ranks and returned to his home, alleging as the reason therefor the fear for his life in consequence of the threats of said Lowe.

The claimant was, upon his own application, furnished, in August, 1891, a deserter's release under General Orders, No. 55, Adjutant-General's Office, 1890, which protects him from arrest and trial by general court-martial and closes his military record.

There is no record that this musician, during his service prior to date of desertion, was ever absent without leave for two days or for any other period.

The affidavit of Thomas P. Bryant, a bugler in the Twelfth United States Infantry, who was an eyewitness to the cruel flogging and to the injuries received, as well as the cruelty of the officer set forth by petition, fully corroborates the statement of Mr. Hamburger. The conduct of the drum major and his cruelty to Mr. Hamburger is also shown by the affidavit of Orsemun Kelly, one of the boy musicians of the United States infantry; and the personal injury to the cheek bone and loss of the eye, in consequence of the cruel treatment of the petitioner, is supported by numerous affidavits.

The extreme youthful appearance of the boy at this time, his age, and good conduct during his service in the Army, and the injury inflicted upon him constrain the committee to recommend the relief desired.

It appears from the records of the Fifty-fourth Congress that this bill was properly reported to the House, and passed on May 22, 1896, and on the 25th of February, 1897, passed by the Senate, and was presented to the President for his approval several days prior to the 4th of March, 1897, but failed, with many other measures, to be considered by the President.

The second initial should be "N" instead of "M," as set forth in the bill, and with this modification your committee urge that the bill do pass.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CORLISS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended.

There was no objection.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask what was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Too late, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has already been passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole, some with amendment and some without, were severally read, the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole agreed to; Senate bills ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, and House bills ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 1541) granting a pension to "Itewayaka," or "One-armed Jim;"

A bill (S. 1773) to amend the military record of George F. Miller;

A bill (H. R. 4651) for the relief of Jacob Shela, of Portsmouth, Ohio;

A bill (S. 1829) granting a pension to James H. Kile;

A bill (S. 637) granting an increase of pension to Oliver P. Silvey;

A bill (H. R. 2668) for the relief of William Henry Johnson;

A bill (H. R. 3556) to correct the military record of Joseph Graham;

A bill (H. R. 2646) for the relief of Edward C. Parsons;

A bill (H. R. 4239) to complete the military record of James Hicks, formerly captain Company M, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Cavalry Volunteers; and

A bill (H. R. 1794) to remove the charge of desertion now standing against George Alcott on the rolls of the War Department.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills were passed was laid on the table.

HENRY J. FLEMING.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3991) for the relief of Henry J. Fleming.

The bill and amendments were read.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the report in this case within my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report does not seem to be at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Has the bill been reported? I asked, Mr. Speaker, whether that bill had been reported?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. It comes from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COX. It seems to come from the Committee on Military Affairs. What is the title of the bill?

The title was again read.

Mr. COX. I do not call it to mind. It is from my committee.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it will be observed, I am sure, that while I may not betray patience on sundry and divers occasions——

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Certainly. I will always yield to my friend from Indiana.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. As the gentleman who introduced the bill is not present, nor the chairman of the committee that made that report——

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Well, will you withhold that for a moment?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Very well.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the records of the morning bring us the glorious news that Commodore Dewey, of our Navy, has entwined the Stars and Stripes around the trident of Neptune to be hereafter a menace to the world. [Applause.]

It will, Mr. Speaker, be a dangerous precedent if this House continues to pursue a line to remove indiscriminate charges of desertion and then enter upon the rolls of the pension list the undeserving, and thus shut out those who must be needy; close its gates to those who undoubtedly must come hereafter. I have listened a great deal since I have been a member of the House to the constant cry of "patriotism," not only respecting these measures, but respecting any and every measure that can be tendered upon this floor.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I can not recall an incident where a measure has been tendered to this House, however meritorious or meretricious, but what there has been summoned the shibboleth of "patriotism" in order to give it an impetus. There has never been a tariff law suggested on the floor but that "patriotism" has been conjured as an excuse why we should vote against the taxpayer, increasing his burdens. There was a law for Congress to create a monetary commission and giving them $100,000 of the people's money under the cry of "patriotism," for them to go out and legislate more debt and less money for the nation, but up to this hour we neither have the information as to what legislation they did in our behalf or what they did with the $100,000.

If some slight account could be made by these estimable gentlemen, who, I have no doubt, far excel this humble body, as to what they have done with the money which went out of the Treasury, there may be enough remaining to meet these different pension claims of the dependent and worthy. If we can ascertain what that foreign and bimetallic commission has done with the $175,000 which they seem to have taken from the Treasury to gallivant over the continents, there may be something left with which we may requite some of these existing demands.

I have listened too often, Mr. Speaker, to the constant cry of "patriotism" as the reason for legislating measure after measure here, and only the other day we heard from our honorable friends on the other side that patriotism should always drive us into the line of action which shall execute the desire of the other side, irrespective of any virtue or vice of the measure. On this side of the House there arises, now and then, as did my friend from New York, the distinguished and honorable gentleman, AMOS CUMMINGS, who advised this assembly that he "put his country above party," and under that cry certain gentlemen on the floor, under his leadership, calling themselves Democrats, found it agreeable to support the measure mortgaging the generation and their children yet unborn, irrespective of the fundamental justice of it.

I realize that my friend from New York, who holds a high place on the floor, and deservedly so, not only from his ability but by his long service, may have a right to dictate to a great many members both as to Democratic fealty and patriotism; but I am moved at this time to ask my friend, when they say they put their country above party, above which party do you put yourself? [Laughter and applause.]

It always seems highly appropriate from my distinguished friends from New York—who have my constant affections and my equally constant efforts whenever I can serve them—whenever stimulated by that magnificent, indescribable buoyancy of "putting their country above party," it is always to descend it immediately to the depths of the Republican party. [Laughter.]

There never seems a time in the history of my friends when their country is entitled to be elevated above the Republican party. I rise to ask of my distinguished Republican friends when is it that their party ever found it agreeable under the cry of patriotism to accept any measure which the Democratic party tendered, or vote for any proposition coming from this side of the House? When, at any hour or under any circumstances, has it been that any measure tendered by my friends on the other side did not have the merit of "patriotism" to recommend it, to give it impetus, encouragement, and, with the aid of deluded men, an undeserved success? [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, under the cry of "patriotism," which is ever conjured up for the purpose of putting through any measure here, I discover that a set of men who are to be the beneficiaries of this "patriotism" under which and by which we yield up the country's rights, sacrifice the poor to the pillage of the taxgatherer and to those who plunder the Treasury, I discover that this set of gentlemen who are always above the law, who condemn the income tax, who condemn the power of taxation, who cry out that every man who opposes their methods is a demagogue or an anarchist, I discover this graceful set of gentlemen who are the embodiment of public virtue, as the coal trust, selling coal to the Spaniards to load their ships to bombard our cities and blow our marines from the seas.

I perceive, on the other hand, that these eminent corporations known as railroads have combined in a trust in the West and have entered into a league to sell mules and munitions of war to Spain that her cavalry may cut down our American soldiers when they land to execute the demands of the President. More than that, that one of the gun factories of this nation, the owners of which have been in the habit of crying out "repudiation" and "demagogy" to every effort of honest men to right the wrongs of the poor, is making guns for the Spanish nation, and when called to account for it give answer they are doing so for the "money there is in it." These are specimens of the people who are arraying members of this House under the cry of patriotism and branding each of us who oppose them as "demagogues," "hypocrites," and "anarchists." I take the liberty of making some short contrast between the two classes.

Who are these men who were branded "demagogues," "anarchists," and "repudiators," who are accused of having no respect for the Supreme Court, no regard for law, nor reverence for sacred institutions—who are they? Behold them! I ask again, who are these men who are being termed demagogues and anarchists and are ever charged with want of patriotism—that word which, as Walpole well said, is ever summoned up when there is a desire to execute some evil thing or to play into the hands of the guilty, those who rob and pillage the country in the hour of its weakness and the day of its credulity? I ask who are these maligned men? They are the men who are asking for relief in pensions here to-day.

They are those poor, unfortunate men who in this hour have forgotten the men who cursed them, have forgiven the men who defamed them—who are unconscious of the way in which they are being robbed and pillaged here by those who should be their guardians, who know no enemy but the enemy of their country. They are the men who are to-day burnishing up the old muskets, drawing the old sword out of the scabbard. They are the men who are taking the last leave of an aged mother. They are the men who are holding to their bosoms in perhaps a last embrace the wives of their souls and dropping a soldier's tear upon the face of their children [applause]; are going to the front to die for their country. [Applause.] These are the true patriots of this nation. [Applause.]

For myself, I have grown tired of this constant, prating cry of "patriotism" which is ever invoked on the floor of this House every time there is an attempt to commit a constitutional wrong. [Applause.]

I have watched day after day to see my friends on the other side rise to condemn this thing; I have listened for some voices of condemnation from that side, but have heard none save now and then a rare exception, such as my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], who speaks so patriotically against a wrong and unhappily votes for its perpetration. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask you, do you not agree with me, will not this House agree with me, that the hour has arrived when we should heed the demands of these worthy pensioners, likewise the worthy toiler? Must we meet them with the statement that their demands can not be complied with because of the present condition of the Treasury?

The distinguished premier of this House, the leader of the party on the other side, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], informed us the other day of the decaying condition of the Treasury, and yesterday supplemented his remarks by telling us of the possible demands that will be made in order to keep the present Army in the field; that such demands will exceed the revenues and force further taxation of the people.

Mr. Speaker, can we support that Army in the field, can we equip that Army with a depleted Treasury, and at the same time pay these pensions, when there are these increasing mortgages and claims upon the nation? Let us consider for a moment the condition in which we are placed. When the nation is languishing, when there are these tremendous burdens to be borne, can we meet these new demands? It is well worthy of consideration. Is it not time for us, under these conditions, to pause and reflect where the money is to come from to meet them?

They are obligations we have assumed to pay; they are obligations we are called upon to assume; and how can we pay them under present conditions? Will there be money derived from any source to pay your volunteers in the field, and to pay your pensions after the war, unless some man or some party shall rise superior in this country in the present conditions and stop the outrages now being perpetrated upon the taxpayers by the gilded robbers—the stealthy frauds committed against freedom and against honor?

Mr. Speaker, it is high time that patriotism in this country shall come to the front, and that mere partisanship shall be, at least for the time being, relegated to the rear. [Applause.] Are we to continue to sit here idling day after day and let this proceeding go on, Congress after Congress, when we see the Treasury being robbed, as we have been informed that it is being robbed to-day?

Why, what have we on the record at this very time? We find that our nation has contracted for the transportation of its soldiers at $12 each when the regular fare is only $7, in order to serve the railroads' injustice. We have the information that within a very short time an effort has been made to make a contract with the Government at $7 for the transportation of our troops, and that an effort to make the bid was refused and declined, and the Government accepted the higher term without consideration. Is this true? If so, it must be exposed and repudiated. [Applause.]

Do you think such a condition of affairs can be continued? Will there not come a time when the people of this country will rise and revolt against it? Has not that time come now? Is it not well for us to begin and consider exactly where we stand, that we may avoid the results which will surely follow? Do you not think that the hour of patriotism has arrived, when the interests of the Government and not the interests of speculators and individual contractors shall be considered?

This is an hour and a time when real patriotism should have a voice in this Chamber, not sham and mock pretense. Our plain and humble fellow-citizens are offering the devotion of their lives at the call of our country; shall we not make some sacrifices in their behalf?

Mr. Speaker, I have no animosity whatever against the pending measure. I do not object to the payment of the pension, if a pension is due in this case. I have no opposition to the claimant in the case. I have no doubt that it is a just and proper claim, and one that has been carefully considered and should be paid. I have advocated pensions in every speech that I have ever made on this floor. I have a large constituency composed of valiant Federal soldiers in my Western home.

Mr. STEELE. If the gentleman will allow an interruption, this is is not a pension case, but a bill for the relief of a deserter. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Indiana most appropriately calls my attention to the fact that this is a deserter's bill, and I answer that that is why I arose. I arose to speak of those deserters who are ever deserting the cause of the people in the hour when they should be protecting them. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I thank my friend from Indiana, who comes timely to my aid; and I now proceed to say to friends who may misunderstand my position that the constituency that I have the honor in part to represent, with my able colleague here [Mr. JONES of Washington], is a State in which there are more Federal soldiers, more veterans, in proportion to the population, perchance, than in any other State in the Union.

I have advocated their pensions whenever under the law in justice they should have them. I have never found it agreeable to make opposition to an honest claim, but I think it is high time, and possibly not inappropriate, that where bills are brought in promiscuously for the removal of charges of desertion we should investigate these things and see whether these men are the kind of men who are entitled to exist upon the nation's generosity and receive its tribute or whether they might not be standing in the way of those men who have never had the charge of desertion made against them and who are more entitled to the nation's favors.

Is it wise, my distinguished friends, with the condition of the Treasury becoming more and more in a state of deficit, when you are taxing the people and doubling their burden, when you are putting interest into the hand of the bondholder and fortunes into the hands of the contractor, while you are allowing the nation to be pillaged on the one side and disgraced on the other, that you should forget in an hour like this the patriotism of such eminent commanders as those you have on the sea, whose glorious cause no man has risen here to praise or applaud? One word of encouragement or cheer may mean much in a desperate conflict.

Why not, I pray you, stop and reflect when they shall be looked after, when shall they be prepared for? If you pay out all the money you have in the Treasury now wrongfully to contractors, jobbers, and bondholders, are you not prohibiting and preventing those who may come hereafter from receiving just and proper allowance from a generous and grateful nation?

Mr. Speaker, I have risen to do that which I felt was my duty, and that is to announce to this House that so far as I am concerned, within such humble capacity as I shall be able to command, I do not propose being wooed under the cry of "patriotism" to the support and consummation of those things which my friend from Illinois, the distinguished Nestor of the House, the Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON of Illinois, has aptly termed an "iniquitous and corrupt thing," whenever such shall arise.

It may not be that any of the particular things which have passed this House could accurately be so charged with this particular epithet; but that we have sat here silently too long and permitted the contract jobber, with his band of despoilers, to go through the avenues of this House crying "patriotism" to cover his mean purposes, none can deny.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I should be really obliged to the gentleman if he will tell the House what he is talking about. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I did not hear the gentleman. What was the question? I am informed by gentlemen around me that the gentleman asked me to tell the House what I am talking about. Sir, I might assume the burden of explaining to some of the members, but there are some men in the House who heretofore have betrayed such singular density that I would not undertake the stupendous obligation of explaining anything to. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Really, speaking in more detail to my friend from Massachusetts, I was particularly talking about that class of men who preach the doctrine of justice and always vote with the persecutors. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Really, I was speaking of that class of men who prate of great virtue and protest much in behalf of their constituencies, but ever make it pertinent to remain within the party line, lest they should be refused some grace of desired recognition from the Speaker. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I am seriously speaking of that set of gentlemen who, in an hour like this, might really develop as true patriots, not as false ones. It was for that occasion I arose.

Having, as far as I am concerned, expressed to my satisfaction to this distinguished House my protest against the constant wrongs which have been done in the name of patriotism, I insist that even now we investigate to ascertain whether this gentleman who seeks to have the charge of desertion removed from him in order that he may be put upon the generous rolls of the Government is entitled to such. If he is, we shall, under the true impulse of a real patriotism, come to his rescue; but if he is not, I insist that we shall, as against every other crime, every other element of corruption, every other initiation of jobbery that shall come here during these fat times of war, when every man who would rob the Treasury shall find his appropriate hour to do it—that we shall stand against it, and care little for the criticism that always criticises the right when it should be approved, and always protects the wrong when it should be condemned. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington for some inscrutable reason has seen fit to embalm me in the honey of his intellectuality. [Laughter.] He asks above which party does patriotism rise in the House. It rises, Mr. Speaker, above both parties. As a war Democrat, I enlisted in the war for the Union, not because it was Democratic policy, not because it was Republican policy, but because the country was in danger, and I was due. [Great applause.]

I am due to-day, and I have made it known by my vote. I do not talk of the "meritoriousness" or "meretriciousness" of my action. The words are not synonymous. They are in no way allied to each other. And although I have not had a college education, as the gentleman has had, I do know enough to know not to use such words in the same sense. [Laughter.] I admire the gentleman from Washington. His raiment is exquisite [great laughter]; his hirsute adornments are magnificent [renewed laughter]; even the spats on his shoes are effulgent. [Great laughter.] They all bear a due relation to the brilliancy of his intellect [renewed laughter], and his intellectuality is beyond comparison.

I say that the true spirit of Democracy is patriotism, and a Democrat who sneers at patriotism does not deserve the name of Democrat. The gentleman voted, without talking, for the $50,000,000 appropriation. Why did he not think of "contractors" then? Was not the time to speak beforehand, and not afterwards? Why is it that he is already accusing men in high standing of corruption when the war has hardly begun?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. But they have. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Make your statements clear, produce your proof, and then slander your Government if you must. Do not do it under suspicion. [Great applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did believe, when I voted for the bill proposing to raise revenue to carry on this war, and the Democratic side of the House almost unanimously voted for war, that I was doing fully as patriotic a thing as the gentleman did when he voted for the $50,000,000, to be placed at the disposal of the President without conditions. I believed that if a Democratic Administration was forced to sell $300,000,000 in bonds to run the Government in time of peace, that a Republican Administration might be allowed to sell bonds enough to run the Government in time of war. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

This action was taken by a President who was indebted to the South for his nomination. You who came from the South, went into the Democratic national convention over five years ago, and rammed Grover Cleveland down the throats of the New York Democracy, with its whole delegation strenuously protesting against it. You are responsible for him, not we. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES. Do you say that we are responsible for Grover Cleveland?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I say so, knowing it to be so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman——

Mr. GAINES. There have been a great many sins charged against the South, but I have never before heard it said that Grover Cleveland came from the South.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It is true. I challenge the record. He was nominated and elected by the votes of the South, with his gold letter staring you in the face. You forced him down our throats against our unanimous protest. Deny it, if you dare. [Loud applause.] I say that I did believe and do believe if——

Mr. TALBERT. South Carolina did not vote for him.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I except South Carolina. She was sensible. She did not vote for him. She respected the delegation from New York.

I did believe that if it was necessary to sell bonds in time of war, we should sell them in sums of $25 and $50 to the mechanics and farmers and the honest producing people of the United States [applause], and not, as was done under the Cleveland Administration, sell them at private sale to a syndicate that within two months netted $8,000,000 for simply turning them over to outside parties. [Loud applause.]

There was no war then, and the safety of the nation was not imperiled. I believe, if we must have a loan, in a popular loan. I advocated a popular loan when the Cleveland Administration was planting the second issue among the syndicates. A popular loan will cement the patriotism of the people of the United States, and the people will never overflow with gall, as did the gentleman this afternoon, in aid of the enemy. I am on record as voting not only for the war, but as voting for supplies for the war, and with that record I am content, politics or no politics. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have not 1,000,000 six-syllable adjectives to shower on the House. Adjectives are adjectives, and votes are votes. I confine my speech to plain Anglo-Saxon. I am an Anglo-Saxon; I am an American; I am a Democrat. Patriotism itself is Democracy. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it was about as far from my motive as anything you can conceive to arouse the slightest feeling of animosity of any member of this House, and further still would it have been from my object to awaken such a magnificent storm of indignation as has been displayed in the heroic face of the stalwart Democrat from New York. I speak as with the kindest feelings toward him. His memorable service in this House has been a contribution to this nation. He has even taken occasion to make some reference to some disparity of situation which he claims may have existed between us in the past as to advantage of education. He honors me in the expression that I possess that which is not enjoyed by himself.

Let him rest well assured that I claim no such, and if there was ever any attainment which God has placed to my service, however humble or great, if it could be divorced and taken from me, I would exchange them all for the splendid character and constant devotion to humanity that we have all observed in the gentleman's past career. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, my remarks have not referred to the gentleman's personal course. I made reference not to the gentleman's personal conduct throughout the avenues of his life. It did not engage my attention and it was not my object to make any reference whatever to that; but it was my purpose—and I am glad I have made that plain to him—to protest in the name of the real Democracy against that set of distinguished but misguided intellects which rise in the hour when our opponents demand them and ask for their indorsement of meretricious measures, and, under the cry of patriotism, become deluded by their own enthusiasm and commit that which, to the nation, is a crime. [Applause.]

It was to protest against that feeling on the part of some of my Democratic friends, however honest they may be, that feeling which leads them to discharge a duty to which they are summoned by the enemy of the country, to cease the senseless cry of "their country above party," and in the meantime bring their country to a level with the Republican party in the hour of their demand.

My friend from New York, for such I trust he may ever be, has been greatly applauded by my honorable friends on the other side for the utterances which came from him, in which he speaks of the service he has done in voting for these bonds. I remind my friend that he led a gallant phalanx from the East in support of the placing of a mortgage upon the poor of the country, and received some generous applause from my friends on the other side, but I want to add a single warning, that he must "beware of the Greeks bearing gifts." [Applause.]

My friends on the other side will applaud any apparent schism on this side of the House whenever it appears, also approve any course that will procure the aid of my Democratic friends, that they may say to the country at large that this measure or that measure was nonpartisan. I invite the attention of my distinguished friend to one thing. If my honorable Republican friends claim this one billion created debt was nonpartisan, if, sirs, it was your desire to make it so, in order to justify the assertions of the gentleman from New York, why did they, knowing that 6,500,000 voters of the country had expressed their desires on this question of silver and gold—and yet when a humble member on the floor on this side of the House offered an amendment that silver should be used to give some little countenance to the views of the 6,500,000 voters, what was done? It was voted down unanimously by a strict party vote, every opportunity being given to the other side to demonstrate that it was a nonpartisan measure, and they refused it, treating each one in turn contemptuously.

My friend says that "I slander the Government's officers." I, sir, have not assumed to mention any officers. I have not slandered any officer or attempted to do so. All I have done on this floor was to speak the truth about those gentlemen as it has appeared in the public record.

I have said that which you all do know, gentlemen—that the coal trust's agents were colleaguing with the enemy of this country; that these "business patriots" in the sight of the nation, deliberately loaded a vessel with coal to take to the Spanish fleet to use against our homes and countrymen, and this while an American vessel stood at its door knocking for coal; and when Commodore Schley forced recognition to his demand these patriots charged an American ship in an American port a dollar more on a ton than they did for the coal to these Spanish enemies. Had I been the Attorney-General of the United States I would have apprehended them as traitors for violating the laws of their country against giving aid or comfort to the enemy. I would have sent them to the companionship of Benedict Arnold. Both sold their country for gold. And yet a member on this side of the House who sought to denounce them, a member who seeks to express his honest convictions against a bill mortgaging the resources and strength of the country to vultures, is held up to the nation as a demagogue and disloyal to the country's welfare.

When has it come to be a familiar truth that in order to be a Democrat a man must either rise above or sink beneath his party? I say that with the true Democrat there can be no such cry as "My country before my party." With him the cry must be, "My country and my party; for without my party I would not have had my country." [Applause.] This alone can be the real position of the true party man, wherever he is, if he be a true Democrat, measured by the standard of a rejuvenated Democracy.

Mr. Speaker, one word to my distinguished friends on the other side, and then I am done. I speak to them without personal feeling and with a sentiment of the highest personal regard—I speak confidentially and frankly—when I say it is not my purpose in any wise to demonstrate that either party of this House bore any enmity or ill feeling to those who now have charge of Government affairs. My friend on the other side has asked why, when I voted for the $50,000,000 appropriation, I did not then cry out against these contractors. Sir, there has never been an hour or a moment when I have occupied the floor but that every expression from my lips, if construed correctly, must have been construed as a protest against the whole army of these omnivorous culprits who never lose a chance of fattening upon their country.

These who beat down the defenseless to serve some guilty cause—I could not then anticipate that these men, under the cry of "patriotism," would seize the opportunity to impose upon the confidence of those who trusted them. It was when I obtained information through the public press, through the channels of the party papers of the present Administration, and from the very voices of the men in command of this Government, that I seized upon the very first moment permitted under the rules to raise my protest, which, if not popular in this honorable branch of the Government, will be recognized and approved for the honesty of its intent by those who are most interested because they are the most oppressed.

I rise here to denounce, if it must be, any measure, whether advocated by men in control of our Government or by men who are without, that looks to the further thraldom and enslavement of those who should be rescued in an hour like this; whose patriotism should be encouraged if we hope that they shall go to the front to tender their lives for a nation which should be their guardian and protector, not their oppressor and destroyer.

This is the reason of my protest. It is a protest I shall ever make. And when my friend speaks about these bonds being popular, when he says that the poor people will be benefited by them, I ask, how will they obtain them? Will they not have to buy these bonds? Will not that much money be taken out of their humble coffers? And where will they get the money to make the purchase? The insincerity of your cry of nonpartisanship, which has been demonstrated in connection with the silver question, is demonstrated still further by the distinguished gentleman from Maine, who in presenting this bill said it was the intention to have these bonds on sale at the post-offices. Where in the bill as now a law is there a line or a letter containing any such declaration?

If such an announcement was sincere and was to be executed, what object was there in refusing to put such a provision into the law? Plainly, I say to my friend from New York, the object was that by means of such an announcement made here the confiding member of this House might give the measure his indorsement, and then when the bill had passed that there might be allowed to the Secretary of the Treasury the exercise of an elastic discretion, so that he may, if he chooses, find it agreeable to allow all these bonds to be taken in one lot by those faithful, friendly cohorts—whose office and headquarters happen to be in the locality where, if public accounts be true, the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury called for counsel and guidance before he framed this measure for the issue of $500,000,000 of bonds—the bankers of New York.

This is why I have no confidence in the professions of my distinguished friends in charge of the Government that it is their desire or intent to do anything to alleviate the condition of the common masses of this country. By their record I condemn them. Upon that they must stand or fall, for before the nation all their protestations of honesty and sincerity, of patriotism and nonpartisanship have been given the lie from out of their own mouths.

Gentlemen, do not forget the common people. They are not always deluded. There is a time when their patience ceases, when a just retribution comes even to those most favored by high position. Such retribution must come to those who, assuming the garb of genuine Republicanism, undertake to vilify and anathematize true patriots, such as are found on both sides of the House, such as is personified in the poor, and by such declamation undertake to put through here measures which only a despot or a tyrant would impose upon a suffering and patient people in an hour like this. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I hope we shall now do something toward disposing of this matter of "unfinished business."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not insist upon that for a few moments, as I would like to have a chance to give my views upon this question. [Laughter and cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. Speaker, when the civil war closed there was a man by the name of James Pankey, who had been a captain in old Frank Wolford's First Kentucky Union Cavalry, one of the very best fighting regiments that ever wore a Federal uniform. He got back home safely after the struggle was over and had everything that a man needs to have in life. He was a rich and an exceedingly crusty man. But he ran at one time for the position of justice of the peace. He had no possible use for the office, being rich, and, on account of his gruff manners, was not fit to run. There was some curiosity to know why he sought such a place.

A friend took him out one day and asked him the question point blank: "Captain, what on earth do you want this thing for?" He said: "By the Lord Harry, sir, I want an opportunity to express my opinions." [Laughter.] Now, I am in Pankey's fix; I want an opportunity to express my opinion. [Laughter and applause.] And before proceeding let me make one single personal remark: There is not a man on the floor of the House for whom I have a more tender personal affection than I have for the gentleman from New York, Mr. AMOS J. CUMMINGS——

Mr. CUMMINGS. And the feeling is reciprocated.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (continuing). And he knows it, and I know that it is reciprocated. But I say, in perfect respect for him and in the presence of all of these witnesses, that he has made the most outrageous speech on the floor of the House to-day that ever, in my judgment, was delivered in this body. [Laughter and applause.]

I do not care anything about his assault on the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS]. That is not "my pie." [Laughter.] I have no hand in it. [Laughter.] But when he commits the "unpardonable sin" of putting into this discussion the statement that a Democratic Administration issued $300,000,000 of bonds in a time of peace I deny his right to be the spokesman for my party, at least on that subject, for the Administration which did that foolish and wicked thing was not Democratic, and has been long since repudiated by every true Democrat between the two oceans.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will state for the gentleman's benefit that the delegation from Missouri voted unanimously to nominate Grover Cleveland in Chicago, although they had no instructions. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GAINES. Yes, they did; but the Missourians supposed, and they had a right to suppose, that he would stand by the party platform.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, there has been no Democratic Administration in this country for a great many years—not since the 4th of March, 1861.

If it were not for my personal affection for the gentleman from New York, I would inaugurate a movement among the Democrats in this and the other end of the Capitol to read out of the Democratic party by name every man on this floor who voted for the bond bill the other day. [Applause on the Democratic side.] To issue bonds when there is no earthly necessity for it is an un-Democratic performance. Genuine Democrts do not propose that such action shall be charged to them.

In the language of a celebrated man on a celebrated occasion here, we want to know "where we are at." The time has come for us to ascertain who is who. He that is not for us is against us.

Grover Cleveland never was a Democrat in the true sense of the word, and I can prove that, Mr. Speaker, by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] himself. In August, 1893, I heard him say in the cloakroom, "Blame his old soul, he never was a Democrat." Only he used a stronger and more classic word than "blame." There are but two men in all the hoary registers of time that Cleveland's name ought to be associated with—Judas Iscariot and Benedict Arnold. Shades of Arnold, forgive the profanation!

He at least did not hire a substitute to do his fighting. The blood which he shed at the storming of Quebec and on the heights of Saratoga was American blood. The shattered leg which was buried in his grave of obloquy was an American leg, broken by British bullets in the holy cause of liberty.

Arnold was at one time both a hero and a patriot. He fell headlong from his high estate to everlasting infamy.

Upon reflection, I think really I ought to beg the pardon of Judas Iscariot, because after his treason he did have the grace to go out and hang himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. Was not Judas Iscariot the original silver man?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; so far as I know, a Republican was the original silver man. The first free-silver speech ever made in the American Congress was made by WILLIAM B. ALLISON, now a Senator from Iowa, a man you worship. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, some of the rest of you Republicans ask some questions, and get a lick on the solar plexus. [Laughter.] The Missourians did vote for Grover Cleveland in Chicago.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Was he not a Democrat then?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No. We thought he was; but we were sadly mistaken. He stole the livery of Heaven to serve the Devil in. He played a colossal bunco game on the Democratic party.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why did you vote for him, then?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The reason we nominated him at Chicago was because we Southern and Western Democrats followed the disastrous example of Sut. Lovengood's daddy and all turned fools at once. We did not want him then; that fallen archangel, John G. Carlisle was our first choice; but we thought Cleveland was the only Democrat that could be elected, when the truth is, Mr. Speaker, that in 1892 any Democrat who had never been in the penitentiary could have been elected President of the United States if he had been nominated. That was a Democratic year.

I will tell you why we nominated him. We nominated him because he sent that free trade December message to Congress in 1887. And here, at the end of a losing fight on the tariff question, I run up the defiant banner of free trade, that honest men may rally around it in the days to come. We will win at last. Truth always conquers in the end. We thought that Cleveland was honestly a free trader. Along in August, 1894, I walked down the aisle over on the Republican side. A distinguished Republican, for whose genius I have profound admiration, said to me "How are you coming on in getting offices from Cleveland?" I said, "I am having no astonishing success." He said, "It does not make any difference. The only President I could ever get one from was Arthur." "But," I said, "I want to tell you, notwithstanding he has betrayed us on the money question, if it be true that Cleveland sent that December message to Congress under the circumstances that I heard he did, he deserves to rank as a great statesman and patriot." He inquired, "What did you hear?" I said, "Why, I heard he wrote that message, and then that Senator GORMAN and all the rest of the time-servers went to him and said, 'Mr. President, you leave that message alone and you are sure to be reelected; but send that to Congress and it jeopardizes your chances, and Cleveland said, 'The Presidency be damned. The thing is right. The people are suffering and they ought to have relief.' I will send the message and let the consequences take care of themselves.'"

This distinguished Republican to whom I was talking said: "My friend, that is all a fairy tale. There is not a syllable of truth in it." I asked, "What is the truth?" He replied: "I will tell you. By that battle-flag idiocy of his, and by sitting up all night writing vetoes of $8-pension bills, Grover Cleveland had alienated the affections of Northern Democrats, and he sent that message to Congress as a cold, demagogical bid to rope in the Southern Democrats for the nomination in 1888;" and, before God, I believe the Republican was telling me the truth, although they rarely tell it. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, we voted for Cleveland on that ground. I am afraid we shall never get forgiveness for it. His conduct on the financial question is not the main charge that I bring against Cleveland bad and un-Democratic as it was We took him, knowing that he was against silver, but we believed that as an honest man—because then we believed he was honest—if he accepted the nomination on that platform, knowing the overwhelming sentiment in the Democratic party in favor of silver, he would subordinate his private opinion to the general Democratic opinion and carry out what we wanted.

That's what he should have done. Otherwise he ought to have declined the nomination. Men are not forced to be President. They are not compelled to hold office. At least I have not found it so in Missouri. But the main charge that I bring against him—and I have always been a free trader—is this, that he not only undid us on the money question and used the patronage of his great office ruthlessly and corruptly to get the Sherman law repealed, because when we first met here in conference we had a majority of this House against that repeal, but when we came to vote on it we could only muster a paltry 101 votes—the worst charge that will be laid at his door in the day of judgment is that he betrayed a great party on the tariff question.

Yes. Grover Cleveland by his unfaithfulness did the cause of Free Trade more harm than all the McKinleys and Dingleys could do in one hundred years. He could not kill it. Nobody can do that; but he did set it back for perhaps a generation.

The tariff barons ought to build a monument to his odoriferous memory.

And, my friend from New York, I want to say this, that the four worst years that the Democratic party ever saw were the four years that Grover Cleveland lived in your city, between his first and his second terms. It is an old saying that evil communications corrupt good morals, and so they did to him. He never lifted his finger to help us pass a tariff bill.

I believe now, and I shall always believe, that on the day when he stood in the sleet and snow and rain, the worst day I ever saw (and I have been caught in a Kansas blizzard), the day when he was sworn in for his second term, he held it in his pudgy fist to keep the Democratic party in power in this country for a quarter of a century, and all that he had to do to work that beneficent result was to do what he had solemnly promised to do by word of mouth, by speech, in writing, in every way in which a man can be committed to do a thing—and that was to cut the robber tariff to a purely revenue basis. That was the issue on which we won the sweeping victory of 1892—a victory the fruits of which turned to apples of Sodom on our lips, through the action as well as the nonaction of Grover Cleveland. It is sickening and pitiful to think of what is and then of what might have been had we elected a real Democrat in 1892.

Mr. President, no party in the entire history of the human race such ever made a long, terrific, courageous and splendid fight, confronted with so many difficulties, as the Democratic party did from the close of the war to the close of the polls in 1892. Then we came into possession of all the branches of the National Government, or we thought we did. We then deemed the 4th of March, 1893, a red letter day in our calendar. Really it was the most calamitous day we ever saw. We had declared on a thousand stumps that the Morrill bill was a monstrosity and that the McKinley tariff bill was the worst bill ever put upon the statute books; and it was until my distinguished friend from Maine got his bill put there last year. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

What ought he to have done? He held in his hands the fortunes of the Democratic party—a sacred trust. He ought to have called us together on the 15th of March, 1893. I honor Mr. McKinley for doing that. Then we would have passed a good tariff bill. We never did pass one. Then we would have had fifteen months to try to experiment with the thing before the election. Any general tariff bill demoralizes business temporarily. If we were right, the people would have recognized it and rewarded us; if we were wrong, we did not deserve to carry the elections. But here we were, fifteen months after the election, never having changed one syllable of the McKinley bill; and when we did change it, we only cut it down 10 per cent. I never hear the Republicans talk about the Wilson bill being a free-trade measure that I do not recall the words of Sir John Falstaff:

> Lord, Lord, how this world is given to lying!

[Laughter.]

Free trade! Carrying a charge of tariff tax of 40 per cent on 4,000 articles of every day consumption! Think of that!

Now, another matter I want to say a few words about to you gentlemen over there, and they are the words of truth and soberness. You vaunt yourselves as great patriots! You insinuate that you are greater patriots than we are! You intimate that the Democratic party has never done anything for the country! You know that the greatest Democrat that ever lived added the Louisiana purchase to the Union—the most remarkable transaction in real estate that was ever proposed on this earth since the devil took the Saviour up to the top of a high mountain and offered Him dominion of the world if He would fall down and worship him. [Laughter.]

A Democratic Administration took Texas into the Union. A Democratic Administration added Florida to the Union. And what have the Republicans added? Alaska! A country so cold that the polar bear has to wear an overcoat to keep from freezing. [Great laughter.]

You talk like you brought on this war. This is not a Republican war, but an American war. My Republican friends, we took you by the scruff of the neck and dragged you into it, and that will be the verdict of history. We started the fire among the people, and they heated you so hot that at last you had to go into it or go out of business.

Nobody but an idiot wants war merely for the sake of war. None save a craven will shrink from a war necessary to the dignity and honor of his country.

In my judgment, if either Cleveland or McKinley had recognized the belligerent rights of the Cubans at any time prior to the destruction of the Maine and the assassination of 266 of our brave sailors, there never would have been any war.

There never was a case in which the old saying, "A stitch in time saves nine," applied more thoroughly than to this. Nobody ever doubted our right—strictly according to international law—to recognize their belligerent rights without offense to anybody until we, or at least a part of us, began to doubt it ourselves.

But the war is upon us. It is a piece of supreme impudence for Republicans to try to make it appear that they are more patriotic than the Democrats. The claim is false, absolutely false.

The Morgan belligerency resolutions passed the Senate about a year ago, and here they slept the sleep that knows no waking.

Last summer the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] tried to call up those resolutions, and he was ruled out of order by the Speaker.

In January my colleague from Missouri, Judge DE ARMOND, offered an amendment to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill declaring "that a state of war exists between the people of Cuba and the Kingdom of Spain." After a long and bitter fight his amendment was defeated by a strict party vote.

Some time later my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] offered a resolution recognizing the independence of the Cuban Republic. This was ruled out of order as a privileged question by the Speaker, and upon an appeal from his decision the ruling was sustained by a strict party vote.

Then divers and sundry members offered all sorts of resolutions on the subject, varying from a proposition to send a minister plenipotentiary to represent us in Cuba to a flat declaration of war, all of which remained in a comatose condition in the Committee on Foreign Affairs until after the President sent in his second special message on the Cuban question, which contained an elaborate argument against recognizing Cuban independence, and which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

After sore travail, after much conferring of certain Republican members, after the appointment of a steering committee, the majority of that committee reported to this House certain resolutions very mildly and very vaguely suggesting the idea of independence, but not recognizing independence itself. The minority of the committee reported resolutions clear, unequivocal, bold, recognizing the independence of the Cuban Republic. The minority resolutions were defeated by a strict party vote.

I think the majority of the committee deserve praise for putting in the word "independent" at all in the face of the President's message.

The majority resolutions passed the House. Then ensued a contest between the House and the Senate, which has become historic, and which eventuated in compromise resolutions which resembled the resolutions reported by the minority of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs more than they resembled those reported by the majority of that committee. We have supported every measure necessary to the conduct of the war. We voted for the $50,000,000 emergency bill and for the two new regiments of artillery for coast defense.

At last came the war, which the American people demanded.

These are the facts of history. In the face of them it is a monumental exhibition of gall for the Republicans to insinuate that they are more patriotic than the Democrats.

Your ex post facto patriotism is amazing to see. It reminds me of a remark made by Stilson Hutchins, proprietor of the Washington Times, when he was editor of the St. Louis Times, which ran in this wise: "Col. James O. Broadhead may be a very great constitutional lawyer, but his ideas come to him by freight twenty-four hours after he needs them."

So with Republican patriotism; it was very much belated, but since you have become patriotic, even at the eleventh hour, we welcome you to the ranks of patriots on the principle, "Better late than never;" but I submit that it is with bad grace that you make your flings at us, and, what is more, you will not hoodwink the American people by such preposterous capers, for the all-sufficient reason that they are not idiots. Your record and our record are before the world. Democrats are proud of their record of patriotism. It is one to which our children and our children's children can look back to with ineffable pride through all the years that are to come.

Now, what about this revenue bill? You came here and proposed to saddle a bonded, interest-bearing debt of $600,000,000 on my children and yours.

We say we are willing to vote every dollar necessary to carry the war to a speedy and successful conclusion, but that a bonded debt is not necessary, and we offer to coin the $42,000,000 silver seigniorage now in the Treasury; to vote $150,000,000 in full legal-tender greenbacks, and to levy an income tax on all incomes above $2,000, which would raise $90,000,000 more annually without one dollar of interest. We offer you all the money the Government needs, but you rejected our propositions. We offer you a non-interest bearing currency. Nothing will do you but an interest-bearing debt. There we part company. We offer you abundant money to carry on the war; but you are bent on a debt carrying $18,000,000 annually.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] in reply to a remark of Mr. BLAND, quoted Abram S. Hewitt's saying about coining a vacuum. If you are going into the business of coining vacuums, you ought to begin with the vacuums inside the Republican heads in this House. You would never get through with it. [Laughter.] But here we have $42,000,000 of idle silver in our Treasury. Why do you not coin it? Why do you not? Are you so afraid of your masters that you do not dare to use your own?

I am not going to make a silver speech. I have not time enough. I never laid any great claim to practical piety, but I do believe, as firmly as any man that ever lieved, in an overruling Providence, and I believe that when God created this world He did nothing in vain, and when He gave us more gold and silver than to anybody else on the face of the earth He intended us to use it. And yet here we are, the strongest nation on the globe, with 75,000,000 people, with illimitable wealth, and we sit down pusillanimously, like a lot of idiots, and say that we are not going to coin our own silver until we get the consent of every little 8 by 10 kingdom in Europe, some of them not as big as the District of Columbia; and in doing that we are acting with just about as much sense and not one whit more than the man who would sit down on the banks of the Mississippi River and die of thirst, refusing to drink of its refreshing waters because the inhabitants of the African desert can not come and drink with him.

We offer you an income tax—the fairest and justest tax ever imposed. It is a monstrous proposition that the abnormal wealth of the country shall not bear its just proportions of the public burdens. We give you fair warning that we will never rest till we get an income tax.

You Republicans fight it tooth and nail. You have suddenly conceived a pathetic affection and wonderful reverence for the Supreme Court. You seem to regard it now as a sacred institution, not even to be criticised by anybody without sin.

When did you change your mind so suddenly? Abraham Lincoln was not only a wise man, but a very gentle one. He denounced the Dred Scott decision. That is not all of it. I did not help make the greenbacks; I was too young. You Republicans made them. Then, when that case came up, the constitutionality of it, five judges decided the legal-tender act unconstitutional and three held it to be constitutional. That would never do in the world for the Republican party to have such a decision stand. What happened? One of the five judges resigned to go to practicing law, and that only left four.

If President Grant appointed a man in his place in favor of the legal tenders, that made it four and four, and the decision would stand. Congress went to work and passed a law reorganizing the Supreme Court of the United States, increasing the number of judges to nine, and General Grant appointed Justice Strong and "Aliunde" Joe Bradley, of New Jersey, and they reversed the decision. You not only reorganized the court, but you packed it. And yet we are denounced as anarchists because you say that we want to reorganize the Supreme Court.

Now, if you can reorganize it once, why can not you do it again? If you packed it once, why can not you do it again? I want to tell you all I have got to say about greenbacks, and will do it in very few words. If they were good enough money to pay men during the civil war to leave their wives and homes and little children and risk their lives on a thousand battlefields in defense of their country, they are good enough money to pay to the gentlemen who recline in the shade of Wall street and make their living by cutting gold coupons off of coin bonds. [Laughter and applause.]

Let me refer to one thing that was said over yonder the other night—by some gentleman from Connecticut, I believe. He said that if the Government should now go into issuing greenbacks, they would depreciate as they did during the civil war. I tell you I believe a man who would say a thing like that either has softening of the brain or treason in his cardiac region.

What made the greenbacks depreciate? I will tell you. Because there was danger that this Government would be broken up, and they depreciated just in proportion as that danger grew imminent. The happiest day that the goldbugs saw during the civil war was when a man could climb up to the Dome of the Capitol and see the glint of old Jubal Early's bayonets down in Virginia. Why, sir, there was not a rebel anywhere on earth during the war who prayed for victory for Lee as the goldbugs prayed for it. Why? If Lee gained a victory, gold went up, and they made a fortune.

If Grant gained a victory, gold went down, and they lost a fortune. And if there is any such thing as gambling in Spanish stocks—I do not know whether there is or not—those who are interested in that investment are now in sackcloth and ashes because brave Commodore Dewey has set the Stars and Stripes floating victoriously in Asiatic waters.

You need not have any apprehension about our getting in a hole about the bond business. The people of the United States do not want bonds; they do not propose to have them; they do not want them any more than they want national banks, and you were never able to establish a national bank except as an aid to war and to pay the war debt after you got through with a war.

Now, if you want to know what we are going to do, if it will be any pleasure, I will tell you; and in doing so, I believe I am speaking for the Democratic party of this country. One consolation about this whole business is that time fights for us. When the next census is taken, which is only two years off, we will gain 30 members in this House and 30 votes in the electoral college west of the Mississippi River.

I will tell you what we are going to do, and it is a short-meter story. We will buy no more Presidential pigs in polky. Next time we will know what we are getting. We intend to get together in 1900 and not only reaffirm the Chicago platform, but readopt it word for word, without abating one jot or one tittle, and place upon it our brilliant and well-beloved leader, William J. Bryan, and elect him [applause on the Democratic side], thereby ushering in the twentieth century, as we did the nineteenth century, with a Democratic administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am about through with this business. I said if either party had a right to claim this war as its own, it is the Democratic party. I glory in it, and in that I include the Pops and Free Silverites, because on this war question we are all one substantially. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I rejoice in what has already happened in this war, and I make this prediction now—not abusing or criticising anybody—that if the Administration will take the reins off of Commodore Sampson in Cuban waters and let him have free swing as Commodore Dewey had, in ten days from now the Stars and Stripes will be waving over every foot of the Island of Cuba and peace will be restored. Mr. Speaker, the first battle has been fought. It added a new glory to American arms. I do not know whether Commodore Dewey is a Democrat or a Republican or a Populist, and I do not care. He is an American.

Mr. CUMMINGS. He was born in Vermont.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Some of the best Democrats that ever lived are born in Vermont. Democrats that can march up to the polls in season and out of season, fodder or no fodder, without the hope of any reward except the approval of their consciences, and vote the Democratic ticket are good Democrats. [Laughter.]

Now, I want to read you a paragraph as a part of my remarks, some of the best English I have ever seen, from the New York Journal, and what it says about that fight. It stirs the heart like strains of martial music. It will make you Republicans patriotic. You come here with the words of patriotism on your lips, but with sordid greed in your hearts, taking advantage of the extremities of the Government, and try to fasten on the country six hundred millions of bonded debt which our children will not live long enough to pay.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask my friend if he does not think it would be a great calamity for his speech to be published in Madrid, and to show that this House is divided?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No, sir; it will have the best effect on the Spaniards of anything that ever got to them, if they will publish this speech over there. [Laughter.]

What I say is in a line with what Dewey did. He has won a place in history with Paul Jones, Perry, Farragut, and Lord Nelson.

Now I want to read you this from the New York Journal, and then I am going to quit—not because I am through:

The news of the surrender is not yet as explicit as that of the great naval combat that preceded it.

The capitulation is to be a matter of a few words. The battle was full of heroic deeds.

London stands amazed at the intrepidity of the Americans, and everywhere are heard such expressions as—

"They're the fighting stuff!"

"Give us an alliance with the Americans, and we'll defy the world!"

"Those chaps are of our blood, you know!"

"That's the way! Sit tight and give it 'em!"

It was supposed that the mines at the mouth of Manila Bay would deter Admiral Dewey. At most it was expected that he would stand off and on, establishing a "peaceful blockade," such as Admiral Sampson has fiddled with off Havana.

But here is the translation of part of a long dispatch which reached the Foreign Office in cipher, and which, though not intended for publication, was good-naturedly given out by an official whose pro-American sympathies have caused his comrades to call him "The Yankee Secretary." The dispatch ran:

"In the black of night Capt. Charles Gridley, of the Olympia, which was leading the American squadron, reported to Rear-Admiral Dewey:

"'We are now approaching the entrance to Manila Bay.'

"'Steam ahead!' came the admiral's response. 'Signal the fleet to follow!'

"'We are now coming to the portion of the entrance supposed to have been mined,' was the captain's next report.

"'Steam ahead!' was the admiral's order.

There was a light from the land and the boom of a great gun. From the little cruiser Raleigh came the signals:

"The batteries of Cavite have opened fire!"

"Steam ahead! Follow me!" flashed back the Admiral.

"A shot from Rulocabilla just fell a hundred yards ahead," reported Commander Asa Walker, of the Concord, which was astern and to the windward of the Baltimore.

"Save your powder!" ordered Admiral Dewey in reply.

Just in the peek of the dawn the Spanish fleet was discovered under the bastioned banks of Cavite.

"Remember the Maine!" flamed the message from the Olympia.

As the subtropic dawn broke suddenly, the same dread battle slogan of revenge flickered and fluttered from the flagship's yard above the fighting top.

The Spaniards began firing before the morning fairly broke. In fact, they had been booming and sputtering ever since the first random gun had announced the approach of the American squadron.

Much of their fire was wasted. Admiral Dewey paid no attention to the shots which fell short of him, but arranging his line of battle, with the Olympia and Baltimore in the van, made straight for the Spanish fleet.

Cavite, with its batteries and arsenal, the island forts of Rulocabilla and Corregidor, and the ancient guns on the walls about the old town of Manila, were by this time in full thunder. But the Americans came on, with their grim signal flying, and the band playing "The Star-Spangled Banner," "Dixie," and something which sounded to English ears very like "God Save the Queen."

[Applause.]

Ah, Mr. Speaker, Democrats do not shrink from calling this a Democratic war; and I thank God that we have had the nerve, the courage, the patriotism, the sagacity to drive you gentlemen on the other side of the House into a patriotic position before this country and before the world. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that after the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] had paid his respects to me, and I had received him with honor at least, that I should be spared any further annoyance. Yet it seems I was mistaken.

I appreciate, sir, all the kind expressions that have been made concerning me by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. I am sure that I never would go among the Democrats of the House urging them to drive him from the party because in the absence of caucus obligations he had voted in accordance with his honest convictions. I am on record as voting a revenue for the war; he is not. With that vote I am content.

Mr. Speaker, in listening to my friend's statement as to how Missouri came to be wrung into the support of Grover Cleveland and as to how my friend came to be taken into camp, I have been reminded of a story. Eph Horn was one of the finest negro minstrels that this country ever produced. Indeed, Eph, like my friend from Missouri, was greater as an end man than my friend from Washington would have been as a middle man or an interlocutor. [Laughter.]

Eph Horn went with Dan Bryant's minstrels up to Syracuse to play an engagement. Eph loved to play faro. On the first night, after the performance, he walked up the street, found a suspicious-looking stairway, and saw a cubby-hole in the door at the upper landing. He went up stairs, bought a stack of chips, and lost $200. On the next day he was introduced to a gentleman of Syracuse, who invited him to a game of poker. He replied that he preferred to play faro, and wanted to know whether there was not some square place in Syracuse where a man could play faro.

"Yes," replied the man from Syracuse, "there is one several blocks away."

"Well," said Eph, "how is this one on the next block?"

"Oh," was the answer, "that is the worst skin game in the city."

"What is the name of the proprietor?" asked Eph Horn.

"Thompson," was the reply.

Eph went out and walked down to Thompson's establishment. He entered the room and inquired for Thompson. Thompson came up to him and said:

"What do you want, sir?"

"How much do you pay your cappers for this game?" asked Mr. Horn.

"Oh," replied Thompson, "I give them 50 per cent."

"All right," said Eph, "you owe me $100. I roped myself into this game yesterday."

My friend from Missouri seems to be in a similar situation. He seems to have roped himself into the Cleveland game, and it is now in order for him to claim his percentage. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to indulge in any discussion which will indicate to the Democracy of this country that any difference of opinion exists between the members of that party upon the floor of this House, but inasmuch as the charge of party disloyalty has been made against the six Democrats who voted for the war-revenue measure in its final passage, as one of these six I intend to occupy the floor for a short while, not to apologize to the gentleman from Missouri who makes the charge for the stand that I have taken, but to reiterate my conviction of the wisdom and soundness of the position that I took and to add that I would vote the same way to-day with renewed ardor.

I recognize the fact that there is a higher duty than the one we owe our party, and that is the duty we owe to our country. When the war-revenue measure was before this body last week, I was one of the strongest advocates on this side of the Chamber for the income-tax provision.

I said then, and I say now, that it is not fair to expect the brawn and muscle of this country to go to the front and fight its battles for the paltry sum of $13 a month, while the wealthy and enterprising stock broker stays at home and reaps the harvest and refuses to pay his proportionate share of the cost of the war. When the measure came to a vote on Friday last, the income-tax measure was proposed as an amendment to the bill as it now stands, and it received the vote of every Democrat.

The proposition was to recommit the bill to the committee with instructions to add the income-tax section, and on that vote the Republican party practically as a unit voted against, while the Democrats voted solidly for it. The question then came upon the final passage of the bill.

Party policy and party expediency then seemed to me to give way to patriotism and love of country. Every Democrat had done his duty in supporting the income-tax amendment, the only amendment that had been agreed upon as a party measure. It was proposed by the Democratic leader of this body, the honorable gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], the roll was called, and the people of the country had an opportunity to see the respective positions of both parties.

On the final passage of the bill the vote was to be recorded all over the world. The Spanish press had circulated reports that the nation was divided and that great difficulty was being had in the different States in the raising of regiments, and it was said that our naval and army forces were poorly equipped; and my judgment was that after vindicating our party's position before the country, on the final call we should show a united front to the world. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Missouri says that the provisions of the bill were not Democratic, and that therefore no Democrat could consistently vote for them. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether the appropriation for $50,000,000 which passed this body a few months ago, and which gave to the Administration the absolute power to spend that money not only in this country but in all parts of the world, was a Democratic measure, and if it would be judged in peaceful times to be a wise measure to pass; and yet did not the gentleman from Missouri vote for it?

Was that a Democratic measure which passed this House a few weeks ago repealing the statutes relating to the condemnation of land for fortifications; and yet did not this measure receive the vote of the gentleman from Missouri? Was that a Democratic measure which passed the House only a few days ago repealing the statutes as far as the purchasing of supplies in the War Department is concerned and giving absolute authority without asking for bids for the spending of millions of dollars by the Secretary of War; and yet did not the gentleman from Missouri vote for it?

Everyone on the floor of the House—nay, I would say in the United States—gloried in the fact that in all these measures, which never would have received the slightest consideration were it not for the fact that a grave danger threatened the country, party lines were obliterated and that Democrat, Republican, and Populist placed country above party and gave unanimous consideration to these measures.

Every day we read in the daily papers what is transpiring in every town and city in the United States at the departure of troops to the scene of trouble. Mothers and wives and children are bidding a fond and sad adieu to their sons and husbands and fathers, who, with gun upon their shoulders, march to the front to defend the honor of our flag.

Democrats and Republicans and Populists stand shoulder to shoulder in solid rank and are willing to give their lifeblood if necessary in defense of this Union. They have faithfully and speedily answered to the President's call for troops, and they look anxiously to the Administration and to Congress to provide the funds so that they may be able and in every way fitted to fight for their country's honor in time of peril.

I for one will not by my vote give them the slightest reason to suppose that any obstacle will be laid in the Administration's path or that any difference of opinion exists as to the purpose of Congress to appropriate all the funds necessary for the proper conduct of the war.

I am anxious that they shall go to the front buoyed on with the thought and hope that Congress and the Administration are one in providing every possible means to faithfully and energetically prosecute the struggle to an early and successful termination. [Applause.]

I desire to say further that I do not regard the gentleman's threat to turn the six Democrats out of the party with any degree of apprehension. I was sent by the people of my district to do my own thinking and to vote as my conscience dictated for the best interests of the Government, and I have always done so, and will continue to do so whether it pleases the gentleman from Missouri or not.

The Democratic party's history is too well interwoven with the prosperity and growth of this country to have it said that any member could be disloyal to it who voted for measures that ceased to be partisan just as soon as they promoted the national welfare in time of peril.

If the gentleman wishes, I will gladly welcome him on the hustings next fall in my district to argue with the voters as to whether my action was in accordance with their desires. I have no fear for the result. The Commonwealth which it is my privilege to represent in part upon the floor of this House has a glorious history.

In every struggle in which this country has been engaged her sons have taken a leading part and their loyalty has been testified to on the floors of Congress and on the field of battle.

I am willing to allow my position on the final vote to be adjudged by them, and I am confident that when the verdict is pronounced it will be found that I have acted in accordance with the sentiments and conscience of the people whom I am sent here to represent. [Loud applause.]

In conclusion, let me say that my conception of the duty of Democrats is different from that of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri. I have always felt that I served my party best when I served my country best, and I am willing to take that position before the people of my State.

The country is now in the midst of a grave and serious crisis. We have been sent here by the people to legislate for them, and our every act must be guided by sentiments of the purest patriotism rather than by any endeavor to promote a partisan end.

This is my idea, and all my actions from now until the war is over will be guided by a desire to promote the successful and speedy termination of the struggle that we have now engaged in, and upon the happy solution of which the heart of every true American is intensely set. [Applause.]

Mr. McALEER. Mr. Speaker, I am a Democrat, and I inherit my Democracy; and I desire to say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that I voted for "the loan bill," and there is no vote that I ever gave in this House of which I am prouder. [Applause.] And when the gentleman rises in his place on this floor and tells us that his Democracy and the Democracy of the Populists are the same, I say to him that I do not take my Democracy from any man who declares that to be Democracy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I am not one of the men who clamored for war. Until recently I believed that war could be averted, and averted with honor; but when the time came and war was inevitable, I believed it to be my duty to do everything in my power to strengthen the hands of this Government and bring this war to a successful close. [Applause.] When gentlemen say that this loan bill carrying so much money should not be made, that an income tax ought to be incorporated, I tell them that were we to wait and sit supinely in our places until that provision could be made, we should be derelict in our duty.

No, Mr. Speaker, I say that it is our duty in such times to give just and liberal appropriations for that purpose, and we should not permit the Republican party to take the position that it is the patriotic party, because I contend that the Democratic party has been ever patriotic, that it is patriotic to-day, and will permit no man nor party to be more patriotic. [Applause.]

[Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BRUMM. Now, Mr. Speaker, that the bill has been thoroughly discussed, I hope we shall have a vote on it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE in the chair). The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Texas that the House takes a recess at 5 o'clock.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, the only comment I desire to make on what has occurred here this afternoon is that I think it greatly and unduly magnifies the differences in the Democratic party. In view of the fact that we voted practically as a unit upon all questions up to the very last, and that even upon the final passage of the bill only five of those who act with us on all questions separated from us, I think we have good reason to congratulate ourselves upon a unanimity which was much greater than has been exhibited on any question of similar importance in the last twenty years.

I took the floor, however, not for the purpose of saying this, but to correct the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD], who intimated in his speech that when we voted to recommit the bill with instructions to add the income tax as an amendment we supported the issue of bonds. A moment's reflection will easily convince the gentleman of his error. A motion to recommit with instruction is simply one form of amendment, and at that stage which we had then reached it was the only form permissible. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] certainly understands that a motion to amend a bill does not commit those voting for the amendment to support the bill as a whole or to the support of any of its parts. It is the duty of each legislator to make every bill as good as possible, although he may not be able to vote for it after he has helped to improve it.

The facts in this particular case are these: We moved to strike out the bond provision and substitute the income tax, and the Democrats, without exception, voted for that motion, as did also the Populists and Silver Republicans, while the Republicans voted solidly against it. We then moved to strike out the bond provision without offering any substitute, and upon that motion the Democrats, with two exceptions, voted for it, while the Republicans, almost without exception, voted against it. We had done our utmost to eliminate the bond provision from the bill in the Committee of the Whole, but we were unable to do so, and the bill was reported from the committee to the House, engrossed, and read a third time.

The motion to substitute the income-tax for the bond provision, and the motion to strike out the bond provision, both having been defeated by a practically united Republican vote against a practically united Democratic, Populist, and Silver Republican vote, we resolved to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means with instruction to report it back with the income tax added as an amendment. Both as a matter of parliamentary procedure and as a matter of common sense, this was equivalent to saying that, inasmuch as you have determined to pass your bill with your bond provision in it, we insist that you shall adopt an income tax to provide for the payment of the bonds which, over our protest, you have determined to sell. This is all the motion meant. It did not imply an assent to the issuance of bonds; nor would it, if it had been adopted, have committed any man who voted for it to the support of the bill as amended.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2219. An act for the relief of the administrators of Isaac P. Tice, deceased, and others;

H. R. 1595. An act to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5885. An act to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act to punish the carrying or selling of deadly or dangerous weapons within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved July 13, 1892; and

H. R. 2691. An act to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to grant to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVEY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROWNLOW, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House is in recess until 8 o'clock this evening; and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. LACEY, will act as Speaker pro tempore.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. LACEY as Speaker pro tempore.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, before the House proceeds with its regular business I want to make a very short personal statement. This afternoon, when I began my remarks, which were somewhat out of time, there were four or five gentlemen over on that side who said something which I did not hear; and I remarked that I wished they would keep their mouths out of my speech. It turned out that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] made a very pertinent remark. I did not hear and did not know what he said. I understood afterwards that some of his friends thought that my language was unkind toward him. I have the kindest feeling toward that gentleman and meant no offense to him.

While on the floor I wish to ask permission (to use the phrase of General WHEELER) to "round out my remarks" in the RECORD—not to extend them very much.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule prescribing the order of business for this evening session, which has been substituted for the session which regularly would have been held last Friday night.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, before we go into Committee of the Whole House, I desire to ask that to-night all bills for the removal of charges of desertion be passed over.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I suggest to the gentleman that he except from his request those cases where the member interested in the bill is present and asking for its consideration.

Mr. COX. I hope that exception will be made. I am interested in the case of one old man whose bill is on the Calendar—the only case in which I am interested on this entire list.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask unanimous consent to have read a letter which I received from a gentleman out West, and which will somewhat explain my position.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the letter?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

MAYSVILLE, KY., April 18, 1898.

MY DEAR SIR: Will you please permit me to call you "Comrade," although you wore the gray and I the blue?

I am just in receipt of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Friday, April 15, and wish to thank you for the noble stand you have taken in regard to placing deserters on the pension roll through Congressional action. The case in point is of especial interest to me, that of one William Henry Johnson, of Company H, Second Pennsylvania Cavalry, subsequently transferred to Company H, First Pennsylvania Provisional Cavalry, which was up for consideration at the opening of your evening session, with my friend Mr. LACEY, of Iowa, as Speaker pro tempore.

During the discussion upon this claim of William Henry Johnson I observe that Hon. WILLIAM L. STARK, of Nebraska, made this statement: "It seems that they created a provisional cavalry corps in Pennsylvania as a home guard. This man is not altogether right in his head. He regarded that as being against his courage as a soldier, and so he went and served in the Navy." Now, as I had the honor of being adjutant of the Twentieth Pennsylvania Cavalry and also of the Consolidated First Pennsylvania Provisional Cavalry, I think I know more about the matter than Mr. STARK does.

The Second and the Twentieth Pennsylvania were consolidated under the order of the War Department, mustering out supernumerary officers, as the war was over and the Army was being reduced as rapidly as possible. Under this order the colonel of the Twentieth was mustered out and the consolidated regiment placed under the command of Col. W. W. Sanders, a Regular Army officer. Closely following the order for consolidation came the order to muster out the "Provisional" organization, and that was done on July 13, 1865, at Clouds Mills, Va., 3 miles back of Alexandria. The command then moved to Bladensburg, Md., where it awaited the grand review at Washington, following which it went to Philadelphia and was paid off at Camp Cadwallader, the men dispersing to their homes.

According to Mr. STARK, this man Johnson regarded it as an act of cowardice to belong to a home guard regiment, so he went into the Navy to fight a foe that did not exist! He was indeed a brave man and deserves much more at the hands of his country than the men who conformed to the articles of war and the orders of the War Department and remained in the military service until legitimately discharged therefrom! Mr. STARK ought to have told the Congress who William Henry Johnson intended to fight when he went into the Navy three months after the close of the war. I am surprised that he should essay to speak upon a subject on which he was so poorly informed, as common sense might dictate to any person that neither Pennsylvania nor any other State would have use for home guards three months after the Confederate armies had surrendered and the war was ended.

The muster-in and the muster-out rolls of this regiment were made up under my personal and direct supervision, and while I am not prepared to say with positiveness that there was no error in Johnson's case, I feel that he is no more deserving than thousands of others who have been added and are fast making the pension roll a roll of dishonor as well as a roll of honor. I do not know that what I have said will have any influence on this case, but I believe that Congress will make no mistake if it stands by the records of the Adjutant-General's Office.

My chief object in writing was to congratulate you and to thank you for the stand you have taken, and to wish you godspeed in every righteous effort. Believe me, my dear sir,

Fraternally, yours,

THOMAS A. DAVIS,
Late Adjutant Twentieth Pennsylvania Cavalry and First Pennsylvania Provisional Cavalry.

Hon. W. JASPER TALBERT,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I have been criticised pretty severely by some gentlemen on the other side and some on this for the stand I have taken on this subject. I have had this letter read for the purpose only of showing that a distinguished Union soldier indorses my position and to let the House know that the Union soldiers themselves are galling under the yoke which is put on their shoulders by adding the names of these deserters to what should be a roll of honor, but what thus becomes a roll of dishonor.

I renew my request that all bills for the removal of the charge of desertion be passed over to-night—all bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] asks unanimous consent that for this evening all bills for the removal of the charge of desertion be not considered. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I think this would be a very good rule if an exception were made in favor of members who may be present and who have cases which they wish to bring up. I have but one man in whom I am interested on this entire Calendar, and he is charged with desertion. I do not want to come here every Friday night and have this bill passed over. I hope my friend from South Carolina will liberalize his proposition by making the exception which I suggest.

Mr. TALBERT. I think it would be a good rule to pass over all these cases of deserters so long as we can find a single case of a faithful old veteran who stood by the flag and did not desert it. My idea is that such men should be given preference by this House. That is my position.

Mr. COX. Well, if you are going to take that position, I object to the request.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized in order to make a request before we proceed with the regular business.

My colleague [Mr. STARK] is unavoidably absent to-night. As is well known to the members, he is a member of the Committee on the Militia, and his time is almost entirely taken up with the duties of that committee under present circumstances. He rarely misses a session of the House, night or day, and it is only because of these unavoidable circumstances that he is now absent. All the members know that Judge STARK has been faithful in attending upon the afternoon and evening sessions of the House.

The letter referred to was shown to Judge STARK, and he suggested that it should be read in the presence of this body. He asked me, as a matter of convenience for him, to say to the gentleman from South Carolina that he would ask to have this letter read to-night, and he requested me to ask unanimous consent that he may have five days from this date in which to print remarks on the subject of the bill for the relief of William Henry Johnson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, under subdivision 2 of the rule.

The question was taken; and the House proceeded to divide, on a division demanded by Mr. TALBERT.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I see readily what this is going to lead to, and I withdraw my objection made a few moments ago.

Now, if the gentleman from South Carolina will withdraw his objection, we can go into Committee of the Whole and consider these pension bills.

Mr. TALBERT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I renew the request that all bills for the removal of charges of desertion be passed over to-night without prejudice. If that provision is granted, we will go on with the regular business of considering pension bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again submit the request, although the House is dividing on the question submitted by the gentleman from New York. If there be no objection, however, the Chair will submit the request that all bills for the removal of charges of desertion be passed over and not presented for consideration to-night.

There was no objection.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. RAY of New York; and on a division there were—ayes 33, noes 0.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. CONNOLLY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special order, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

LOUISE M. RICE.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1476) grantng a pension to Louise M. Rice, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Samuel A. Rice.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louise M. Rice, widow of Brig. Gen. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Samuel A. Rice, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension of $30 per month she is now receiving.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to renew my objection to this bill—the same objection that was submitted in a former meeting of the Committee of the Whole

At a former session of the House we had this matter under consideration. I stated my objection to the increase of pension as suggested by the bill, and I now desire to repeat that objection.

I see no reason on earth for raising the pension of this widow from $30 to $50 per month; it does not appear anywhere, except in the language of the report, that there is any justification for the increase of the pension. I have looked closely into the matter, and have tried to find justification for the increase proposed by the committee. This afternoon we heard on the floor of the House a speech made in opposition to some pension claims, and yet gentlemen instead of addressing themselves to the pending question, went off on side issues. And this condition did not come from any one special side of the Chamber. It is applicable to both sides of it.

Here is a case that proposes to increase a pension from $30 to $50 per month without, in my judgment, any proper reason for the increase. There is no reason why we should give the larger sum of money—$50 instead of $30—and for that reason I object to this bill, and desire to give the gentleman in charge of it information now that I shall feel myself justifiable in exercising every parliamentary expedient in my power to defeat its consideration and final passage.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that my friend who has just taken his seat will insist upon his objection when the facts of this case are thoroughly understood.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I think I understand very thoroughly the case. I have examined it carefully.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, we have already passed through this House——

Mr. STURTEVANT. Mr. Chairman, to alleviate the difficulty——

Mr. RAY of New York. I have the floor, Mr. Chairman. This bill is of importance to this widow. Her husband was shot in battle, and died a very few days after that of the wounds received in battle. He left no property to his widow. She has lived along upon her $30 a month until everything she had and everything she could earn is gone. She is now old, approaching 70 years of age.

She was the wife of this soldier when he was killed. She is a war widow. She can not work any more. She can not earn anything, and she has no property and nobody upon whom she can depend. The gentleman from Iowa, Major LACEY, who introduced this bill, presents his written statement, in addition to certain affidavits. We did not print everything in the report, because it costs the Government something to print all these things. He is personally acquainted with this lady, and he says:

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1898.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the bill (H. R. 2850) for relief of Mrs. Louise M. Rice, widow of Bvt. Maj Gen. and Brig. Gen. Samuel A. Rice, I wish to say that Mrs. Rice is very poor and wholly dependent upon her pension.

Respectfully,

JOHN F. LACEY.

Col. GEORGE W. RAY,
Chairman Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Now, I ask the gentleman, in view of her age, her surroundings, her circumstances, and the fact that her husband was killed in battle thirty years ago; in view of the fact that she has struggled along since and is now old and in failing health, whether he will not do toward this old woman, this war widow, just what he would ask a grateful country to do for his old mother when she reaches these years, under such circumstances?

Are we not justified in raising this pension? Is it not right that we should do so? That is all I can say. He was a brave man, and she has had no one to earn money for her since. The Government has done well for her since. So long as she could work for herself $30 was enough; but now when she is old and in poor health she needs more than she did before. I ask the gentleman if he will not withdraw his opposition to this bill and let it go through? Is not the proposed action justified?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I thoroughly appreciate the sentiment which actuates the gentleman from New York, and I desire to say that to-day I have watched him when this unfinished business was up, and in cases where the Senate, time and again, reduced the amounts allowed by the House on these bills, I have been very agreeably surprised to find that the gentleman has moved concurrence in what the Senate has done, in every case where I thought it was proper, and I have voted with him time and again to-day along that very line.

But here to-night he does not give a reason, other than the fact that the lady is old. He gives no new ground that was not urged before for the proposed increase. Why, but a few nights ago there was a bill here proposing to raise the pension of the widow of General Stevenson from thirty to fifty dollars a month. In that case the amount was not raised. Why was this? Was she not equally entitled to the larger sum?

Mr. RAY of New York. Will the gentleman permit me right there?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Certainly.

Mr. RAY of New York. The widow of General Stevenson is drawing $8 per month, all that the law allows her.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The effort was made to raise that, was it not?

Mr. RAY of New York. She is drawing $8 per month, and the proposition was to raise her pension to $50 per month. The committee reported in favor of making it $30 a month, and on that there was a contest. Now, in that case why did we insist upon $30 and not $50? The reason was that General Stevenson held a high office in the Army until three or four years before he died. He drew a salary of from $3,500 to $5,000 up to that time. After he went out of the Army he was made postmaster at St. Louis, and held that position until the time of his death, nearly, at a very large salary. Now, he did not die of any disease contracted in the service. He did not die of any wounds received in the service.

Mr. MARSH. He was not killed in the service.

Mr. RAY of New York. He received no wounds in the service, but lived to a ripe old age, and when we increased the pension of his widow from $8 to $30, she having had the comfort and society of her husband until about two years ago, and he having had a large salary during all that time, we thought we were doing all that justice and propriety would permit.

Now, here we increase this old lady's pension from $30 to $50. She lost her husband thirty-odd years ago from wounds received in actual battle, and has not had his help, comfort, or society since—no one to aid or assist in her support. We have only given this woman an increase of $20, whereas in the case of the widow of General Stevenson we gave her an increase over anything that the general law would allow of $20 per month.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Now, I understand that thoroughly. Does it appear anywhere that the necessities of Mrs. Stevenson are less than the necessities of Mrs. Rice? Is there anything to indicate that the one is more worthy than the other, or to indicate the necessities of one are greater than those of the other? Is there anything but sentiment why you should give one more than the other? Is it not a fact that when you increased the pension of Mrs. Stevenson to $30 you regarded that as enough?

Mr. RAY of New York. No; I would not say that.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I have a perfect contempt for the men that stand here and pose and pretend to do something to benefit their constituents with a view of obtaining the attention of the country. I do not propose to do that. I do not propose to write or to use any word here that I would not stand by anywhere. There is nothing of that about me; and therefore what I say here to-night I thoroughly believe. I believe there ought to be a line drawn somewhere.

I do believe that those people who live in the country in which the old-soldier element predominates are not candid in saying what they do. I believe there are plenty of good, honest people who believe that if they were given $30 or even $20 a month, this class of pensioners would get enough. This lady can live comfortably for $30 a month, and when you go beyond that I believe it is a mere matter of bounty and sentiment, and not a matter of necessity, not a matter of right, or anything of that sort.

So far as I am concerned, the war is a long way behind. I was a mere babe at that time. And while I live in the South, in my veins runs the blood of both the North and the South, and nearly every one of my relatives live north of the Ohio. I can and do speak fairly and honestly. My people ask only what is right. But it does seem to me that there ought to be some place, somewhere, some time, when this line ought to be drawn and this matter ought to be stopped.

I believe in giving every worthy soldier and the widow of every soldier to-day what is right in the matter; but in common sense and in common honesty we ought to draw the line somewhere and stop this reckless extravagance. There is nothing here to show that $30 a month is not amply sufficient for this lady to live on. I do not find anything to show that $30 a month is not enough for her to live on comfortably. If there is anything in the record to show that is not true, I would like to have it shown here.

I will go as far as any other to give a fair amount of pension, but here was the case of the widow of General Stevenson, whose pension was raised from $8 to $30 a month. She asked for $50, and was granted $30. You thought that $50 was an unreasonable amount, and you gave her what was a reasonable amount, $30. I believe you gentlemen said $30 was ample; and now, in this case, it is said that this lady is old and poor, and that $30 is not sufficient. How can that be?

It is an easy matter to take money out of the public purse and give it to others. That is a very easy matter; you do not pay it. Why, the widow of a Mexican soldier only gets $8 a month, no matter what her condition may be, and certainly they must all be old. This widow we are giving not what is actually necessary, but raising it from $30 to $50, and not a blessed thing to show that it is necessary.

If, as I said before, there is anything in the record to show not only that she is old and in necessitous circumstances, but that more than $30 is absolutely necessary for her to live on and live comfortably, then I will vote to raise it. There is nothing to show that $30 a month is not amply sufficient for her to live on. I know and every gentleman in this House knows that anybody can live very comfortably, especially at that age, in this land on $30, and plenty do it on much less. How many widows of honorable men live on much less?

Mr. RAY of New York. Do you do it?

Mr. SULLIVAN. If I were a pensioner, I would not ask more. I spend perhaps ten times that much, and spend it foolishly and recklessly, and I never drew one single dollar from the public Treasury except now for the first time in my life I am drawing a salary. But so far as all that is concerned, if I were asking for a pension under similar circumstances, I would not ask it on any such basis as this.

I would like to see the proof as to what anybody else could honestly and fairly live upon under the same circumstances before I am called upon to vote for this claim, and I would be willing to take that as a fair basis. If every old Mexican widow came here and said because she is old her pension ought to be raised, there would be such a howl raised that gentlemen on that side of the Chamber would be compelled to call a halt.

I say that they make a mistake when they come here and ask for this to be done. The mistake made is in piling up pensions like this. The pension laws are liberal enough already, and when you are piling up such a record of increased pensions as this, which may be very good for some sections, your Northern sections, but not for ours, I shall have to oppose it. I do not believe that $30 is too little for this widow to live on, and I shall oppose the increase recommended.

Mr. LACEY. The general law grades the pension up to lieutenant-colonel. A full pension is $30. There is nothing beyond that in the general law, and the result has been that as to officers of higher rank, both in the Army and Navy, the matter has been commonly referred to Congress, I think, in almost every instance, on account of the grade being limited to lieutenant-colonel, and from that down. The result has been that almost all the widows of brigadier-generals have been pensioned at the rate of $50.

As I stated the other night when this question was up before, every brigadier-general's widow from the State of Iowa has been pensioned at $50 a month with the exception of the widow of General Rice, and he was the only brigadier-general from that State who was killed in battle.

Instead of asking a discrimination in favor of Mrs. Rice, she asks to be put on the same footing as the other ladies. I wish to say to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] that she was modest about it; she did not ask to be put on this rate with the other widows until the others had first been put there. She went along, as poor as she is, on the $30 a month, and lived the best she could until near 70 years of age.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Is it not a fact that the rank of her husband was not determined, and he was not made a brigadier-general until he had been dead two months, and that this pension is not claimed on the basis of the rank he obtained in his lifetime?

Mr. LACEY. No; I am glad the gentleman has mentioned that, because it shows that he is laboring under a misapprehension. Mr. Rice was attorney-general of Iowa. He raised the Thirty-third Regiment and was selected as its colonel. He was placed in command of the regiment, and then of a brigade, and then of a division, and then he was promoted to the rank of a full brigadier-general for gallantry.

He was shot through the top of the head at the battle of Elkins Ford, and he was wounded again at Jenkins Ferry, receiving the wound from which he died. After his death he was brevetted a major-general. The order brevetting him was a singular order. The fact was that he had distinguished himself so highly that the President of the United States brevetted him major-general after his death.

Mr. SULLIVAN. How long after his death?

Mr. LACEY. Two or three months after. The brevet rank was only an honorary rank, as was stated here. It was put in the report merely to illustrate the character of his services. He was twice wounded, and was the only brigadier-general from Iowa killed in battle, and his widow is the only widow of a brigadier-general from that State who is not receiving $50 a month.

Now, I say, independently of any proposition whether $30 a month is enough, here is a discrimination against this lady that is unjust. The chairman of the committee has stated the rule adopted by the committee to prevent extraordinarily large pensions. They have adopted the rule that a brigadier-general's widow shall receive no more than $50 a month in any event, and she shall not receive that unless she was his wife during the war nor unless his death was due to army service.

Now, that is drawing the line very closely—much more closely than ever it was drawn by any Democratic Congress or any Republican Congress in the past. It is a very safe rule, one which it would have been well to have adopted before, and it is one that we have acted on in four or five cases during the present Congress.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. This widow is now drawing how much?

Mr. LACEY. She is drawing $30.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa know of his own knowledge anything about whether she is living with her relatives?

Mr. LACEY. I know all about her. I was adjutant-general under General Rice and I took him off the battlefield at the time he was wounded. I have known the family intimately. I live in the same town with them. The old lady now is living by herself, and living absolutely upon her pension. For some years she received assistance from her father's people, her brothers and sisters, but they have died; they were older than she. They have passed away and she has had to depend of late years upon herself. There was a time when her brother-in-law, a man of some wealth, would come out and give her some assistance nearly every year, but for the last eight or ten years she has had to depend absolutely on what she received from the Government.

Mr. SULLIVAN. If you will pardon me and answer the questions without an argument, you will aid me in getting at a conclusion in my own mind. I have arrived at one now, but I desire to get at the truth. You say she is living by herself; you know that is so. Has she any property of her own?

Mr. LACEY. She has a small homestead that she lives in.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Has she any other property?

Mr. LACEY. None. General Rice left a small estate outside of the homestead, but it was exhausted years ago.

Mr. SULLIVAN. What is the size of the town in which she is living?

Mr. LACEY. It is a town of 10,000 people.

Mr. SULLIVAN. You really know nothing about her monthly expenses, except in a general way?

Mr. LACEY. Only in a general way. She is living in a town of the size I have described, and the gentleman understands what it costs to live in such a place.

Mr. SULLIVAN. She owns her own home and lives in a town of 10,000 population; and what outside help she receives you do not know?

Mr. LACEY. She gets none whatever. I explained that she formerly received some help; but as the years have gone by that has entirely ceased by reason of the death of the relatives who formerly assisted her. She is thus left absolutely dependent upon her pension.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I notice that there are on the Calendar bills granting original pensions and also bills for increase of pensions. It occurs to me that persons who are already getting pensions are in a better condition to wait a while than those who are getting no pensions at all. I therefore ask unanimous consent that we pass over for to-night bills asking for increase of pensions and take up only those which propose to grant original pensions.

Mr. RAY of New York. I hope my friend will not press that request. I trust he will listen to a word of explanation. Take the very next bill on the Calendar, a bill introduced by one of the gentleman's Democratic colleagues, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. TALBERT. That is a bill granting an original pension.

Mr. RAY of New York. No. It does not necessarily follow that the pension is an original pension because the title of the bill does not disclose that it is an increase.

Mr. TALBERT. It is "A bill granting a pension to Joseph C. Berry, alias Joseph White."

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me explain. Nearly every member, when seeking an increase of pension for a person already pensioned, introduces his bill with the title "A bill granting a pension," etc.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, if there is objection to my request, I can not insist.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to explain this matter to the gentleman and to show him it would not be fair to take the course he suggests. The bill I have just mentioned, introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], is really a bill to increase a pension to $50 a month. Now, I know that when the gentleman hears the circumstances of that case he will not object.

The gentleman thinks that those persons already receiving pensions are necessarily better off than those getting none. Once in a while that is so. But here is a case of a man who is now getting $30 a month, and we want to give him $50.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The request of the gentleman from South Carolina is withdrawn. Let us go on with the regular business.

Mr. RAY of New York. I simply wanted the gentleman from South Carolina to understand the facts. Many of these cases where an increase is proposed are cases of the most pressing necessity.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] withdraw his request?

Mr. TALBERT. No, sir.

Mr. BRUCKER. Well, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOSEPH C. BERRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6379) granting a pension to Joseph C. Berry, alias Joseph White.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Joseph C. Berry, alias Joseph White, late of Company K, Eighth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, and to pay him a pension of $72 per month, in lieu of the pension which he now receives.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask for the reading of the report in this case.

The report (by Mr. DRIGGS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6379) increasing the pension of Joseph C. Berry, have examined the same and all the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This bill, as amended, proposes to increase from $30 to $50 per month the pension of Joseph C. Berry, of Mexico, Mo., who served under the name of James White, as private in Company K, Eighth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, from September 21, 1861, to September 28, 1864, when honorably discharged.

The records show that he was captured at Shiloh, Tenn., April 6, 1862; paroled May 22, 1862. It also appears from the records that he was treated while in the service for scrofula, remittent fever, and diarrhea.

It appears from evidence filed in the Pension Office that he also had smallpox while in the service. He filed a claim under the general law March 9, 1885, alleging smallpox and typhoid fever, affecting whole system; also disease of lungs, spinal affection, deafness, and kidney trouble.

The claim was submitted for paralysis, result of disease of kidneys and spine, by an examiner, in 1888, and approved by legal reviewer and re-reviewer, for disease of back; and was also approved by a medical examiner, medical reviewer, and the medical referee, for disease of back and resulting paraplegia, $50; but it was learned that he had received an injury of the back at some time since discharge, and that approval was canceled, and in 1889 it was briefed and approved, legally, for disease of urinary organs (eliminating any results caused by spinal injury); reject spinal trouble and paralysis on the ground that they are the result of an injury received by fall from a scaffold in 1880; reject lung disease and deafness on the statement of claimant that they originated subsequent to his discharge from service.

It was then approved medically for disease of urinary organs, four-eighteenths (disability for which rated largely due to other than pensioned cause). On this approval he was pensioned at $4 per month from March 10, 1886. He was increased to $8 from September 22, 1890; to $17 from October 1, 1891; to $30 from October 12, 1892. Since the allowance of the $30 rate, two applications for increase have been rejected, and paraplegia claimed as result has not been so accepted.

It seems evident from the first approval of this case that the man must have incurred injury or disease of back in the service, and that he must have established that fact and the fact of the continuance of a disability therefrom since discharge. Had he not done so, it would not have been legally approved for disease of back. After that approval was made it was learned that about 1880 he received an injury of the back by falling from a scaffold, and then it was held that his entire disease of spine and paralysis were due to that injury, in spite of the fact that origin and continuance of disease of back in service and up to that time had been alleged, proved, and admitted.

This man is now in a terrible condition, as shown by the evidence furnished and by the certificates of examinations, the last of which, made June 11, 1897, and which would cover five typewritten pages, shows that he has no control over the sphincters of bladder and rectum. His lower limbs are absolutely helpless. He has not walked for sixteen years; is able to be moved about in a wheel chair; weighs only 75 pounds; he is unable to retain his urine at all for any time. His bladder is in a terrible condition, and only with the greatest trouble can he void his urine. One physician says:

"The spine is curved, and the muscles of the back wasted. He says that this curvature existed, and that he had very little use of his lower limbs five or six years previous to the fall from the scaffold, since which time he has been totally paralyzed in the lower extremities. Looking at him from crest of ilia downward he is pitiful to behold.

"The claimant is so totally and permanently helpless from kidney and bladder disease and paralysis that he requires the regular and personal aid and attendance of another person, and is entitled to the first-grade rate ($72). Disabilities not due to vicious habits."

The examining surgeon says he believes claimant tells the truth.

This man evidently suffers from a disability of service origin that entitles him to a pension of $50 per month. The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

After the word "pension," in line 6, insert "at the rate."

In line 7 strike out "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty."

Mr. TALBERT. I did not catch from the reading of the report the reason why this man had two names. I should like to hear some explanation on that point from the chairman of the committee or the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. This was a young man who was so anxious to enter the service that he went away from his home and enlisted under another name. There was nothing dishonorable about the transaction—simply a patriotic desire to enter the service.

Mr. TALBERT. He did not change his name in order to get a bounty?

Mr. RAY of New York. There were no bounties when this man went into the service—in September, 1861.

Mr. TALBERT. He might have changed his name after that.

Mr. RAY of New York. He only entered the service once, and stayed right along from September, 1861, to September, 1864, when he was honorably discharged.

Mr. TALBERT. What amount of pension is he getting now?

Mr. RAY of New York. Thirty dollars a month.

Mr. TALBERT. And he wants $50?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. TALBERT. Why can he not get it from the Department?

Mr. RAY of New York. If the gentleman had listened to the report, the question would have been answered. We examined this case carefully, and the officers of the Department testified that this injury to his back was of service origin.

Mr. SULLIVAN. But this injury, according to the report, seems to have been occasioned by a fall very many years after the war, or in 1884, I think.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no. If the gentleman will examine the report, he will see that the application was pending long before that for a pension. The testimony was clear that the injury was received originally in the service. When the application was made, it was sent to a medical referee on the part of the Pension Office according to the law, and the testimony was clear that the injury was received in the service.

It was then sent to the medical board, and after an examination the report was approved by them, and subsequently it was approved by another medical board to whom the matter was referred. It is in testimony that this man fell from a scaffold and that he received a part of the injury from which he has been suffering because of that fall. The evidence shows that he was on a scaffold trying to make a living, and in his weak and disabled condition, owing to his former trouble, he received the injury to which reference has been made in the report.

The committee did not think he received any special injury in that accident, but it made worse the condition he was in prior to the accident. The testimony is plain that the injury from which he has been suffering was received in the service.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Is he a married or single man?

Mr. RAY of New York. My recollection is that he has a wife. At all events there is no controversy as to the justice of the case. It is as just a claim as was ever presented before Congress.

Mr. HICKS. If the gentleman from New York will permit me, in answer to the gentleman from South Carolina, I desire to say in regard to men enlisting under assumed names that quite a number of soldiers in the early part, and, indeed, during the entire term, of the war went in the service under assumed names because of the fact that enlistments were not allowed of any persons under the age of 18 years. The regulations provided no enlistments would be received of men until they were above that age, and many young men, in their desire to enter the Army, did so under assumed names that they themselves had afterwards corrected. Many young men within my knowledge who had not reached the required age enlisted under assumed names in order to get in the service. I make this statement as an act of justice to scores of patriotic young men who gallantly served their country.

Mr. TALBERT. I am entirely satisfied with the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. RAY of New York. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask a vote on the amendments.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TALBERT. I desire to make a request of the committee, and I think it will meet the approval of the members present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALBERT. I notice that there are very few members present to-night. We have the same crowd here that comes every Friday night, and I believe it to be only a matter of justice to those that do come to take up the bills in which they are specially interested. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that as the bills are reported, if no members are present to look after them, they be passed over until we reach a bill that some member present is interested in.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from South Carolina. Is there objection to calling over the bills in their order, and taking up those in which some member present is interested?

Mr. RAY of New York. Before that I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina not to press that request. At the very beginning of this session I stated that I was here to explain the various bills upon the Calendar. I have examined them all particularly and carefully, and have examined the reports. I prepared the reports in most of the cases and know all about the bills, and hope I may be permitted, when a bill comes up to which there is any objection to state the reasons to the House for its passage.

I am here for that purpose. I do not believe that any of these bills would be objected to if the facts were understood.

Mr. TALBERT. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if members do not choose to be present to look after their bills, we ought not to be expected to spend time in their consideration.

Mr. RAY of New York. But on the other hand, Mr. Chairman, we ought to be willing to consider these bills—I have no personal interest in most of them, of course—but they have been reported by the committee, and the reports have been prepared in large part by myself; and if there are objections to them, I can readily explain to the members of the House the circumstances attending each one.

Mr. TALBERT. But we ought not to legislate, it seems to me, with a few members in this way.

I make the request, and renew it. If anyone objects, all right; and I shall not press the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to object to that arrangement.

Mr. TALBERT. I submit that the gentleman is too late with his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submitted the request to the committee and no objection was made. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, I suppose the regular order is giving unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submitted the request and there was no objection.

Mr. BRUMM. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRUMM. I would like to know whether we have finished the unfinished business on the Calendar?

Mr. RAY of New York. We are now in Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman's point of order, if he had a point of order to make, should have been made in the House.

Mr. BRUMM. The unfinished business on the Calendar would be first in order, it seems to me, before we proceed with the Calendar. I raise the point of order that we should first dispose of the unfinished business.

Mr. RAY of New York. I make the point of order that we are in Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman's point can only be made in the House.

Mr. BRUMM. Then we ought to go back into the House at once and finish up the unfinished business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the point of order could only be made in the House. The Committee of the Whole is sitting by order of the House, and the action of the House in determining the character of business to be decided by the Committee of the Whole can not be at any time changed by the committee.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, if my friend will permit me, I think we went over the unfinished business on the Calendar this morning.

Mr. CLARDY. But we did not get through with it.

LAFAYETTE TIBBETTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 509) granting an increase of pension to Lafayette Tibbetts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lafayette Tibbetts, late of Company C, Tenth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving, payable to his legally constituted guardian.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Let us have the report read, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the Senate bill No. 509, have examined the same and the evidence, and respectfully report:

This bill proposes to increase from $12 to $30 per month the pension of Lafayette Tibbetts, of Manchester, N. H.

The Senate report states the facts and is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 509) granting an increase of pension to Lafayette Tibbetts, have examined the same, and report:

"The beneficiary under this bill is hopelessly insane and confined in the State insane asylum at Concord, N. H. In his original declaration it is alleged that at Chapins Farm, Virginia, in March, 1865, he was taken ill from fever and ague, and that he had suffered continuously from that time from malarial poisoning, resulting in attacks of partial paralysis, general debility, and kidney disease. The records show that he was in hospital from March 24, 1865, and from March 25 to June 2, 1865. Two of his comrades testify to the origin of the disease in the service as alleged, and that while in hospital his lower limbs became numb and partially paralyzed.

"This claim not having been allowed under the general law, the soldier applied February 27, 1886, under the act of June 27, 1890, alleging malarial poisoning, chills and fever, and resulting paralysis, locomotor ataxia, rheumatism, and heart disease. This claim was allowed January 5, 1895, at $6 per month, for rheumatism, disease of heart and nervous system, and the bill was increased to $12 per month from August 13, 1896, for rheumatism, disease of heart and nervous system, and insanity.

"Several medical examinations show that the patient was in a very bad physical condition prior to the insanity, and it is safe to assume that the condition of his nervous system, as a result of disease contracted in the service, had much to do with unbalancing the brain. The following statement from Dr. C. P. Bancroft, superintendent of the New Hampshire asylum, dated February 16, 1897, sets forth the present hopeless condition of the soldier:

"'I understand that Captain Tibbetts was in the service during three years of the war; that he was exposed to much hardship both in the way of battle and march, and suffered the usual exhausting and depressing effects from a particularly hard service. I think there is very little doubt but that this strain upon his physical and nervous organization has undoubtedly furnished one cause for his early mental and physical impairment. The case presents a history of gradual and progressive failure for the last seven years. He has a very marked loss of power in his lower extremities, so much so that he can not walk without some assistance. This is evidently a slow and gradually increasing paresis of all the muscles of the lower extremities.

"'I believe the condition is due to organic changes in the cord and brain, and that the case is incurable. He is entirely incapacitated from doing anything, and will necessarily be a constant burden upon some one. I believe that his case is a deserving one for increase of pension, for I question very much whether a man with his naturally rugged and vigorous constitution would have succumbed so early to organic disease of the character that he has had there not been this severe shock and strain which he endured during his army service.'

"In view of the fact that the soldier was sick while in the service from a disease that resulted, according to the medical examinations, in a nervous condition that might well predispose to insanity, your committee are of opinion that he is justly entitled to a substantial increase of pension. A medical examination made by the board at Manchester, N. H., under date of March 23, 1892, gives the soldier a high rating for disease of spinal cord and malarial poisoning, while another examination, made April 12, 1893, gives him a rating for chills and fever, weak heart, locomotor ataxia, and rheumatism.

"Thus it appears that the brain and spinal column were affected, and it seems reasonably clear that those disabilities were associated with the malarial poisoning which is directly traceable to army service."

In consideration of the age and present condition of soldier, both physically and financially, and of his long and faithful service, your committee report back the Senate bill with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I understand that this bill raises this man's pension from seventeen dollars and a half to $30 a month.

Mr. RAY of New York. From $12 to $30.

The CHAIRMAN. From $12 to $30.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that we find ourselves in this condition: On the Calendar of Unfinished Business to-day there were twenty-six different pension matters. This was the day set apart for the consideration of private claims, of which there are a great number upon the Calendar here. Week after week we have been absolutely unable to have any hearing whatever on this class of claims.

There are claims here reaching back to 1855, and how many there are that go back of that date I do not know, where people to whom just debts are due have died, and their administrators have been worn out in coming to Washington and trying to get their claims considered. These people are here knocking at the door of Congress to get their claims allowed, and they can have no hearing and no opportunity to present their claims to the House.

The unfinished business yet undisposed of on the Calendar is sufficient to occupy almost the entire day on the next day set apart for the consideration of private claims. It is unfair for these nights to be taken up in the passage of these bills by the Committee of the Whole, and then the day set apart for the consideration of other private claims occupied in consideration of the same matters as unfinished business, so that nobody can be heard at all on other matters, except pensioners.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, who was to blame to-day for the time that was taken up in the consideration of these matters?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Well, very largely——

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, permit me right here, and then I will not interrupt you. There was no man on the Republican side to-day who made any speech, but you had two or three gentlemen on that side—and it is not your fault, and I do not charge it to the Democratic party—who wanted to make some speeches; and they took up the entire afternoon nearly in making their speeches.

Mr. PETERS. Who was in the chair at the time?

Mr. RAY of New York. One of the gentlemen who made speeches was the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS], and then there was the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], and one or two others. It was not our fault. Now, if we can go on with these cases rapidly and without discussion, at 10 o'clock, or a little before, I will move that the committee rise, and if it will vote to do so, then we will take up the unfinished Calendar and dispose of it. We can dispose of these bills as we did here one night, when in one-half hour we put through the House 62 bills. We can do it to-night if our time is not taken up in useless discussion.

Mr. GREENE. You can not do it if the report is called for in each case.

Mr. RAY of New York. We will move that the committee rise in plenty of time.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman from New York asks who was to blame for this delay to-day. I want to say that the blame rests upon a bill for the removal of the charge of desertion. If it had been passed over and had not been allowed to be considered, all that time would not have been taken up. The discussion commenced upon a bill for the removal of a charge of desertion.

Mr. RAY of New York. You have obtained unanimous consent to-night that those bills be passed over.

Mr. TALBERT. I know I have to-night, but in the goodness of my nature on last Friday night I yielded to some gentlemen who said they had meritorious cases of this kind, and I did not put on the cork, and the consequence was we were knocked out to-day on account of one of these bills.

On last Friday night I myself got up, in the absence of a gentleman who was interested in one of these bills, and stated that I thought his claim was a good one, because he had stated to me that his claim should pass, and I believe it was that very claim that caused all of this rumpus to-day. That is another reason, Mr. Chairman, why we should relegate these deserters, bounty jumpers, coffee coolers, and camp followers to the rear and bring the old veterans to the front and let them have what they ought to have.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yielded for a question, but it grew into a speech. I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I do not think the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] cared the snap of his finger whether it was a question of desertion or anything else. He simply desired to make a speech, and absolutely, toward the close of his remarks, he was reminded of the fact that it was not a pension case, but a bill for the removal of the charge of desertion. That showed that it was no matter to him what the question before the House was.

So far as I am concerned, I am absolutely disgusted at this procedure. When one question is up, gentlemen get up and speak upon every other thing except the question before the House, while if they would confine themselves to the question before the House, instead of speaking of everything else, we might act intelligently. But that is not done one-half of the time.

Now, the question before us is whether or not this increase is too great. I happen, unfortunately, to be upon the Committee on Claims here. It is understood, generally understood—I do not know whether it is true or not—but it is generally understood that the policy of the House is not to pass any claims that come from the Committee on Claims into the House; that we are purely ornamental and not useful; and therefore that all the work we are doing goes for naught. Yet we sit here at these night sessions and pass in gross bill after bill, without even having the report read, without even knowing anything about them, but members are voting for them because they want to get some of their own claims allowed.

We absolutely only have the title or a very short part of the bill read, and then the bill is passed. That is the actual situation of the case—no report, no facts, no information. Now, so long as we do that we will continue to have a great number of cases heaped up to be passed upon when the day comes for the Committee on Claims to have their bills considered, and the result will be that we will never reach any of them.

I do not care a great deal about that. The only question with me is to do that which is right, to pass upon bills which are right and which ought to be allowed. There are claims here from 1855 up to the present day unpaid and not considered, and yet you are passing here a great volume of pension claims, and they are coming up day after day, and we can not have those claims reported from our committee heard. Twenty-six of these pension claims came up here to-day, and we got through with about fourteen bills this afternoon. Now, I give notice here and now that I am opposed to this whole scheme of increasing pensions and allowing pensions beyond the general law. I propose to make the point here, and prevent it if I can do so.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I want to give notice that I shall move that the committee rise for the purpose of getting back into the House and disposing of the unfinished business. Now, I want to say to my friends here that this whole affair is wrong; it is unjust to the private claimants and it is unjust to the pensioners. You have to-day absorbed the whole day in getting rid of 14 cases on the unfinished Calendar. There are still 12 left. It is not for me to say why you did not get rid of more than 14, but if it took you all day to get rid of 14, can my friend tell us when we will get rid of the other 12? Can not you do it after 10 o'clock? At any rate, if you can not, what right have you to consume the whole evening and leave a whole lot of unfinished pension bills for the purpose of adding to the confusion?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The gentleman is not in order, and is not speaking to the bill under consideration.

Mr. BRUMM. It would have been well for you to have raised that question when some one else was talking. Now, I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a question already pending.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question already pending is whether the bill which has been read by the Clerk shall be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ZOLMAN TYRRELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 908) granting a pension to Zolman Tyrrell, imbecile and dependent son of Lewis R. Tyrrell, late Company A, First New York Engineers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Zolman Tyrrell, imbecile son of Lewis R. Tyrrell, late Company A, First New York Engineers, on the pension roll and pay him a pension of $50 per month.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out the word "imbecile" and insert in lieu thereof the word "idiotic."

In line 7 strike out the words "of fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of fifteen."

Add after the word "month," in line 7, the words "to be paid to a duly appointed guardian."

Strike out section 2.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire if we are proceeding upon the rule adopted by unanimous consent that only those bills are to be considered that are represented by some member?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that to be the rule the Clerk is proceeding upon. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FRANK ROCKWITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 619) granting an increase of pension to Frank Rockwith.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I inquire who represents that bill here?

Mr. BRUCKER. Your humble servant.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Frank Rockwith, who served as surgeon's steward on the U. S. S. Arbetta in the Navy of the United States during the late war, upon the pension roll at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the amount now being received by him

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "roll," insert "and pay him a pension."

In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the report read in that case.

Mr. RIDGELY. I would ask the gentleman, in view of the many delays we have had, if he would not be perfectly willing that a short statement should be made?

Mr. TALBERT. I submit that the report ought to be read for the information of the House.

The report (by Mr. BREWSTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 619) granting an increase of pension to Frank Rockwith, have examined the same and the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This bill proposes to increase from $12 to $24 per month the pension of Frank Rockwith, of Saginaw, Mich.

This man served in the United States Navy from December 21, 1861, to November 24, 1862, when honorably discharged.

There is record of his treatment while in service for malarial fever, but no record of any other disability. He filed a claim under act of June 27, 1890, and was pensioned thereunder at $6 from October 31, 1891, and $12 from February 10, 1894, for rheumatism, disease of heart, dislocated shoulder, piles, and paralysis agitans.

August 29, 1892, he filed a claim under the general law for rheumatism, piles, and palsy, which was rejected March 28, 1898, on the ground of his inability, though aided by special examination, to furnish satisfactory evidence showing the origin and continuance of alleged disabilities. He is described by examining board at Bay City, Mich. (April 11, 1894), as being a physical wreck, totally and permanently disabled from performing manual labor, and will probably live but a few years.

The claimant is a man of good character, very poor, totally disabled, and has no one on whom he can rely for support.

An increase to $24 per month is fully justified, and the bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 7, after the word "roll," insert "and pay him a pension."

In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1898.

I know Frank Rockwith, of Saginaw, Mich. He is a man of good character. He owns no property and has no income. He is a man of good character and has no vicious habits.

He was a physician, but can no longer do anything to assist himself either professionally or by his manual labor; and all of the above statements I know of my own personal knowledge.

FERDINAND BRUCKER, Michigan.

Hon. GEORGE W. RAY, Chairman.

SAGINAW, MICH., November 24, 1897.

This certifies that I have examined Dr. Frank A. Rockwith's eyes very carefully and find a condition of the optic nerve and retina that reduces his eyesight below a point where it is possible for him to properly follow his profession. There has undoubtedly been a retinitis, which is now being succeeded by atrophy. In addition, he has hypertrophic astigmatism, with great weakness of internal recti muscles.

D. B. CORNELL, M. D.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Saginaw, ss:

Frank A. Rockwith, being duly sworn, deposes and says that by profession he is a physician and surgeon; his condition is steadily growing worse; the paralysis agitans, or Parkinson's disease, as it is otherwise called, with which he is afflicted is a progressive disease; during the last year it has steadily progressed, so that he can write his name only with great difficulty; he has not for more than a year past been able to dress or undress without assistance, and he is steadily growing more helpless. Deponent further says that his eyesight is at present so poor that coupled with his other ailments he is a total wreck.

He can not, by reason of his said maladies, any longer follow his said profession successfully, he being totally disqualified from performing an operation of any importance or difficulty; he can not drive, and hence can not follow his said profession as a physician; and further, his physical condition is such that he can not perform manual labor of even the lightest nature, nor successfully follow his said profession.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Saginaw, ss:

Dr. J. W. McMeekin, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is by profession a physician and surgeon; he is a graduate of McGill University, Montreal, Canada (1885), and has practiced his said profession for a period of twelve years; on the 24th day of November, A. D. 1897, he reexamined Dr. Frank A. Rockwith, whom he had examined over a year ago, and upon said reexamination on the 24th day of November, A. D. 1897, he found all the symptoms of his disease, to wit, paralysis agitans, or "Parkinson's disease," as it is otherwise known, very greatly aggravated and in a much more severe and serious form: he found more or less paralysis of the left side, involving the arm and peroneal muscles of the leg; the tremors were very extensive; there was tremor of the lower jaw alternating with clonic spasm; his body bends forward, and the patient has to keep chewing something to keep the chin and jaw quiet; there was extensive anæsthesia over the left side: there was some lumbar sclerosis at second and third lumbar vertebræ; pressure over these vertebræ will bring the patient to his knees. Deponent further says that the said Dr. Frank A. Rockwith is totally debilitated and incapacitated for any and all kinds of labor or professional work; that he has hemorrhoids very severely; his eyesight is much impaired, and altogether he is a perfect invalid and permanently and completely incapacitated for work.

Dr. D. B. Cornell, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is by profession a physician and surgeon: that he is a graduate of the Detroit College of Medicine, class of 1889; he has practiced for a period of eight and one-half years; during the last eight and one-half years he has limited his practice exclusively to diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

On the 24th day of November, A. D. 1897, he examined Dr. Frank A. Rockwith's eyes very carefully and found a condition of the optic nerve and retina that reduces his eyesight below a point where it is possible for him to properly follow his profession; there has undoubtedly been a retinitis, which is now being succeeded by atrophy. Deponent further says that the said Dr. Frank A. Rockwith has hypertrophic astigmatism, with great weakness of internal recti muscles.

And further deponent saith not.

SAGINAW, MICH., November 24, 1897.

To whom it may concern:

I have this day reexamined Dr. F. A. Rockwith, whom I examined over a year ago, and find all the symptoms of his disease, "paralysis agitans" (Parkinson's disease), very greatly aggravated, and in a much more severe and serious form. There is more or less paralysis of the left side, involving the arm and peroneal muscles of the leg.

The tremors are very extensive now. There is tremor of the lower jaw alternating with clonic spasm. The body bends forward and the patient has to keep chewing something to keep the chin quiet. There is extensive anæsthesia over left side. Some lumbar sclerosis at second and third lumbar vertebræ. Pressure over these vertebræ will bring the patient to his knees. He is totally debilitated and incapacitated for any and all kinds of labor or professional work. He has hemorrhoids very severely and eyesight much impaired. Altogether he is a perfect invalid and permanently and completely incapacitated for work, and is very evidently a fit subject for the further attention of our Government.

Respectfully,

JAS. W. MCMEEKIN, M. D., C. M.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Saginaw, ss:

In the pension claim of Frank A. Rockwith, personally came before me, a notary public in and for aforesaid county and State, James W. McMeekin, a resident of Saginaw, in the county of Saginaw, State of Michigan, who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to the aforesaid case as follows: I have known him about two years in a professional way, having been consulted by him about two years ago; he is suffering from paralysis agitans, otherwise known as "Parkinson's disease." I have now examined him three times, and find him much worse each succeeding time.

He is now very much worse than when I examined him two years ago; the symptoms are all very much aggravated. He now has to keep chewing something to keep his chin quiet. His hands are in constant motion except when under the influence of medicine and while in bed; but the tremor is now coming on him while in bed. He has sclerosis of third lumbar. He is now broken out with a herpetic eruption over the breast due to the action of "hyoscine," which he has to take continually. He suffers very severely from coxalgia. His eyesight has been referred to by Dr. Cornell. Paresis of external perineal nerve on left side—the case started on the right side and has now passed over to the left.

He is also suffering very much from hemorrhoids—about the same as last time I examined him. There is the backward stagger very prominent. The patient is a great sufferer, is perfectly helpless, and unable to obtain a living by his profession; he has now to relinquish practice entirely; he has considerable varicosity of the veins of the left leg; there is also albumen in urine to a moderate amount—about 10 per cent. The applicant is certainly in a most deserving way for assistance.

And he further declares that he has no interest in said case, and is not concerned in its prosecution.

JAS. W. MCMEEKIN, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day; and I hereby certify that the affiant is a practicing physician in good professional standing; that I am in no wise interested, either directly or indirectly, in the prosecution of this claim; and that I read the foregoing affidavit to the affiant and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same.

Witness my hand and official seal this 23d day of March, 1898.
[SEAL.] DUNCAN W. GOODING,
Notary Public, Saginaw County, Mich.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to make a statement why this man could not get his pension increased regularly at the Bureau, and what effort he has made?

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from South Carolina had listened carefully to the reading of that report, he would not have found it necessary to ask me that question. The report shows that he never applied for a pension prior to 1890.

Mr. TALBERT. There was so much talking I could not hear the report when it was read.

Mr. BRUCKER. He never applied for a pension until after the passage of the act of 1890. He received no disability in the service, and he is a pensioner under the act of 1890. Now, I am personally acquainted with Dr. Rockwith, the applicant.

Mr. TALBERT. You say that he has no pensionable disability that he received in the service?

Mr. BRUCKER. He had not prior to the act of 1890.

Mr. TALBERT. How did he get it afterwards?

Mr. BRUCKER. I presumed my friend from South Carolina, who has been present every evening during the consideration of these pension cases, was thoroughly posted on the pension laws of the country.

This man could not have received a pension under any other law except that of 1890, which limited him to a pension of $12 a month. As the report states, he is now a physical wreck. He never applied for a pension until he was absolutely obliged to. He was a reputable physician; he had a family, which he educated. Subsequent to 1890 he was taken with paralysis, and, as the report states, is now a physical wreck. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I am going to make this statement, inasmuch as the gentleman insisted upon it. I am not taking up the time of the committee as some other gentlemen are here. Now, as I say, he never applied for a pension until after that time. A committee of the Fifty-fourth Congress unanimously reported that this man should be granted a pension of $50 a month. It did not pass for some reason unaccountable to me. I introduced the bill asking for $50, but the committee reduced it to $24, and for the purpose of avoiding any contention and to facilitate the passage of these special pension bills, I made no question in regard to it and accepted the committee's recommendation, which was unanimous, of $24 a month, when a previous committee of this Congress had recommended $50 a month.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN], and to other gentlemen that have raised the question here to-night of why this Calendar is loaded up as it is with private pension bills and why the Private Calendar is loaded up, you will find that when a Private Calendar case is up members come here and filibuster and raise technical objections. Why do they do it? Because they live in the North and they think it is popular to do it, popular with their constituents to do it; they are playing to the galleries; they are playing for the votes at home.

Some little claim comes up from the South that actually has merit in it, a claim which has passed the Court of Claims and has been passed upon by a judicial tribunal, and comes in here for an appropriation to pay that decree or judgment, and you find "statesmen" from the North come in here and talk against time and raise objection after objection for the purpose of filibustering to defer or defeat the claim, because they think it popular among their constituents—playing for votes—and in this way pile up the cases on the Private Calendar. I want to say to one or two of my friends from the South who come here night after night, threatening to raise the point of no quorum, asking that every report on these little private pension claims be read, and then discuss them at length, we have now been in session here to-night an hour and a quarter and you have passed three little pension claims.

You have the reports read, as it seems to me, to consume time. Why? Because you think it is popular with your constituents at home. One side, the Republicans, play against time to put off or defeat little private claims that arise from the South because it is popular with their constituents in the North. Then you find some members upon this side from the South, as it appears to me, playing against time to defeat little private pension claims because you think it is popular with your constituents. If that is not the reason, what do you do it for?

I have been here night after night, watching this proceeding, and I am getting sick and tired of it. I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from South Carolina that, as far as I am concerned, raise your point of no quorum whenever you want to. Let us try it on. I do not propose to come up here night after night and be bamboozled around [laughter]; for I am talking just as I feel upon this question, and it is time we called a halt and got down to business.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, speaking of demagogues [laughter], these big, coarse, broad-mouthed fellows, I have heard and seen a good many in this Chamber, but the gentleman from Michigan beats any I have ever seen. [Laughter.] He will come up here and bellow and paw the desk and blow like a porpoise when he is doing nothing in the world but playing to the gallery and playing to his constituents at home, and he knows it, and I know it, and everybody else knows it. [Laughter.]

I want to say to the gentleman that no amount of bellowing and pawing can drive the gentleman from South Carolina from standing up here and opposing extravagant, outrageous, infernal pension bills. And whenever it suits me to call a quorum, I shall not ask the gentleman from Michigan to give me his consent to make the point of no quorum. I will do it because I have a right to do it. I say to the gentleman, and I appeal to every member of this House, that I have not opposed a pension bill in any such way, by calling for a quorum, except in extreme cases. I appeal to the House, and members will sustain me, that I have not attempted to prevent the giving of a pension to a single true, tried old veteran soldier.

I have stood up here, in season and out of season, and I intend to still stand up here in season and out of season, the bellowing of the gentleman from Michigan to the contrary notwithstanding, and continue to oppose giving pensions to deserters, coffee coolers, bounty jumpers, and that class of people coming from his own country or anywhere else. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUCKER. If the gentleman from South Carolina finds me advocating the cause of any bounty jumper, coffee cooler, or deserter, it will be time then for him to turn the vials of his wrath upon me, and not before.

Mr. TALBERT. I am not turning the vials of my indignation upon the gentleman except to say that he is a wide-mouthed, blatant demagogue, and he knows it. I have not accused him of defending the pensioning of bounty jumpers or anything of that kind.

I have no objection to granting a pension to the gentleman's friend. I believe the case is a good one. I intend to vote for it. But I want to say to the gentleman that if he expects to get things through here by bulldozing, he will have to go away from South Carolina to find a man to bulidoze. He can not bulldoze me.

I will not vote against a pension for a true and tried old veteran because somebody in favor of the pension has said some things that possibly he ought not to have said. I believe this is a good bill, and I shall support it. But I, too, am tired of having people come here pawing the desks and tramping up and down the floor, when they do not mean anything at all except demagoguery and an effort to get votes from the old soldiers at home.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRUCKER] has singled me out and charged me with making factious objections and speaking to the galleries, I desire to say this: I really do not believe there is any truth in the statement he made that men here from the North vote against every little claim that happens to come from the South because it does come from that section. The gentleman may do that himself, but I think there are a great many men here who are too big to do a little contemptible thing like that.

Mr. BRUCKER. Let me ask the gentleman from Mississippi this question: Does he say that he has not seen here day after day these private claims filibustered against, defeated, delayed, their consideration avoided time after time by gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I say this: I do not believe that because a claim comes from any particular section of the country gentlemen on the other side have for that reason voted against it or filibustered against it. Many claims coming from every section of the country have been prevented from coming before the House because there has been a general policy not to pay out too much money. But I do not believe that every man on the other side, because he happens to sit on that side of the Chamber, votes against a claim because it comes from the South. What about the Methodist Church bill? What about the Southern claims bill? What about numbers of cases coming here which have been voted for by gentlemen on that side of the Chamber?

When the gentleman undertakes to say that we are "speaking to the galleries," that statement is as untrue as it is contemptible. Why, sir, what a pitiable situation it would be if a member of Congress could not even ask the poor privilege of hearing a report read in order to know the facts of the case upon which he is to cast his vote! As to many of the bills coming before us we do not, when they are brought up, know anything on God's earth about them. We have before us simply a piece of paper with the title of the bill and nothing else.

And when a member gets up in such a case and asks that the report be read, the gentleman thinks he will bulldoze somebody into line, because, forsooth, he happens to sit on that side of the Chamber, and will prevent him from raising the question of a quorum because it might be said that he was doing so because the claim was in favor of an old soldier or because it came from a certain section of the country. I have the same right that every other member of the House has to know what I am voting upon.

The committee generally understands each bill it has reported; but individual members of the House can not be equally well informed. And when these claims come up here, I desire to investigate them, to know something about them. Frequently there is no possible way of obtaining information except by calling for the reading of the report. This I have done repeatedly, and I shall continue to do so whenever I feel like it; and I shall take the liberty of making the point of no quorum whenever I see fit, without consulting the gentleman from Michigan or caring whether it suits him or not. He can pursue his own course, and I shall pursue mine without his advice in any respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY J. BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4973) granting a pension to Mary J. Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary J. Brown, widow of Andrew T. Brown, late a member of unassigned West Virginia Infantry.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Mary J. Brown."

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Insert in line 5, before the word "limitations," the words "provisions and." Also before the word "widow," in line 6, the word "alleged," and add to the bill the words: "and of Company D, One hundred and thirty-third, afterwards Ninth, Virginia Militia, when her marriage to the soldier and present widowhood is established."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask who is in charge of this bill?

Mr. MARSH. This is my bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. There seems to be a great deal of curiosity on the part of members on both sides of the House to know what the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] means when he speaks of "coffee coolers" among the military attachés of the Army. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to say to the gentleman that as long as he has been, or ought to have been, in the Army, he ought to have learned exactly what that term is; and I am afraid that he has "given himself away" by his inquiry and may be a "coffee cooler" himself. I will not answer him, therefore. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments recommended by the committee, which the Clerk will report.

The amendments were read.

Also amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Mary J. Brown."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY A. WISE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 493) granting a pension to Mary A. Wise.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Wise, widow of Capt. Peter Wise, late of Company I, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask if the introducer of this bill is here?

Mr. RAY of New York. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Then I ask for the reading of the report, because I assume that nobody's feelings will be hurt when I make that request, under the circumstances.

The report (by Mr. HENRY of Connecticut) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 493) granting a pension to Mary A. Wise, have examined the same and all the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

The Senate bill proposes to pension, in effect, at $20 per month Mary A. Wise, of Apalachicola, Fla., as widow of Peter Wise, late captain Company I, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

The Senate report (No. 199) states the facts and is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 493) granting a pension to Mary A. Wise, have examined the same and report:

"A similar bill passed the Senate during the Fifty-third Congress, also during the first session of the Fifty fourth Congress, and was reported favorably by the House. The committee recommend the passage of the bill and adopt the said Senate report, which is as follows:

"Peter Wise was captain of Company I, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and in June, 1861, received an injury by his horse falling on him, the pommel of the saddle entering the body below the stomach, producing a fearful lacerated wound. The medical evidence on file shows that the abdominal muscles were ruptured, and that in healing adhesions formed which greatly interfered with both walking and stooping, the parts continuing tender on pressure, and the wearing of an abdominal support being a constant necessity. This condition of things continued until the death of the soldier, his health gradually failing. The medical examiners of the Pension Office certified that 'he is growing weaker every year from the effects of the injury.'

"The soldier died from a malignant carbuncle on the neck, and the widow's claim for pension was rejected on the ground that the death was not the result of the accident for which soldier was pensioned. Among the papers on file in the Pension Office is an affidavit from Joseph D. Bush, M. D., of Apalachicola, Fla., as follows:

"'I knew Peter Wise five years prior to his death. He suffered from a wound of the abdomen, received in the late war, which produced rupture of most of the muscles that have their attachment to the pubes. Said condition incapacitated him for manual labor and gradually drew upon his general health until his blood became so impoverished that a large carbuncle formed on the back of the neck, producing death. My medical opinion is that the injury was the original cause of death.'

"Two other physicians gave similar testimony, the contention being that blood poisoning resulted from the wound, culminating in a carbuncle, a condition of things generally recognized and admitted by medical men as a matter of somewhat frequent occurrence.

"The claimant under this bill is needy and in poor health. She belongs to a patriotic family, her grandfather having served in the wars of the Revolution and of 1812, and three brothers were soldiers in the war of the rebellion, one of whom died in Libby Prison, one died in a hospital, and the other has been an invalid ever since his discharge from the Army.

"Believing that the soldier's death was undoubtedly due to his army service, your committee report the bill back favorably and recommend its passage."

Your committee, after careful examination and consideration, concur in the Senate conclusions and report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. TALBERT. I did not catch from the reading of the report the date when this service began.

Mr. RAY of New York. In 1861.

Mr. TALBERT. What is the amount of the pension proposed?

Mr. RAY of New York. This is the pension for a widow, and the amount is fixed at $20 per month, which is the amount she would receive under the general law.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

J. S. WAGGENER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8906) to pension J. S. Waggener, of Hillsboro, Oreg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll of the Government the name of J. S. Waggener, father of Joseph B. Waggener, Company B, Third Iowa Infantry, and of Rufus Waggener, Company B, Third Iowa Infantry, and of Houston Waggener, of Company G, Fifteenth Iowa Infantry, and of Willis Waggener, of the Ninth Regiment Iowa Cavalry, and allow him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

In lines 5 and 4 strike out the words "of the Government."

In line 5, after "Waggener," insert the word "dependent."

In line 10 strike out the word "allow" and insert in lieu thereof the word 'pay."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to J. S. Waggener."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

SAMUEL B. DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7007) to increase the pension of Samuel B. Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws, the name of Samuel B. Davis, of Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and pay him the pension now allowed by law to those who are totally incapacitated for performing manual labor by reason of injuries received or disease contracted in the service of the United States and in line of duty, and who are thereby disabled to such a degree as to require frequent and periodical, though not regular and constant, personal aid and attendance of another person, as provided by an act to establish an intermediate rate of pension between $30 and $72 per month, approved July 14, 1892.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Strike out all after the word "him," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, it does not appear from the reading of the report what the increase is in this particular case.

Mr. RAY of New York. The increase is from $36 per month, as proposed by the bill, to $50.

Mr. SULLIVAN. It does not appear what this pensioner is getting now. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to state the facts in connection with it; or perhaps it would be better to have the report read.

Mr. RAY of New York. The report, Mr. Chairman, sets forth all the facts. Let it be read.

The report (by Mr. MIERS of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7007) granting an increase of pension to Samuel B. Davis, have examined the same and the evidence, and respectfully report:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $36 to $50 per month the pension of Samuel B. Davis, of Newport, Ind.

This soldier, who had a long and faithful service as private and corporal in Company C, Eighteenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, was granted a pension of $36 per month by special act, which did not contain the provision that same was subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and hence the Bureau finds itself without power to increase this soldier's pension to $50, an amount it concedes he is entitled to. The soldier's disability has largely increased and the evidence is abundant and satisfactory—yes, absolutely conclusive—that he now suffers a disability wholly of service origin by reason of gunshot wounds which totally disable him, except mentally and in the use of one arm and one leg, and that he is in a condition requiring the frequent and periodical aid and attendance of another.

The affidavits annexed fully describe the soldier's condition, and we will not repeat here. He is needy and the case in every aspect is a worthy one, and Congressional action is absolutely necessary.

The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

Strike out all after the word "him" in line 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

STATE OF INDIANA, County of Vermilion, ss:

In the matter of increase of pension of Samuel B. Davis, late Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, personally came before me, John T. Lowe, clerk of Vermilion circuit court, in and for aforesaid county and State, Samuel B. Davis, aged 55 years, a citizen of the town of Newport, county of Vermilion, State of Indiana, and who, being duly sworn, declared in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

I am the claimant in this case. I was a corporal in Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, during the war of 1861-1865. I am now receiving a pension of $36 per month under the act approved February 28, 1877. On the 14th day of July, 1892, an act was approved granting an intermediate rate between $30 and $72 per month to pensioners who required frequent and periodical, though not constant, attendance of another person.

I believe my condition entitles me to the rate paid under the act of July 14, 1892, and have made two applications to the Commissioners of Pensions, one under Hon. William Lochren and the last one under Hon. H. Clay Evans, and was rejected each time on the ground that I was getting all I was entitled to under the law. I do not think so or I would not appeal to Congress for relief.

My crippled condition is such that I can not dress myself without assistance. My left ankle joint is stiff, greatly enlarged, and by reason of suppuration it has to be dressed daily. There is not a minute in the day that I do not suffer more or less with my ankle, and occasionally undergo surgical operations, and at times take to my bed on account of intense suffering that is almost unbearable. I can not wear a shoe either winter or summer on my lame foot. My leg is withered clear up to my body and is not one-half as large as my right leg.

My right arm is anchylosed at the elbow joint, and the arm stands at a half angle. My hand and fingers are also anchylosed so that I can not close my hand more than half shut. On account of the crooked condition of my arm I can not wear an overcoat in cold weather, and have not been able to wear one since my discharge from the service. Owing to the condition of my right arm, I can not even raise a glass of water to my mouth with that arm, and have to feed myself with my left arm.

My present crippled condition is a result of measles contracted in the Army while on a forced march after General Price's army in Missouri, late in the fall of the year. I could not be properly cared for, and in consequence took a violent cold, which caused the disease to settle in my limbs.

Witness my hand this 25th day of December, 1897.

SAMUEL B. DAVIS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, clerk of the Vermilion circuit court, this 25th day of December, 1897.

JOHN T. LOWE,
Clerk of Vermilion Circuit Court.

STATE OF INDIANA, County of Vermilion, ss:

In the matter of increase of pension of Samuel B. Davis, late Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, personally came before me, John T. Lowe, clerk of the Vermilion circuit court in and for aforesaid county and State, M. L. Hall, age 51 years, a citizen of the town of Newport, county of Vermilion, State of Indiana, and who, being duly sworn, declared in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

I have been the family physician of Samuel B. Davis, the above-named claimant, for the past twenty years. His present physical condition is such that I believe him to be honestly entitled to $50 per month. His left ankle joint is a great source of pain and trouble to him. I have frequently lanced it, when it would become swollen and inflamed, to relieve him of the intense misery he was suffering. It suppurates continually. The ankle joint is anchylosed at a right angle with the axis of the limb. There is great enlargement of the bony structure about the joint. The entire limb has withered and shrunken so it is not more than half its normal size and is useless. The ankle joint is very tender and painful, and no weight can be borne upon the foot.

It swells much during the day and reduces at night when he lies down. This foot and leg is only a sort of useless dead weight and of no practical use to claimant. The ankle suppurates and has to be dressed daily. He can not wear a shoe on that foot. His right arm is anchylosed at the elbow joint and bent at a right angle with the axis of the humerus. The entire limb is atrophied. The hand and fingers are anchylosed so he can not close his hand more than one-half. These disabilities are all permanent and a result of claimant's service in the Army.

On account of the peculiar shape of his right arm he can not wear an overcoat. He can not use his right hand to feed himself by reason of said ailments, and therefore has to have the help of some one to assist him.

Witness my hand this 25th day of December, 1897.

In the matter of increase of pension of Samual B. Davis, late Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, personally came before me, John T. Lowe, clerk of the Vermilion circuit court in and for aforesaid county and State, William F. Thornton, age 44 years, a citizen of the town of Newport, county of Vermilion, State of Indiana, and who, being duly sworn, declared in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

I am deputy postmaster at Newport, Ind., and reside on an adjoining lot to Samuel B. Davis, late of Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers. My acquaintance with him dates back more than twenty-three years. He is badly crippled in the right arm and left leg, and has always been compelled to get about on crutches ever since I knew him. His left ankle joint is very painful to him. It is greatly enlarged and he frequently has to undergo a surgical operation to get relief, by reason of an abscess forming near and at the joint. The joint suppurates and has to be dressed daily.

By reason of its tender, painful, and swollen condition he can not wear a shoe on the foot of his lame leg. I never saw him have an overcoat on the coldest day in the year, because he can not put one on, on account of his crooked arm, which is bent at a half angle. He can not bathe himself nor feed himself with his right hand. He has to walk on one leg and crutches and feed himself with his left hand.

He can not dress himself, but has to have some one else to assist him. I believe him to be deserving of a much higher rate of pension than he is now paid.

Witness my hand this 25th day of December, 1897.

Clerk Vermilion Circuit Court.

STATE OF INDIANA, County of Vermilion, ss:

In matter of increase of pension of Samuel B. Davis, late Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, personally came before me, John T. Lowe, clerk of Vermilion circuit court, in and for aforesaid county and State, Enoch L. Canady, aged 43 years, a citizen of the town of Newport, county of Vermilion, State of Indiana, and who, being duly sworn, declared in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

I have been acquainted with Samuel B. Davis, late of Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, since 1863. Ever since I first knew him he has been compelled to use crutches in getting about. He is also badly crippled in his right arm, and by reason of the crooked condition of said arm he is unable to wear an overcoat or feed himself with that arm. His elbow joint is stiff, and also his hand and fingers, so that he can not close his hand more than half shut.

His left ankle joint is greatly enlarged, swollen, and inflamed, and constantly suppurates. It has to be dressed daily. I have frequently bathed him and trimmed his toe nails, because he can not perform that duty himself or dress himself. I know he is a great sufferer from his lame ankle joint, which becomes so painful at times he has to have a surgical operation performed before he gets relief. At times the misery is so intense that he has to take to his bed until he gets better. All these facts I know of my own personal knowledge.

Witness my hand this 25th day of December, 1897.

ENOCH L. CANADY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, clerk of Vermilion circuit court, this 25th day of December, 1897.

[SEAL.] JOHN T. LOWE,
Clerk Vermilion Circuit Court.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, this report I think is hardly satisfactory. I would like a further statement from the gentleman in charge of the bill before we act upon the matter.

Mr. RAY of New York. This amount, I will state to the gentleman from South Carolina, was originally granted to the pensioner by a special act of Congress; but there was an error in framing the bill, which did not provide that the pension should be "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law." Recently, the disabilities of the pensioner having increased, he filed a bill for a new rating.

An examination was made, and if the original bill had been properly drawn the pensioner would have received the increase without any trouble. It was necessary, however, by reason of this informality in this provision of the bill, to come here and get the pension he now asks for. The Pension Office rates the disability at $50 per month, but we have to pass the bill because of the failure to insert the provision to which I refer in the original bill.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if all of the bills that are presented before the committee are discussed before it and examined carefully in reference to their details?

Mr. RAY of New York. Every bill that is presented before the committee is carefully considered and thoroughly discussed, and let me tell the gentleman how we do it. In the first place, I send all of the papers with every case for examination to the Pension Office. I have a clerk detailed from the office whose duty it is to attend to that particular branch of the service. All of these cases are sent by him and examined by him, unless I do it myself, and I will state to the gentleman that in most cases I do examine them carefully myself rather than submit the matter to anyone else.

Then that statement of what those papers show, with any additional evidence, is placed before a subcommittee of three. That subcommittee of three report it to the full committee. They read their report and these facts and statements to the full committee. Then the full committee consider it, and if they do not lay the bill on the table, they report it to the House after agreeing to the amount.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. And this bill passed the committee without a dissenting vote.

Mr. RAY of New York. And the Pension Bureau has fixed the amount at $50, which he would be entitled to under the general law if the Pension Office considered the fact of service origin to be conclusively established.

Mr. SULLIVAN. How do you arrive at the amount? Do you fix it at the amount which it is necessary for him to have in order to have a comfortable living, or do you fix it upon what he would earn if he were well, or how?

Mr. RAY of New York. It depends upon his earnings and the surroundings and the care that is required, and whether he has anybody to help him and anybody dependent on him. We take into consideration all the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments recommended by the committee.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

OLIVIA BETTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2695) granting a pension to Olivia Betton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Olivia Betton, widow of the late Thomas F. Betton, surgeon, United States Volunteers, and pay her at the rate of $30 per month on and after the passage of this act.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read:

In line 6, after the word "her," insert "a pension." In the same line strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "seventeen."

In line 7 strike out all after the word "month."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. HENRY of Connecticut) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2695) granting a pension to Olivia Betton, have examined the same and all the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $8 to $17 per month the pension of Olivia Betton, of Fordham, N. Y., widow of Thomas F. Betton.

Soldier served as acting assistant or contract surgeon at Cuyler General Hospital, Germantown, Pa., from November 10, 1862, to May 14, 1864; at Lincoln General Hospital, Washington, D. C., from May 16, 1864, to February 23, 1865; as surgeon First United States Veteran Volunteer Infantry, from February 23, 1865, to March 1, 1866, and as acting assistant surgeon at post hospital, Harpers Ferry, W. Va., from March 2, 1866, to May 25, 1866. His service in each instance was honorably terminated.

There is no record of disability or treatment during his military service. He died May 21, 1875.

R. N. Downs, M. D., Germantown, Pa., testifies:

"His fatal sickness beginning in January, 1874, and continuing until May, 1875. I have no means of knowing exactly when his last illness began, as I kept no memorandum of my visits to a brother physician, and hence can not say when I first prescribed for him. His disease was softening of the spinal cord and consequent paraplegia and paralysis of the sphincters of bowels and bladder; and he was under my constant observation until his death."

There is no connection shown between the death cause and service. The widow, who was married to soldier June 16, 1864, and while he was in the service, is about 62 years of age, and has no income or means of support aside from a pension of $8 per month which she is drawing under the act of June 27, 1890.

Soldier's rank as acting assistant or contract surgeon was the same as first lieutenant, and as surgeon, that of major.

While it is not proved, and can not be, that Surgeon Betton died of disease contracted in the service, your committee are almost morally certain that such is the fact.

In any event the fact that this war widow, now advanced in years, is in necessitous circumstances, makes this a proper case for Congressional action.

This bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass, when amended as follows:

In line 6, after the word "her," insert "a pension." In the same line strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "seventeen."

In line 7 strike out all after the word "month."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I gather from the reading of that report that there is no direct evidence that the husband of this woman died from injuries received in the service. The committee state that they have been unable to find any proof that he died from injuries received in the service, and yet they say it is morally certain that he did. Now, according to my weak judgment, that is a very indefinite report upon which to come here and ask for the increase of a pension from $8 to $17.

It does look to me that when the committee bring in a bill here asking for an increase they ought to have better reasons to give than the mere statement that they are morally certain that such and such is the case. That is an indefinite expression. I submit that this bill ought not to pass unless accompanied by more evidence to show the fact that this woman's husband died from injuries received in the service or that his death could be traced to service origin.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I think there was a rule adopted that no bill should be considered unless the member who introduced it is present. I understand that rule has been violated in the last two cases.

The CHAIRMAN. That rule was adopted by the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I make that point on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is sustained, if it is true that this bill was introduced by a member who is not present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I suggest that the same thing is true as to the preceding bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. The preceding bill was a Senate bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I was misinformed as to that, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has no means of knowing whether the member who introduced the bill is present or not.

Mr. RAY of New York. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], who introduced this bill, is not here, and he is very busy on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am willing to waive it as to this, but hereafter I shall insist that at this and other meetings the rule shall be enforced, because the law favors the diligent, and it is but right that those who introduce pension bills should be here to take care of them and help to make a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. TALBERT. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with an unfavorable recommendation, because we have no evidence, except that the committee say they are morally sure, and they can not tell why they are morally sure.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman knows that there is a vast difference between being able to bring into court the legal proof in all cases, to show every fact, and the proving of such circumstances as make you morally and reasonably certain that the fact exists. Now, I can not bring in any solid evidence to satisfy you that any soil or rocks or metals exist in the moon. Nobody ever saw them.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, we are not dealing with the moon. We are down here now.

Mr. RAY of New York. You are running off to the moon.

Mr. TALBERT. You went to the moon, and I have had to follow you and bring you back. Now, do not go again.

Mr. RAY of New York. There is a vast amount of evidence which we examined, and while there are defects in the evidence which prevent the making out of a perfect legal case, still the facts and circumstances proved here are such as to make it certain enough to satisfy any member, and such as did satisfy every member of the committee, that this man died as the result of his service. That is what we mean by moral certainty. We found the proof was beyond a reasonable doubt—every member of that committee.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. I move that the bill be laid aside with an unfavorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and the motion was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that as each bill is reached from now on the Clerk will call the name of the member who introduced the bill so that if he be not present the bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM H. H. WRIGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 732) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Wright, of McPherson, Kans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. H. Wright, of McPherson, Kans., late of Company G, Thirty-fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and rate him at $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now drawing.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8, after the word "and," strike out the words "rate him at" and insert the words "pay him a pension at the rate of."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

C. S. ALVORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2231) granting a pension to C. S. Alvord.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what has become of the next bill on the Calendar, 604? I have been attending this session to-night, and I am interested in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House these bills are passed over to-night without consideration.

Mr. HICKS. When did the House make such an order?

The CHAIRMAN. To-night, while the House was in session.

Mr. HICKS. Why was such an order made?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is bound by order of the House.

Mr. HICKS. My not being here, I do not think I would be bound by any rule of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of C. S. Alvord, late a private in Company D, Fourth United States Infantry, at the rate of $12 per month, to commence from the passage of this act.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "of," strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "eight."

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to speak on this bill now being considered, but I want to have a little understanding about this Calendar No. 604. That is a meritorious measure, fully as meritorious as any pension bill being considered. This man did not desert until January, 1866, after serving four years, and he was a man who served faithfully during the entire war. It is very unfair to myself as well as to other members of the House to have meritorious claims, just as meritorious as the pension claim being considered, passed over and not considered; and I want to know "where I am at" and what will be the result as to this bill, anyway?

Mr. STALLINGS. You are left.

Mr. RAY of New York. In answer to the gentleman's inquiry as to "where he is at," I will state that he is out of order.

Mr. HICKS. There are very few bills that go to the Committee on Military Affairs, and when they go there they are thoroughly sifted; and whenever they get on the Calendar, as a rule, they have merit in them.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I would suggest to the gentleman that he address his remarks to that bill when the House is in session, and not in the committee, because the committee can not override the rule of the House. I simply ask him to withhold his remarks on this bill and not to stop pension legislation.

Mr. HICKS. I shall with the understanding that as soon as we get into the regular session of the House I propose to ask unanimous consent to have this bill considered.

Mr. RAY of New York. All right.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE W. D. WADE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7672) to increase the pension of George W. D. Wade.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the invalid pension roll of the United States the name of George W. D. Wade, late of Company A, First Illinois Volunteers, in Mexican war, at the rate of $20 a month, in lieu of what he is now receiving, subject to the limitations of the general pension laws.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report. By whom was the bill introduced?

The CHAIRMAN. By the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The report (by Mr. BROMWELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7672) increasing the pension of George W. D. Wade, have considered the same and report:

The claimant was a private in Company A, First Illinois Volunteers, and as such served from June 18, 1846, to June 17, 1847, in the war with Mexico. He is now receiving the pension of $12 per month provided by the Mexican war acts of January 29, 1887, and January 5, 1893.

The testimony on file at the Pension Bureau, and a petition before your committee signed by 44 citizens of Eddyville, Iowa, show that Mr. Wade is over 80 years old, almost blind, and unable to wait upon himself; also that his pension is all he and his invalid wife have to depend upon for their support. It is also shown that he is a most highly respected and worthy man.

There are several precedents for the proposed legislation, and in view of the facts recited above your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY E. TAYLOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8904) to pension Mrs. Mary E. Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to place upon the pension roll the name of Mrs. Mary E. Taylor, widow of William H. Taylor, who served in Captain Goodwyn's company during the Creek war, and that she be pensioned according to the provisions of the pension laws.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "company," insert the words "Alabama Volunteers."

After the word "laws," in line 8, add the words "at the rate of $8 per month."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARTHA ANN HYNES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3345) granting a pension to Martha Ann Hynes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Martha Ann Hynes, of Little Rock, Ark., widow of Andrew R. Hynes, deceased, second lieutenant of Company C, Fifth Regiment Louisiana Volunteers, Mexican war, and to pay her the sum of $12 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SIMPSON EVERETT STILWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 496) granting a pension to Simpson Everett Stilwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Simpson Everett Stilwell, late scout and guide in the United States Army, at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "twenty" in the sixth line and insert the word "twelve;" so that it will read: "$12 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MICHAEL BASSETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 135) for the relief of Michael Bassett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to place the name of Michael Bassett, a soldier of the Mexican war, late of the First Regiment of Michigan Volunteers, on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Michael Bassett."

Add after the word "laws," in line 7, the words "and pay him a pension of $8 per month."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY SCHNETBERG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7596) granting an increase of pension to Henry Schnettberg, of Indiana, Pa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject otherwise to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry Schnettberg, late a private in Company B, Second Pennsylvania Volunteers (Mexican war), and pay him a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, that bill was introduced by Mr. ROBBINS, and he is not here for this reason: He has enlisted and gone to the war. I think we ought to take it up and let it pass. I think he ought to have some consideration from the fact that he has been patriotic and enlisted.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up and considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the bill be taken up and considered, notwithstanding the absence of Mr. ROBBINS who introduced the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend the spelling of claimant's surname to Schnetberg.

Add after the word "month," in line 8, the words "the same to be in lieu of the pension now drawn by him."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bills to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. LACEY, Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. CONNOLLY, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration sundry bills, some with amendments and some without, and had ordered them reported to the House with a recommendation that they do pass.

Mr. RAY of New York. I suppose the Calendar of Unfinished Business will first be taken up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar of Unfinished Business.

BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles were respectively taken from the Calendar of Unfinished Business, the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House agreed to, the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 3991) for the relief of Henry J. Fleming;

A bill (H. R. 4691) to increase the pension of Charles Hoffman;

A bill (H. R. 6785) restoring Julia L. Roberts, late Julia L. Doty, to the pension roll (title amended);

A bill (H. R. 6388) granting a pension to J. R. Mathers (title amended);

A bill (H. R. 6242) to restore the name of Dr. J. C. Kinkle to the pension roll (title amended);

A bill (H. R. 6616) to remove the charge of desertion against John Phelon, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 3790) to remove the charge of desertion against John Willoughby; and

A bill (H. R. 7561) to correct the military record of William P. Brassington.

JAMES A. STODDARD.

The next business on the Calendar of Unfinished Business was the bill (H. R. 3071) for the relief of James A. Stoddard.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that in this case, where it is proposed to remove the charge of desertion, the facts as disclosed in the report show that this man was guilty of stealing knives and forks and other things while in the service, and he ran away to avoid punishment. Having deserted the Army under these circumstances, he is now seeking to have his disabilities removed, so that later he may come in and be placed on the pension roll.

I want gentlemen to understand that if they vote for this bill they are voting to remove the charge of desertion incurred under these discreditable circumstances; that the charge of desertion is based on the fact, as the proof shows, that this man had been stealing knives and forks—in other words, had been engaged in petty thieving—and ran away because his superior officer threatened to punish him in some way.

A MEMBER. Whose bill is this?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do not know whose bill it is; but I remember the case. When the bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House, I called for the reading of the report, which shows that those were the facts. This man was a knife-and-fork thief, and ran away from the Army because he feared punishment; and now it is sought to remove the charge of desertion from his military record.

Mr. HICKS. If those are the facts, such a bill ought not to pass.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The record shows that such are the facts.

Mr. HICKS. No man ought to have his military record cleared if he left the Army under circumstances like those.

Mr. TALBERT. There is an amendment, I believe, attached to the bill providing that no pay or emoluments shall accrue on account of the passage of the act.

Mr. SULLIVAN. That clause is in all, or nearly all, of these bills. But that does not meet the point of my objection. I am seeking to have the House understand that in voting to correct this man's military record members will vote to put him in an attitude to draw a pension hereafter notwithstanding the fact that he was caught stealing and ran away to escape punishment.

Mr. HOWE. As I understand, a soldier, in the event of the removal of the charge of desertion, does not receive a pension. The only effect of our action is to remove a cloud that may hang over the man's life—to give him a chance to stand up free from any odium which may have unjustly attached to him. Certainly we ought to be glad to vote such a measure of relief. In doing so we are not voting to give the man a pension.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The point is this, as I understand—and if I misunderstand, I want to be put right: The law is that when you have passed an act of this kind, the beneficiary can go on and apply for a pension; and if there is no other legal difficulty to prevent, he may be placed on the pension roll. The moment you amend his record, that moment he stands on the same plane with any other soldier. Thus you place him in such attitude that he can be placed on that roll which every man ought to regard as a roll of honor, but which will no longer be such if men of this sort are placed upon it.

Mr. LOWE. May I ask if this bill was not favorably reported by the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SULLIVAN. It was reported by the Committee of the Whole favorably. The bill was discussed three weeks ago.

Mr. RAY of New York. This bill comes from the Committee on Military Affairs. I have looked into the matter with some care, and I have read the report carefully.

Mr. EVANS. This was a young boy under 20——

Mr. HICKS. Can the gentleman from New York explain the case to the House?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask for the reading of the report. That will explain the matter more fully and satisfactorily.

Mr. RAY of New York. Very well: let the report be read.

Mr. HICKS. We ought to know something of this before undertaking to pass upon it.

The report (by Mr. BROWNLOW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3071) for the relief of James A. Stoddard, have carefully considered the same and beg leave to report as follows:

James A. Stoddard was enlisted June 1, 1861, and mustered into service October 11, 1861, as a private in Company B, Eighth Wisconsin Infantry, to serve three years. He reenlisted January 2, 1864, as a veteran, to serve three years, and appears to have served faithfully until February 3, 1865, when he is reported to have deserted.

The circumstances of his alleged desertion, as given by the testimony of some five of his comrades, and which circumstances are practically confirmed by the report from the War Department, are as follows: While his regiment was at Iuka, Miss., about February 1, 1865, he was detailed for duty with a foraging party, and at the request of members of his mess he "captured" some knives and forks from a citizen.

Complaint being made to the commanding general, that officer ordered an investigation, at the same time remarking that he "would make an example" of the guilty man if he could be found. This threat of the general being construed by Stoddard into a fear of being shot, he ran away in an effort, as he believed, to save his life. When the President's proclamation of March 11, 1865, regarding deserters was issued he was at home, sick in bed, and so continued until the war was over.

The testimony of Stoddard's comrades on file shows him to have been a most brave and gallant soldier, who had participated in every battle in which his regiment was engaged, and that up to the time of committing this petty misdemeanor he had never been under arrest. There is also the testimony of citizens and neighbors that since the war Mr. Stoddard has been a most excellent citizen, having filled many positions of honor and trust by the choice of his fellow-men.

Your committee therefore very much regret that this brave soldier and excellent citizen should for so many years have been compelled to rest under this stigma upon his excellent military and civil record, and therefore report the bill favorably and recommend that it do pass with the following amendment:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. HICKS. I withdraw any objection I have made to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments were considered, the amendments severally agreed to, and the bills as amended—with title amended where required—were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and passed, namely:

A bill (H. R. 5046) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Lawrence P. Ressler;

A bill (H. R. 4332) to correct the military record of Isaac Alger;

A bill (H. R. 6379) granting a pension to Joseph C. Berry, alias Joseph White;

A bill (H. R. 4973) granting a pension to Mary J. Brown;

A bill (H. R. 619) granting an increase of pension to Frank Rockwith;

A bill (H. R. 906) granting a pension to Zolman Tyrrell, imbecile and dependent son of Lewis R. Tyrrell, late Company A, First New York Engineers;

A bill (H. R. 8606) to pension J. S. Waggener, of Hillsboro, Oreg.;

A bill (H. R. 7007) to increase the pension of Samuel B. Davis;

A bill (H. R. 2695) granting a pension to Olivia Betton;

A bill (S. 732) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Wright, of McPherson, Kans.;

A bill (H. R. 2231) granting a pension to C. S. Alvord;

A bill (H. R. 8904) to pension Mrs. Mary E. Taylor;

A bill (S. 496) granting a pension to Simpson Everett Stilwell;

A bill (H. R. 135) for the relief of Michael Bassett;

A bill (H. R. 7596) granting an increase of pension to Henry Schnettberg, of Indiana, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 3596) granting a pension to Mrs. Bettie Gresham;

A bill (H. R. 3071) for the relief of James A. Stoddard;

A bill (S. 509) granting an increase of pension to Lafayette Tibbetts;

A bill (H. R. 7673) for the relief of William E. Anderson; and

A bill (S. 1476) granting an increase of pension to Louise M. Rice, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Samuel A. Rice.

A bill (H. R. 7672) to increase the pension of George W. D. Wade;

A bill (S. 3345) granting an increase of pension to Martha Ann Hynes;

A bill (S. 498) granting a pension to Mary A. Wise.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to consider the bill (H. R. 604)——

Mr. RAY of New York. If these bills are disposed of, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion.

Mr. HICKS. They are disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that there is no unfinished business, as the Chair understands it, now before the House.

Mr. RAY of New York. I desire to move to reconsider the several votes which have been taken upon the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole, and to lay that motion on the table.

There was no objection, and the motion was agreed to.

JAMES J. FLUKE.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to appeal to the fairness of the House. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6649) to remove the charge of desertion against James J. Fluke. It will only take a minute.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. When the House first met this evening, I asked unanimous consent that for to-night all bills for the removal of charges of desertion be passed over. That order was granted. We then went into Committee of the Whole, and have gone through with a series of bills, and have done a lot of work in Committee of the Whole. Now, I submit that it is not in order at this time to grant unanimous consent for the present consideration of bills of that kind. I make that point.

Mr. HICKS. Well, I have just this to say——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman objects.

Mr. HICKS. I ask if that is to be construed by the Chair into an objection?

Mr. TALBERT. I shall not object, but I make that point of order and ask the Chair to rule upon it. I think it is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that that is an objection.

Mr. HICKS. Does the Chair hold that the point of order is well taken?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. HICKS. But my friend distinctly states that he does not object, and I am satisfied that if he will hear the merits of this case he will not object, nor will any other gentleman on the floor of this House. I trust the Chair will not hold that.

Mr. TALBERT. I will withdraw the point of order, if it is construed to be an objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the gentleman's proposition. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion against James J. Fluke, late member of Battery D, First United States Artillery, and grant him an honorable discharge as of date January 28, 1863.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommended the following amendment:

Insert at the end of the bill the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowances shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HICKS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MRS. BETTY GRESHAM.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of little cases which I desire to have considered. I desire to be absent from the city on Friday night, and I ask unanimous consent that they be disposed of. They are cases of old ladies in indigent circumstances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. The first one is the bill (H. R. 3596) granting a pension to Mrs. Betty Gresham.

Mr. RAY of New York. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this is a pension bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; an Indian war pension, at $8 a month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Mrs. Bettie Gresham, widow of Davis C. Gresham, who served in the Georgia Volunteers during the Indian war of 1836, and allow the said Mrs. Bettie Gresham a pension rated at $20 per month.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, was read:

In line 8 strike out "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof "eight."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10.30 o'clock having arrived, the House, under the rule, stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4534) to grant a pension to Ovid G. Sparks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. ELKINS submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures; which were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED ISSUE OF TREASURY NOTES.

Mr. STEWART. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to House bill 10100, the bill to raise revenues for the prosecution of the war. I propose to strike out sections 27 and 28, which provide for a loan, and to insert a substitute.

I will state that my amendment is modeled after the act of 1860, providing for the issuance of Treasury notes payable one year after date with interest, but receivable for all Government dues. I offer it because I am anxious that the questions involved between those who favor the gold standard and those who take an opposite view shall not be raised. The issuance of long bonds is the favorite measure with those who have capital and desire investment.

The issuance of greenbacks or Treasury notes is the measure most favored by those who believe we ought to have more money. But inasmuch as it is improper to discuss the questions involved between the two parties pending war, I offer an amendment which is in precise conformity with the practice of the Government at all times previous to 1861, when an emergency existed. In the case of the Mexican war, and in all other cases, the Government issued Treasury notes of this character. I ask that the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance for their consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

BONDS RETIRED BETWEEN 1865 AND 1869.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate the aggregate amount of bonds retired between August 31, 1865, and July 1, 1869, and what amount in the aggregate of premium was paid in the purchase of said bonds over and above their face value.

SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to make to the Senate a report showing the coining value of the silver bullion in the Treasury, and the amount of the seigniorage, and the amount of the existing Treasury notes issued in its purchase, and the amount of standard silver dollars coined under the act of July 14, 1890, and the amount of the seigniorage, and the amount of Treasury notes redeemed in such dollars and retired.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7441) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 7, 12, 13, and 19.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17, and agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
GEORGE C. PERKINS,
EDWARD MURPHY, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES A. HEMENWAY,
MAHLON PITNEY,
THOMAS C. McRAE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to ask the Senator from California what has become of the amendment with reference to patents taken out by army officers, which provides that the Government may use such patents and the officer may recover the value of the patent in the Court of Claims?

Mr. PERKINS. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that the conferees, after duly considering the same, decided to strike it out, for the reason that a similar amendment to the naval appropriation bill had been defeated in the House, and we were assured by the conferees on the part of the House that this provision would meet a similar fate if they were to permit it to remain in the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to state that I think the conference committee did quite right under the circumstances in receding from the amendment and that the Naval Committee did wisely in receding from a similar amendment upon the naval appropriation bill, because it was not worth while, under the circumstances, to delay either of the bills to remove misapprehension in connection with those two amendments. There has been so much misapprehension on the subject, however, that I desire to make of record a few facts.

It seems to have been considered by many persons that these two amendments granted additional privileges to army and navy officers to recover for the value of inventions for which they had taken out patents. That is an entire mistake. The two amendments were in fact limitations upon the existing rights of army and navy officers. To-day, as I understand the law, and I desire to be corrected if I am wrong, there is absolutely no limitation upon any army or navy officer who chooses to take out a patent for an invention applicable to the service of the Army or Navy. That is correct, in the first place.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. In a moment. Secondly, there is no limitation whatever upon the power of the heads of the Departments to reimburse army and navy officers for patents which are used by the Government.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Washington first claimed my attention.

Mr. WILSON. I did not rise to ask a question of the Senator. I rose to a question of order. I want to hear the Senator from New Hampshire, and it is simply impossible, owing to the confusion in the rear of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The point of order is well taken, and the Chair will appeal to the Senate to be in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly the force and object of the amendment have been misunderstood. It was intended as a limitation and not as an extension of privilege on the part of inventors. I do not think there is so much danger of any Secretary of his own motion paying extravagant sums to inventors as there is danger that the constant practice of coming to Congress for large sums will be kept up until a bill containing that provision or something like it passes. That, to my mind, is the great benefit of the provision. I think it is a wise one and ought to pass, and that it will pass when we get out of the present emergency. It will prevent the constant importunity of inventors who come to us to get propositions in appropriation bills and otherwise for large indemnification for their work. I do not think any Secretary is likely to pay them very much without referring them to Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Maine what a Secretary of the Navy is to do if, in the building of ships, he finds it necessary in the interest of the Government to use a patent taken out by a naval officer? He has no right to use the patent without compensation, and as the law now stands he may use a part of the appropriation made by Congress for the thing itself, to pay the naval officer royalty upon the patent, and necessarily he must do so.

Mr. HALE. There is some danger of that, although I do not think that would be a great evil. As I said, I think the greater evil is that inventors are continually coming to us for indemnity. This provision, which ought to be passed at the proper time, is a very guarded one, and sends them to the court, where they should go, and the Government will have the benefit of all the opportunities which the inventor has in the Departments to make his invention.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish merely to say further that a bill substantially like these two provisions passed the House of Representatives without any objection within a year, and that that bill, as modified upon the suggestion of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, is a very judicious method of disposing of the subject. It adopts the rule of the English Admiralty that the Government may use any patent taken upon an invention made by a naval officer, and may compensate the naval officer therefor, but that in determining what is a just compensation to the naval officer all the circumstances surrounding the discovery shall be considered. If the naval officer had opportunities by reason of his naval service for making the discovery, if he had the assistance of the Government in perfecting and developing his invention, that is all to be taken into account, and he is to be paid only such sum as under the circumstances may be fair and just.

Now, the provisions of the British Admiralty, the provisions of the bill that passed the House of Representatives within a year, and the provisions of these two Senate amendments of the House bill are in limitation of the right of officers of the Government, in regulation of the exercise of the rights of the Government, and are not measures designed, as seems to have been thought by some, to put large sums into the pockets of army and navy officers for inventions made by them which are useful to the Government. The contrary was the purpose and effect of these two amendments, which ought to be embodied in a law at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. PERKINS. The Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Appropriations, and the subcommittee upon fortifications and ordnance were in full accord in believing that the proposed amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire to be a wise and a judicious one and that it should be embodied in a law upon our statute books. But the simple question for us to consider at this time was one of expediency. This fortification appropriation bill, carrying over $9,000,000, has now been in conference for nearly six weeks, and we thought it should not be longer delayed. After discussing the matter fully, realizing that the House conferees would not agree with the Senate conferees, we decided to recede from the amendment, and therefore have reported it to the Senate this morning for their final action. I trust the report will be concurred in.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from California will furnish the Senate a short statement of the items in the bill on which we have receded.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state to the Senator from Maryland that the Senate receded from amendment No. 1, of which the Senator from Maryland was the author. That amendment placed under the supervision of the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications the expenditure of all the great sum of money appropriated by the Government for fortifications and ordnance. We took the testimony of the General Commanding the Army, the Chief of the Engineer Corps, the Chief of Ordnance, and the chiefs of the different bureaus; and after duly considering the weight of their testimony and that of others, we decided that at this time it was inexpedient and impolitic to adhere to that amendment. The Senate conferees therefore recommend that we recede from the amendment.

The next amendment of any importance, which reduces the bill $22,000, is that numbered 18, whereby the Senate appropriated $22,000 for the purpose of buying a patent known as the Gregory-Gerdom gas check for breech-loading guns. It was left, it is true, in the discretion of the Secretary of War; and yet your conferees, after considering it, thought it was not a good time to buy patents. Therefore the bill stands in dollars and cents the same as it passed the Senate, to wit, $9,399,494 less $22,000. The bill, therefore, to-day carries $9,377,494. There were no other changes of any importance. Indeed, those are the only changes, amendment No. 1 and amendment No. 18, which I have described.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask the Senator from California a question. Does not the Army use that gas check now?

Mr. PERKINS. Such was the testimony before your committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. And it expects to continue to use it?

Mr. PERKINS. I so understand.

Mr. HAWLEY. How is it going to continue to use it? I understand that the holders of the patents are willing to sell the use of it for a lump sum. I also understand that the Government beyond all doubt has been able to put it in its guns, and it is exceedingly valuable. The Government must either confiscate it or continue to pay in toll upon each individual gun. The patentee is at liberty to bring suit in the ordinary courts and get judgment against the officer putting one of those checks in; and the officer, if I understand it aright, will then have to ask Congress to reimburse him. Is not that true?

Mr. GORMAN. We can not hear a word on this side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Complaint is made that Senators can not be heard. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to know what the Senator from Connecticut said. I could not hear one word.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was asking a question or two and they were answered. I made the statement that the Government is using that gas check. It is considered exceedingly valuable, and the Government will continue to use it. Where is the patentee's remedy? The owners have offered to take a lump sum for the whole thing. If you go on in retail, you will have to pay a very respectable toll on each gun. The provision that was put in the bill by the Senate was a very sensible one. I do not know the man or anything about it, but I know his gas check is valued very highly; and the Government will have to negotiate a settlement in some way or will pay for the use of the patent at the end of a lawsuit.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, we have been exceedingly liberal in making appropriations on all accounts in the Army and Navy and fortifications appropriation bills; and the two or three provisions that the Senate inserted in those bills with a view of restricting expenditures and keeping them within reasonable bounds to prevent the Government I will not say from being defrauded, but from being imposed upon, have, it seems, been rejected by the coordinate branch or have been stricken out of the bills.

I understand perfectly that in this rush and hurry for the purpose of meeting the public demand these propositions can not receive the consideration that they have had at ordinary times; but I do want to enter my protest now against the Senate receding in all these cases. There are here on this fortification appropriation bill two provisions both intended to be restrictive. The first is as to the expenditures to be made under the Board of Ordnance and Fortification.

The only effect of it was a restriction upon the Department officers, the heads of the bureaus, to see that not only in times of peace but in time of war there should be no extravagance and no corruption. That amendment has been rejected. So with the amendment which I think the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] framed, certainly it was reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, with regard to patents, to fix a rule by which proper compensation could be given to the officers and other employees of the Government who own a patent for an invention that it is necessary to use in the guns of the Navy and the Army.

Under the rule that has prevailed and is prevailing, and which is left open by the rejection of this amendment, which in another place and at another time has been denounced in very severe terms, officers simply transfer their patents to a company or to other individuals, and men of prominence and power, men who love money more than they love their country, have been enabled to reap large rewards for their inventions, whereas the smaller and probably the more important men have never been able to get anything except by coming to Congress.

Under the stress of circumstances both these amendments were rejected, so that the Treasury may continue to be open to them. We passed only a day or two ago, on a report from the Committee on Military Affairs, a provision authorizing purchases to be made by officers of the Department without advertisement and without notice, a most extraordinary provision, one that went away beyond the law of 1861 and all the laws that were passed during the time of the rebellion, for we required at that time the certificate of some high officer of an extraordinary emergency before such purchases could be made.

I want to say to the Senate, to both sides of the Chamber, that you are entering upon a very dangerous line of action, and one entirely unnecessary, when you place it in the hands of subordinate officers and bureau officers to contract any debt that they may see proper. It ought not to be permitted now or at any time. The passage of this bill is, I suppose, a foregone conclusion; it can not be stopped by the Senate now; but at all events I hope that from this time on we will begin to think and act upon the usual business principles that have governed the Government. There is no necessity for hysteria and the opening of the door to that which will come back to plague the country, no matter who controls the Departments. I think the Senate had better delay this bill for twenty-four hours or a week longer if it be necessary, so that a proper provision may be inserted and that the doors shall not be kept wide open.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SANITARIUM AT HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6468) authorizing the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias to erect and maintain a sanitarium and bath house on the Government reservation at the city of Hot Springs, Ark.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUARTERMASTER'S SUPPLIES, ETC.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on House bill 10121, which has come from the House with the request for a conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and accede to the request for a conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

HOMESTEAD AND RIGHT OF WAY IN ALASKA.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that the action of the House of Representatives on the conference report on House bill 5975 may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5975) extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and asking for a further conference with the Senate thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the further conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HANSBROUGH, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. ALLEN were appointed.

STREET PARKING IN THE DISTRICT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5880) to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia control of street parking in said District, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 120) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to effect an adjustment between the United States and the Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company in relation to certain bonds issued by the United States in aid of the construction of said railway.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the bill has been read on a former occasion. Is there objection to its present consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the first amendment reported by the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. GEAR. I will state that there is a minority report accompanying the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the minority report read?

Mr. GEAR. I presume the Senators who made that report would like to have it read.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the reading of the minority report; and I will state that an amendment will be offered in accordance with the recommendations of that report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The views submitted by the minority will be read.

The Secretary read the views of the minority of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, submitted by Mr. MORGAN, Mr. RAWLINS, and Mr. HARRIS March 23, 1898, as follows:

The undersigned, while agreeing with the majority of the committee in referring the settlement of the claims of the United States against the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, in relation to certain bonds issued by the United States in aid of the construction of said railway, to a commission to be composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney-General, believe that it would be to the interests of the Government to fix a minimum sum as a basis for said settlement for the following reasons:

This company was incorporated August 11, 1864, and on September 15, 1868, was consolidated with the Northern Nebraska Air Line Railroad Company. Its main line was opened to public business on February 11, 1869. In 1864 the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company purchased all but a few shares of the common capital stock of the company, and it is now operated as a part of that system.

The main line extends from Sioux City, Iowa, to Fremont, Nebr., a distance of 101.58 miles, and there is a branch from Missouri Valley to California Junction, 5.84 miles in length; there are also 30.75 miles of sidings, making a total length of track 138.17 miles. By act of 1862 (section 14) the Union Pacific Railroad Company was authorized and required to construct a railroad from Sioux City, Iowa, to a point on and so as to connect with the main line of the Union Pacific not farther west than the one hundredth meridian of longitude, the point of junction to be fixed by the President of the United States. This was amended by section 17 of the act of 1864, which released the Union Pacific from the construction of this road and required it to be constructed by a company to be designated by the President, on the same terms as were provided for the construction of the Union Pacific. On December 24, 1864, President Lincoln designated the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company for this purpose, and bonds bearing 6 per cent interest were thereafter issued to aid in its construction, as follows:

Date of issue.	Amount.	Interest begins—	Date of maturity.	To whom delivered.	Number of miles added.
Mar. 16, 1868	$792,000	Mar. 10, 1868	Jan. 1, 1898	J. I. Blair	49.50
Mar. 30, 1868	320,000	Mar. 30, 1868	do	do	20
Mar. 3, 1869	516,320	Mar. 3, 1869	do	do	32.27
Total	1,628,320				101.77

The company is required under the acts to pay 5 per cent of its earnings annually and apply one-half of the compensation for Government transportation on account of the bonds and interest. The excess of interest paid by the United States over all credits amounted on February 1, 1898, to $2,612,388.88, making the balance of debt on that date $4,240,708.88.

The first-mortgage bonds of the company, amounting to $1,628,320, which under the act of 1864 constitute a prior lien to that of the United States, also matured January 1, 1898.

By the acts of 1862 and 1864 this company was also granted in aid of construction 60,000 acres of land. The records of the General Land Office show that to June 30, 1896, there had been patented to the company in the State of Nebraska 37,055.12 acres, and in the State of Iowa 4,343.11 acres; total, 41,398.23 acres of land, all of which had been sold by the company prior to August 1, 1875. Sioux City, Iowa, via California Junction and Fremont, Nebr., are the land-grant termini.

The reports of the commissioner of railroads, based upon statements made by the company now operating said road, show as follows:

Statement of the net earnings of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company for the years 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896, together with the average net earnings for the four years named:

1893	$132,845.73
1894	157,247.71
1895	120,542.61
1896	106,764.93
Total for four years	517,400.98
Average for four years	129,350.24

Government debt February 1, 1898:

Principal	1,628,320.00
Interest	2,612,388.00
Total	4,240,708.00

The average of the net earnings for the last four years, amounting to the sum of $129,350.24, we believe indicates clearly that the value of the property on a basis of 4 per cent is considerably in excess of the sum of $3,000,000, and while from the circumstances of the case it does not seem expedient for the Government to bid the full amount of the debt, and while it will undoubtedly lose a large part, if not all, of the interest, amounting to $2,612,388, there seems no justification or reason for losing any part of the principal of the bonds, and we therefore recommend that the commission be authorized to make such adjustment based upon a minimum payment of the principal of the bonds, amounting to $1,628,320. Certainly this ought to be accepted as a fair and just basis of settlement by the company. While it is true that it is only a disconnected line of road, yet there are other and rival lines seeking outlets in the direction of the Northwest that could be looked to in the event of this offer being rejected by the company and the property being sold under foreclosure.

Congress can not properly part with all right to form a judgment and express an opinion with regard to what should be a fair and just settlement of these great debts, and it will not do to place the matter entirely in the hands of other officials, no matter how highly they may be esteemed and how much dependence can be placed upon their judgment, without some effort to indicate what shall be a basis for such settlement. The Congress of the United States is the direct representative of the people in these matters, and can not and will not be excused if they carelessly or with indifference transfer their duties to other shoulders.

The reports of the Commissioner of Railroads indicate that this piece of road is in excellent condition and in every way competent to perform the work of a first-class road, and that its earnings have been such as to thoroughly justify a demand for a settlement at somewhere near its real value.

This line of road crosses the Missouri River over a bridge which it has been asserted has been constructed by a different corporation and is not subject to the Government lien. This contention surely can not be granted without thorough investigation of the original act of Congress. It can not be supposed that that act contemplated disconnected portions of road connected by the property of a different corporation, but that it provided for a continuous line of road, every part of which should be subject to the Government lien. This has been so held in the case of the Omaha bridge, and should certainly form a strong ground for a claim by the Government to the added value which this bridge gives to the line of road.

The claims made by the debtor company in the case of the Union Pacific Railroad were thoroughly disproved in the final result of the settlement of that company. It was asserted there that the property did not possess the value or justify the payment of the full amount of the debt. It may reasonably be supposed that the claims of the debtor company in this case should not be accepted altogether in the face of the plain facts which are contained in the report of the Commissioner of Railroads.

We therefore recommend that the bill be amended by adding the following:

"That the said commission shall not accept, in the settlement of the debt due the United States, less than the amount of the principal of the bonds paid for such company."

JOHN T. MORGAN.
W. A. HARRIS.
J. L. RAWLINS.

Mr. HARRIS. I now ask that the amendment which I offered some days ago, and which was printed and laid on the table, may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. GEAR. I ask that the amendments to the bill reported by the committee be first read, and then the Senator's amendment can be considered.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the Committee on Pacific Railroads will first be considered.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Pacific Railroads were, in section 1, line 3, after the word "Treasury," to insert "the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney-General;" in line 4, after the word "hereby," to strike out "is" and insert "are;" in line 6, on page 2, before the word "judgment," to strike out "his" and insert "their;" and in line 10, after the word "upon," to strike out "between it and the Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney-General be, and hereby are, authorized and required to negotiate with the Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company, said company being the owner of a line of railroad with terminals at Sioux City, Iowa, and Fremont, Nebr., for a settlement of the latter's obligation with reference to the bonds heretofore issued by the United States in aid of the construction of said railroad, and to make such settlement as shall be in their judgment to the best interest of the United States; and upon the payment into the Treasury of the United States, on behalf of said Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company, of such sum as may be agreed upon, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to execute under his hand and seal of office, on behalf of the United States, and deliver to said Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company a release in writing, duly acknowledged before an officer authorized to acknowledge deeds, stating that the sum of money so to be paid is in full satisfaction of the lien of the United States created by the issue of said bonds.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas desire to offer his amendment now?

Mr. HARRIS. I do. I offer the amendment which was ordered to be printed and laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert in the proper place in the bill the following:

That the said commission shall not accept, in the settlement of the debt due the United States, less than the amount of the principal of the bonds paid for such company.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire of the Chair under what rule are we considering this case—Rule VIII?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the bill is being considered by unanimous consent in the morning hour. The Chair is of the opinion that it does not come under Rule VIII, as unanimous consent was given for its consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. I was going to say, Mr. President, that this bill both in its facts and in the precedent that we are about to establish here is a very important matter, and I should be very glad to get the attention of the Senate of the United States to it.

Mr. HALE. We can not hear the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I do not suppose anybody can hear me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend until order is restored in the Chamber. [A pause.] The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. I should be very glad, inasmuch as this is going to operate probably as a precedent for some other cases that are back of it, that the Senate should give a very deliberate consideration to this bill. I know it is a very important matter, and it ought not to be considered merely in the morning hour, when Senators are usually busy in their preparations for the day's work and for work in the future. The bill ought to be taken up and examined into with a great deal of care.

The minority report, which was prepared by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], and signed by the rest of us, sets forth a situation of a painful nature, so far as the connection of the Government of the United States with this particular railroad is concerned, and also in relation to the history of our connection as a Government with the Union Pacific and Central Pacific railroads.

In my opinion, Mr. President, there is a great undervaluing of this property, and I think also that there is an overestimation of the necessity of disposing of it. This property ought to be retained in the present situation until some further development is made as to the progress of affairs or events in connection with the recent sale of the Union Pacific Railroad.

It appears that under a decree of the United States circuit court we have sold the interest of the United States, at least—and I suppose all other interests are concluded by the decree—in the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and that railroad company is left in a condition which I think no lawyer on this floor or elsewhere is able accurately to state or to define. Hereafter there is going to be, necessarily, a great deal of controversy arising in the Congress of the United States and elsewhere out of the anomalous situation of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, of which company this Sioux City road, as it is called, is a mere appendage or branch.

I do not know, Mr. President, who to-day is the legal owner or representative of the property called the Union Pacific Railroad Company, which was purchased by the agents of a trust or syndicate at a sale by order of the court; and there has been transferred to it certain of the rights, privileges, powers, franchises, and properties that belonged to that company—transferred to these trustees or to these purchasers—but, so far as I am informed, they have not purchased the corporate franchise. Neither do I believe that it is within the power of any other Governmental agency in this country except the Congress of the United States to dispose of the corporate franchise of the Union Pacific Railroad Company; and when I say that, I mean to include this minor part, this Sioux City road, which is to all intents and purposes a part of the Union Pacific Railroad in all of its legal attitudes.

Mr. THURSTON. I should like to make a correction right there. The Sioux City road never had any connection whatever with the Union Pacific road; it never was operated in connection with it at all. It is a part of the Northwestern Railroad system. The two properties have no relation at all, except that they were both included in one bill granting aid.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; they were both included in one bill granting aid and intended to be incorporated in the same general line and placed under the control of the Government of the United States as to all of its rights against the Union Pacific Railroad as fully as if it had been originally a part of it. That is what I mean to say.

The Government of the United States, when it chartered the Union Pacific Railway Company and also in the same act the Central Pacific Railway Company—the same general system of laws—provided for itself a certain control over these railways. The first great leading proposition was that these roads, while built under separate charters and by different companies, were to become a great national highway, united under one railway and one management ultimately. That was the general intent. That intent is not only mentioned in the statutes which organized these companies, but it has been frequently referred to in the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States as being vital in its effect upon the rights of persons and property connected with this general railroad system. I will give a citation of that.

A question arose between the heirs of Mr. Stanford and the United States Government as to whether the estate of Mr. Stanford was liable to certain contributions to the Central Pacific Railway Company under the laws and constitution of California. The Supreme Court of the United States, in deciding that that estate was exempt from these charges, these obligations, or alleged obligations, recurred to the fact that this line of railroad across the United States, across from ocean to ocean, as they say, was one uniform system of railway, to be affected in all of its parts by the legislation of Congress equally, and that, inasmuch as in the charter of the Union Pacific Railroad Company the liability was not fixed or recognized that was attempted to be imposed upon the Stanford estate in the suit that was brought at the instance of the United States Government, therefore the Stanford estate was not liable, it being the intent and purpose of the United States to make an equal liability, resting upon the stockholders of all of these railroads from one end to the other.

Without going particularly into the facts of that case—it is not necessary that I should do so—we see here at once that upon the unification of these railroads in the statutes themselves there is made to depend the question of the liability of stockholders, which was clear enough under the constitution of California, but which the Supreme Court of the United States held we did not intend to insist upon because we did not fix the same liability upon the stockholders of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, thus establishing the legal identity of the two systems absolutely.

Now comes in another railroad company here, about which there is just as little question of legal identity as there was of the legal identity between the Union and the Central Pacific railroads. The Union Pacific Railroad has been sold out. The purchasers are trustees of a certain syndicate, and they hold the conveyance, whatever it may be worth, of the Federal courts of the United States under the decree. I insist, Mr. President, as I have always insisted, that such decrees did not sell the franchise. They were not intended to sell the franchise; and, in fact, they could not sell the franchise unless they sold out the rights of the United States, which are connected necessarily with its political government. For instance, to-day we may desire to send from Omaha to San Francisco bodies of troops for the purpose of going out on the Pacific Ocean somewhere, or for the purpose of defending that coast; and when we leave Omaha and start to the westward, to the terminus of the Union Pacific Railroad, who is it that we are dealing with and under what laws are we dealing?

We turn to the statute books of the United States, and we find that we have the right to transport troops across that road and to apply one-half of the price of the transportation to the credit of the debt that that railroad company has always acknowledged that it owed to the United States. But now the reply to that, I suppose, will be that that debt has been cut off; the United States have accepted a certain sum of money in payment of that debt, and therefore there is no obligation on the part of that railroad company to apply any portion of the cost of the transportation of soldiers to that debt, nor is there any power on the part of the United States to enforce the obligation. Then I ask the question in reply, With whom are we dealing? What has become of those laws? Who has repealed them? Who has lifted the Government of the United States out of contact with this property? What act of Congress has ever taken place to change the legal situation here? None whatever. Nothing has occurred but a sale under a decree of the Federal courts of the United States and a deed in pursuance of that. I deny that without the consent of Congress the authority and power of the United States to control these railroads under the statutes as they exist can be in any wise affected at all.

Now, it is proposed that two officers of the Government of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney-General, shall take this particular part of this general system of transcontinental railway and make a disposal of it, sell it. To what extent they would have the right to sell it the proposed act does not define. But, Mr. President, to sell that part of the road, or any part of the road, so as to cut off the United States Government from its rights, privileges, powers, and authority reserved in these statutes which are still unrepealed, is something that ought to be done, if at all, with extreme care. But here is a broad warrant of attorney in this bill to sell for any price they please, to convey what they please, to convey all of the property, with every right and franchise and easement and privilege that the Government of the United States has in it—a general delegation of authority without any restraint or restriction at all as to the amount for which the property is to be sold, or as to the interest that shall be conveyed to the purchasers, or who the purchasers are to be, or what corporate powers they will have after they have made the purchase.

I do not care to detain the Senate, as I am satisfied that it takes very little interest in this matter now, by setting forth in extenso the powers and privileges and rights that we are giving up under this general warrant of attorney here to make the sale and disposal of this railroad. But it is a subject which ought not to be lightly passed over. This railroad owes the Government of the United States to-day, according to the minority report, on the debt and interest, not computing interest on interest at all, $4,240,708.88. They tell us that the railroad is not worth it.

Mr. HARRIS. For money actually advanced.

Mr. MORGAN. What money is this that we are speaking about now? Money actually advanced and paid out of the Treasury of the United States to this railroad company. They seem to have gotten along comfortably well with it. They seem to have nursed it until they have got it to a place where they think there is no purchaser now except one railroad company, and that therefore they can put the screws on the agents of the United States and buy the railroad for just what they please. So far as I am concerned, I would rather give this road to the people in that part of the United States than to turn it over under these circumstances to this railroad company which stands ready to gobble it up. It would be a more just thing to do. It would be something at least that would be of benefit to some part of the people of the United States.

Let me ask why is there any objection, when this railroad company owes us this vast sum of money, to saying "that the said commission shall not accept in the settlement of the debt due the United States less than the amount of the principal of the bonds paid for such company?" The only objection I have heard of is that you can not get that much. Who knows about that? Are we willing to take the responsibility of saying in advance that we can not get that much for it? It is a very curious sort of man who would go to his opponent, to his creditor, if you please, who had a debt or obligation or power over him by which he could absorb his property, and say to him, "I want a thousand dollars for this property. That is just and right; but if you will not pay me a thousand dollars, I will take $500."

We are never to know whether we can sell this property for the amount of the principal debt, not including the interest, for that is sacrifice enough, until we make the effort. I am not willing to accept the statement or the supposition of any Senator on this floor that this company can not be strained up to the point of paying the amount of the principal debt, not including the interest. Sir, it seems to me that those who have the guardianship of the rights of the United States ought not in the beginning to surrender them without ever having made an effort to secure something worth talking about in the sale of this property.

The excess of interest over the credits we have received on the 1st of February, 1898, that we have paid out in actual money for this company, is $2,612,388.88. This amendment proposes to throw that away, and that amounts to one-half or more than one-half of the whole amount of the indebtedness. The minority of the committee are willing to go even to the extent of meeting the majority way beyond the halfway line and throwing away actually $2,612,388.88, in order to reconcile that company to the purchase of a railroad which they can not do without.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask my colleague to inform the Senate what are the rights of the United States in this railroad independent of the lien for the money?

Mr. MORGAN. All of the rights that it possessed in regard to the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific railroads. One of these rights is to appoint five members of the board of directors. Another right is to transmit the troops, munitions of war of the United States, mails, and every other thing that concerns the Government at certain rates of transportation, one-half of which is due at the time the transportation is earned, to be credited upon this very interest account that we are asked to give away in the pending bill.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. I would be glad, unless the Senator from Alabama desires especially to go on with the consideration of the pending bill, if he would give way to me for the purpose of asking the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill. I gave notice that at 1 o'clock to-day I would call up the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not urging this bill, of course; I am opposing it; and the Senator had better appeal to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] about any matter of that kind. But I can assure both Senators that it is not at all likely that we will get through with the pending bill by 2 o'clock, because there is a good deal to be said about it by several Senators. I hope the Senate feels enough interest in this bill to wake up to its importance and try to understand the ground upon which we are acting and the very great importance of the precedent we are about to establish here, which will be quoted upon us perhaps in a few days now in favor of a disposal of the Central Pacific Railroad on the same terms and by the same men, to both of which I object.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Alabama will pardon me, I should like to request the Senator from Pennsylvania not to call up the Post-Office appropriation bill to-day. The report of the hearings was laid on our desks only this morning, and I should like to look it over. I am not ready to proceed to-day. I hope the Senator will defer it until to-morrow.

Mr. QUAY. I have no desire to precipitate the bill upon the Senator from North Carolina, who I understand wishes to be heard on it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest that there is no objection to going through with the bill now, with the exception of one or two items, and letting those items go over until to-morrow. Manifestly this large book just laid upon our desks this morning——

Mr. HALE. I was about to make the same suggestion, that we go through with the routine part of the bill and reserve the amendments upon which there is to be debate.

Mr. QUAY. Will that arrangement be satisfactory to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BUTLER. What is it?

Mr. QUAY. To go through the routine part of the bill to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. I would prefer that the bill should not be taken up at all to-day.

Mr. QUAY. Very well; I withdraw the request.

Mr. MORGAN. I had just observed that I am aware of the fact—I think I am thoroughly aware of it—that after this bill has got through the Senate there will be great use made of this action as a precedent in favor of immediate action in the same line upon the Central Pacific Railroad. Whether or not we appreciate the value of this property here now and the interest of the United States in it, I think we ought to wake up to some sensible appreciation of the valuable Central Pacific, at least to the people concerned in its operation, both in the past and in the future. If we grant this full and complete and unqualified license to the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney-General to settle this railroad question and price this railroad according to the provisions of the pending bill, we shall have no decent excuse of which I can conceive just now, or at least to which I am willing to advert just now, for insisting that a different rule shall apply to the Central Pacific Railway; and this is but an open door leading into that vortex out of which there will come, doubtless, a very great amount of trouble and litigation.

There is but one restriction upon the power that is conveyed in the first section of this bill to the Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Interior in the disposal of this property, and that is that the President shall approve such settlement. I am opposed, sir, to putting into the hands of Mr. McKinley or any man who lives in this world the capacity or the ability to control this case here and what will follow—the next case, the Central Pacific Railroad, which involves, according to my understanding of it, an inquiry that is of the most serious and important character, an inquiry that will lead ultimately to a very large increase of political power in the United States, and will lead also to the disappointment of a large number of the people of the West in regard to that great line of railway which was built for them and intended to facilitate them in the opening of their homes and all of their future prosperity.

Now, sir, there are not any people nor have there ever been any people in the United States who are so thoroughly and completely subordinated to the railroad interests extending across this continent as the people along what we call the Pacific Slope. There is not a field or an orchard or an enterprise on all that vast domain, wealthy as it is and increasingly wealthy as it is about to become, there is nothing there, that is not under the direct control of the railroad interests that reach across this continent. The people there are just as much enslaved to these railroads as ever a slave was to his master with a whip drawn over him. They have no possibility of living and increasing their wealth or paying their debts or making a living for their families except out of the poor, pitiful, minor indulgence that the railroads are willing to extend to them in the way of freights.

I have recent information, which I believe to be true, to the effect that on a large box of oranges, containing 200 oranges, I believe, after the fruit had been grown and gathered, culled, selected, boxed, and shipped to the marts of the East, where alone there is any market for those articles, the profit is 5 cents; and perhaps the best tree in California will not yield twenty or thirty boxes of oranges. Now, what becomes of all of this agricultural power and expenditure of labor and capital and skill and the risk? They are absorbed by the freights which are charged by these railroad companies. All of the companies not being under the control of the Congress of the United States, they can charge such freights as they please, and they do it systematically, and they have been built and are maintained and kept in operation for the sole purpose of taxing the agricultural power of the West to the utmost extent of the ability of those railroads to wring money out of the hands of the people.

When I speak upon this question I do not represent a community that has any special interest in it. I am not speaking for any corporation or for any accumulation of wealth and power. I am speaking in favor of the control of the Congress of the United States (which it owes it to the people to maintain) over these railroads under the laws as they now exist—a system of laws enacted for the purpose of their building and their future control and which we are now frittering away without giving to the people of that country the slightest protection, even in name, of the interest that it has cost them so much to build up. Who has built these railroads? Not the holders of the stock, not the incorporators, not the money of the men who own them now. These railroads were built entirely out of the subsidies furnished by the Government of the United States, which had been taxed out of the people, and by the labors of the people who have contributed continually to their resources.

Who, in the name of conscience and justice, has the right to the benefit of this system of railroads except the people whose money has built them? You may take Mr. Huntington, and instead of it having cost him and his associates money to build that road, it has made him immensely rich to build it, besides owning the property and having a power over the people that they can use and do use without the slightest mercy or charity toward them at all. We have placed these powers in the hands of this great transcontinental system for the double purpose of benefiting the people, whose industries and labors sustain the road, and the Government of the United States, which has the right and which secured to itself by legislation the right to have under its control a great transcontinental system of railroads.

Whenever one commences, however, to argue upon these propositions and to bring forward these facts, instantly there arises a series of interrogatories: "But are you in favor of Government ownership of railroads? Are you a Populist? Do you want to have the Congress of the United States control these railroads?" Mr. President, that question ought to have been put to the men who enacted these charters thirty years ago. What I am for and the only thing I am for is to preserve the rights that have grown up in favor of the United States and the people under the laws of Congress enacted thirty years ago. I am not in favor of enacting any new law for the purpose of creating Congressional control over the railroads or for the ownership of railroads in the United States for the purpose of having Congressional control.

We are not enacting any new laws here for that purpose, but, sir, I am opposed to tearing away from this railroad system those structures which were created thirty years ago in the very origin of their existence, and which were intended to protect the Government of the United States in its governmental right over these roads and also to protect the people against monopoly and outrage at the hands of the directory of these companies. That is what I am in favor of, and it is all that I am contending for. Pass the bill that is before us this morning—this innocent-looking little bill—and there you have a precedent for the next bill that comes up, which is of enormous importance to the people of the United States—the disposal of the Central Pacific.

As matters stand, even if the Union Pacific Railroad Company has been eliminated from this scheme, stricken out, and has passed into private ownership, and even if the Government of the United States can be supposed by the greatest strain of conjecture to have lost all of its interest in and control over the Union Pacific Railroad, there still remains, as yet intact, as I hope and believe at least, the railway leading from San Francisco into Missouri, Kansas City, over which the Congress of the United States still has its power of control. At all events, you bring the road from San Francisco across the mountains, where it is, and you will find at this end of that line, the Central Pacific line, ample opportunity for connection to lead to the East; and after all, the people of the United States, and particularly the people of the west coast of the United States, will have secured and preserved to them those rights which belong inherently to them by virtue of the charters under which these railroads were constructed.

I am for the preservation of all those rights, and I make this little forecast of what is going to take place after we have passed the pending bill for the purpose of admonishing the Senate that there is something to be done here, something to be looked after in this bill, and that the most that can be claimed by this railroad company that is here trying to buy this road is what is contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, that the road shall not be sold for less than the principal sum of the debt which it has cost the United States in the way of subsidies. After throwing away all of this $2,000,000 and more of interest which we have paid in hard money and 41,000 acres of land which we have donated for the purpose of building and maintaining and carrying on this property, shall it now be said to us, "Leave this thing entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney-General, and let them make such a trade as they please about this poor little miserable waif?"

The President of the United States, they say, will have to approve it after all. I have not any doubt in the world that the President of the United States or any other man in the United States who is a candidate for election would be glad of the opportunity of doing such a thing. I can understand the weight of political capital that is thrown into the hands of an executive officer by temptations of that kind. While I respect Mr. McKinley as high as I do any man on the floor of the Senate, there is no man who lives whom I would put in that category and before whom I would lay such temptation by a legislative act of mine—legislation that is entirely unjustified by a due sense of self-respect on the part of the Senate of the United States—that we should delegate to some person, it makes no difference who he may be (and I would far rather it were a private citizen than a man who holds high office), and especially to one of the great functionaries of the United States, authority to go out and make his contracts and bargains with these enormous moneyed corporations.

Who does not know the power of such institutions in the control of elections in the United States? Sir, I would trust no man with any such power. I would lay no such temptation before any man who lives. The President of the United States ought to hold up his hands and beg to be delivered from it, because it would be putting him in a category where, to say the least, he might be assailed and from which it would be extremely difficult for him to escape without some degree of censure from one side or the other.

That is all I desire to say just now about this matter. I prefer to hear from the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] and also the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] before I have anything more to say about it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that the consideration of this bill has been brought up at a time when it seems almost impossible for the Senate to give consideration to any matter of this kind.

It seems to me, in view of the interest which the people of the country expressed last summer in regard to the settlement of the claims which the Government has on the Pacific railroad companies and their manifest indisposition to give away or sacrifice the interests which the Government had, that the succeeding step in this operation of destroying and throwing away the assets of the Government ought to be taken up and settled with a great deal of care. As a matter of course, there is little, I think, to be said with regard to the actual physical condition of this road that is not said in the little minority report that has been read. The great fault really, of course, goes back of anything pertaining to the physical or actual value of the property.

The great fault and error was committed when permission was given by the Administration for the disposal of this property in detail instead of considering the entire Pacific railroads in the country as an entirety. The matter should have been settled with reference to the intent of Congress when the original charter was given, that there should be a continuous line operated, or at least controlled, by the Government from the Missouri River to the Pacific, without allowing it to be taken up in detail and each separate company dealt with as though it stood upon its own merits alone.

With regard to this road, the value of the property, I think, has been practically shown to be somewhere in the neighborhood of $3,000,000. Nobody can contend that it is less than that. It has a valuable bridge crossing the Missouri River. It has 100 miles of road in first-class condition, as shown by the reports of the Pacific Railroad commissioner. It is now being utilized as a part of the main line running north and south of the Northwestern system.

It has been intimated in the Senate that it is possible that these people may be willing to pay $1,000,000. It seems to me that after we consent to sacrifice $2,612,388, it is not improper that the Senate should put some limitation upon the power of the commission which is created and endeavor to force the companies into paying at least the principal of the bonds which has been advanced by the Government.

I can not see how Senators can regard this matter with indifference. It is a willful, palpable throwing away and giving up of an enormous amount of money without any consideration therefor and without making a single effort to protect the rights of the Government in the premises.

It seems to me that the people will feel some amount of indignation and that they will express some amount of doubt as to the patriotism of the people who consent to this kind of a transaction. It is a time when patriotism is being appealed to in every direction. Certainly here is a case where patriotism is just as much necessary as it is in facing the Spanish forces. We have got to protect the Government from those who seek to rob it just as well as we have got to protect the Government against those who seek to dishonor the Government in other directions. It is patriotism just as necessary in one case as the other. When we consent by a simple transfer to certain officers of the Administration of a power to settle without any limitation whatever upon them we simply give our consent to a settlement of a debt upon a basis that can never be approved by the people of this country.

The amendment which I have offered, and which is in accordance with the views of the minority of the Pacific Railroad Committee, certainly seems to me to be the least possible thing that we can do. It simply enables the commission authorized to make this settlement to make some demand. It bolsters them up in obtaining from the railroad companies some little proportion of the enormous amount which has been advanced. The total amount which the Government has paid out for these people amounts to $4,240,708. Besides that, they have had patented to them 41,398 acres of land, which are all valuable, lying nearly altogether in the Missouri River Valley, and which were patented and sold by them prior to August 1, 1875, showing that it had been disposed of at an early day and that it was valuable property.

I hope the Senate therefore will consider this amendment and attach it to the bill, and let it go with some sort of a show of effort to protect the interests of the Government in this matter.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, as far as it goes, the amendment of the committee is all right; but it does not require as much of a payment as should be required from this railroad company. This piece of road, 101 miles in length, is the connecting link for the Northwestern railroad system. It connects their line which runs across the State of Nebraska into the Black Hills, South Dakota. It has an enormous traffic. Neither its earnings nor anything like the earnings are shown by the minority report. In addition to this line which connects with their great line in Nebraska this road runs to Sioux City. It runs through the valley of the Missouri River, one of the richest valleys in the world, for that portion of the valley of the Missouri River is as rich, if not richer, than any other equal area of the earth's surface.

From the time this road was built and ran its first train it has had an enormous and a profitable traffic. It had in the early days of the settlement of that part of the country, from 1869 on for years, almost a monopoly of the business of the Government along the Missouri River, the transportation of Indian supplies and Army supplies and men to the then frontier town of Sioux City, Iowa. It has been operated in connection with the Northwestern road every since its construction. The amount that they choose to return as its earnings is simply a matter of bookkeeping, for if any experts will go over the books and the business and go over the pounds of freight and the number of passengers that have been carried by this line they will find conclusively that, giving it the credit of the business which it actually did and the credit of the money which it actually earned, it can pay every dollar it owes the Government to-day, and could have paid it during all this time.

But by one of those peculiar methods so well known to the railroad management of this country for the purpose of swindling the Government out of its debt, the Northwestern Railroad has been guilty for years of falsifying the books, of falsifying the facts with regard to the earnings of the road, with the plan, conceived in the past and worked out up to date, of finally getting a settlement with the Government by which we would practically give them the debt.

This road to-day is so important a link in the Northwestern system, embracing as it does a bridge across the Missouri River that cost more than a million dollars, that if we should insist that the company should pay every dollar due the Government they would pay it. They can not get along without it. They can not build that link without a tremendous loss to their traffic.

They can not build it without expending at least one year of time. They can not build a bridge across the Missouri in one year of time. We are in a position to take advantage of their position, and it is our duty to do it for the reason that they have falsified the facts, made false returns as to the earnings of this branch for twenty years for the very purpose at the end of the time, when the bonds were due, of cheating the Government out of what was due it.

Everyone said we could not get the money due the Government from the Union Pacific road. We did get it. We were cheated, however, in that transaction. The Kansas Pacific road was a part of the Union Pacific. The stock of the Union Pacific represented the stock of the Kansas Pacific. They had been consolidated; they were under one organization; and yet for the purpose of enabling them to cheat us a little, eight or ten million, when we came to settle we separated the two transactions and settled for the Union Pacific and then threw off millions of dollars, while the two propositions taken together, if handled together, would have produced to the Government every dollar due the Government from both transactions.

Having disposed of that property, we are left this piece of road, 101 miles, with a bridge across the Missouri River, and it is thought that because we have disposed of the Union Pacific, which was in that locality and almost adjoining this road, this fraction of road will be of little value. If the bill should pass as reported by the majority of the committee, the probability is that the Government will get nothing. If it is passed with the amendment of the minority of the committee, the company will promptly pay the money. If the demand upon the company were twice what the minority of the committee require, the company would promptly pay the money. They can not dispose of the link. Therefore I shall offer as an amendment to the amendment that they shall not settle for less than $3,000,000.

I know this road, for I have traveled over it many a time. I know that the road since 1869 (and I traveled over it first in 1869) has had an immense traffic. It is in one of the richest and most thickly settled farming districts in the United States. It is good property at $40,000 a mile without the bridge. It is good property at $5,000,000; and the company is so situated that if we insist upon the payment, they have got to pay it, and they ought to pay it.

I therefore move to amend the amendment of the minority by making it read:

That said commission shall not accept in settlement of the debt due the United States less than $3,000,000.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock has arrived, and the Chair lays before the Senate the special order.

Mr. GEAR. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside in order to continue the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that there is a special order made for to-day. It is Senate joint resolution 86, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting the succession to the Presidency in certain cases.

Mr. HOAR. I should like very much to take up the special order. I do not think it will take much time. I believe everyone is satisfied with it.

Mr. GEAR. I will give way if that can be taken up and passed.

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill which has been before the Senate be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the special order, which is Senate joint resolution 86.

Mr. GEAR. It is understood that the bill which has been before the Senate is to be laid aside informally.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair will suggest that the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the matter which has been under consideration by unanimous consent is not laid aside informally.

Mr. GEAR. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to let us proceed with Senate bill 120. It will take only a few minutes longer.

Mr. HOAR. The special order is one which ought not to go through without the full understanding and assent of the members of the Senate. I do not wish to press it, although I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. MORGAN. What I insist on, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, is that this business is at an end until it is called up again before the Senate regularly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is undoubtedly right in that observation.

Mr. GEAR. I shall simply ask that the special order be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Iowa that if that is done the bill in which he is interested can be placed before the Senate only by unanimous consent or on motion.

Mr. GEAR. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts yields, and I shall press the pending bill.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I object to it.

Mr. GEAR. I shall then move that the Senate continue the discussion of the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield for that purpose?

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Alabama desire to displace the special order which comes up at 2 o'clock?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not. I merely insist that the business which has been before the Senate this morning by unanimous consent in the morning hour is at an end until it is again called before the Senate by a vote.

Mr. GEAR. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw the special order for the present, so that I can move to take up Senate bill 120.

Mr. HOAR. It does not require any withdrawal. The Senator has the right to move it; and if taken up, it displaces everything.

Mr. GEAR. Then I move that the Senate continue the consideration of the bill which has been before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor on the special order. The Senator from Massachusetts can not be taken from the floor. Does he yield for that purpose?

Mr. HOAR. I do not think I ought to yield. I hope the Senator from Iowa will make the motion a little later, because it is evident it will be resisted by the Senator from Alabama, and I should like to have the special order proceeded with.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The special order will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 86) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting the succession to the Presidency in certain cases.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for ratification by the legislatures in the several States, which, when ratified by legislatures in three-fourths of the United States, shall be valid as a part of the said Constitution, namely:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"The provisions of Article II, clause 5, of the Constitution shall remain in force; and whenever there is no person entitled to discharge the duties of the office of the President, the same shall devolve upon the Vice-President. The Congress may by law provide for the case where there is no person entitled to hold the office of President or Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability shall be removed or a President shall be elected."

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to move an amendment in the ninth line by striking out the words "The provisions of" and inserting the words "In all cases not provided for by;" and then by striking out in the tenth line the words "shall remain in force, and whenever" and inserting the word "where."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is proposed as an amendment to the amendment of the committee, and it will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment in line 9 by striking out the words "The provisions of" and inserting "In all cases not provided for by;" and in line 10 by striking out the words "shall remain in force, and whenever" and inserting the word "where."

Mr. MORGAN. Let it be read.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the whole provision be read as it will read when amended.

Mr. HOAR. Let the whole provision be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read as it will read when amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for ratification by the legislatures in the several States, which, when ratified by legislatures in three-fourths of the United States, shall be valid as a part of the said Constitution, namely:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"In all cases not provided for by Article II, clause 5, of the Constitution, where there is no person entitled to discharge the duties of the office of the President, the same shall devolve upon the Vice-President. The Congress may by law provide for the case where there is no person entitled to hold the office of President or Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability shall be removed or a President shall be elected."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I offer an amendment to come in as section 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Texas that it may be well to act upon the amendment as proposed by the committee. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I have sent to the desk the amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Texas will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 2. Direct taxes shall not be apportioned among the several States which may be included within the Union according to their respective numbers, but Congress shall have power to lay and collect direct taxes as other taxes, duties, imposts, and excises are levied and collected.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, the amendment I propose is intended to meet the condition existing by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court, which declared that Congress has not power to impose an income tax, because the Constitution declares that direct taxes, under which head the income tax comes, must be imposed in proportion to population. The provision which I have asked to have inserted carries together both the provision reported by the committee and the one which I have offered, and submits both propositions to the people of the United States, in order that we may have it in the power of Congress to lay and collect an income tax just as other duties, taxes, excises, and imposts are now levied and collected by the provisions of the Constitution.

It may be said that this proposes a distinct and different matter from that contemplated by the amendment proposed by the Judiciary Committee. But that makes no difference. The fourteenth amendment of the Constitution embraces four distinct propositions which were submitted to the legislatures of the several States for their ratification and approval. The first makes citizens of the United States of certain persons who had not hitherto been citizens; the second provides for the basis of representation; the third provides for the election of Senators and Representatives; the fourth provides for the security of the national debt. Each one of these provisions is distinct from the others.

The people of the United States are intensely interested in preserving in all its full energy the taxing power of the Government, and at no time ought this question to address itself to the public attention with more force than at the present, when the Government is almost emasculated of its taxing power by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court.

I do not care to discuss this question. I simply wish to present it to the Senate. Will you now give the people of the several States an opportunity to speak on this question and say that Congress shall be vested with the power to tax in order to raise money to preserve the life of the States?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it is not necessary to remind Senators that this matter can only become a part of the Constitution by a two-thirds vote of both Houses of Congress and then by a vote of three-fourths of the State legislatures or conventions specially called for that purpose in the States. So it seems a pity to put another distinct subject, I will not say of doubtful expediency, but about which there is great division of opinion in the country, which would inevitably, I suppose, lead in the present condition of public sentiment, to the loss of both amendments.

Whatever may be said as to the income tax, I suppose no intelligent reader of our history will doubt that if the power of taxing incomes had been declared in the original Constitution of the United States, it never could have been adopted by the people. Probably there would not have been found a single State in the Union that would have adopted it at that time. They desired to reserve the power of taxing incomes and all that class of taxes, as I read the history of that time, to the States, and as an equivalent they denied to the States the great power of taxing imports.

I beg the Senator from Texas to understand that I do not say this with a view of entering upon that great field of debate where he and I probably would disagree, because I recognize the grave reasons which could be urged on his side of that controversy, including some of the earlier decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I wish to speak with the most absolute respect of the opinion which I do not myself share in regard to that great question. But this amendment, which has been the subject of great consideration in the Judiciary Committee—I think it was discussed at five or six meetings, it may be more, and referred to a large subcommittee—is intended to meet what is really a very grave danger in our existing condition of things.

There is no provision in the Constitution for the case where after their election by the electoral college both the President and Vice-President elect die. It is only in the case of the death, resignation, or removal of a President that the Vice-President is to succeed, and he can not succeed under the present Constitution if the President-elect die before the Vice-President is inaugurated. If both die, Congress has no power to provide what officer shall fill the vacancy. We have now political parties multiplied. There is no provision for supplying a vacancy in the case of a failure to elect in the House, there having been first a failure, of course, in the electoral college.

Now, we desire to confine the attention of the Congress and of the States to just one danger. We have had several instances of the deaths of Presidents and several instances of the deaths of Vice-Presidents during their term of office, which are familiar to us all, and if we should in future generations unhappily have a condition of things like that which even now is said to exist in an ancient foreign country, a country which formerly had a very high rank among the civilized nations of the world, and in any sudden tempest of popular excitement, or in the case of any distemper prevailing at the seat of government, these two officials-elect should be taken away, the result would be anarchy.

I trust the Senate will be willing to take up by itself the great subject which the Senator from Texas and so many other Senators and so many of the most intelligent citizens of the country, as I agree, have at heart, and so I move to lay the Senator's amendment upon the table.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to waive his motion for a moment.

Mr. HOAR. I will waive the motion for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The motion to lay the amendment on the table is withdrawn, and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is recognized.

Mr. TELLER. I am a member of the committee who reported the pending joint resolution, but I wish to say that I am very much in favor of some provision which will enable the Government of the United States to impose an income tax; and for that reason I shall vote against laying the amendment on the table, not because I expect the amendment will be adopted, but because I wish to emphasize my views upon the question involved in it.

I do not intend to debate the question except to say that an income tax has become a feature of taxation, I think I may say, in perhaps all the countries of the world.

When the income tax, which was adopted during the late war, under which we collected nearly $350,000,000, was repealed, it was repealed by 30 majority in the House of Representatives, if I now recollect aright. The bill then came here, where it was debated, and the repealing act was carried by a vote of 26 to 25. There were some Democrats who voted for its repeal and some Republicans, but in the 25 votes cast against the repeal of that tax there was not a single Democrat, but every one who so voted was a Republican.

I have taken pains to examine that debate, and I find that not a man who spoke against its repeal ever made a suggestion in the debate that it was a war tax or a war feature. It was defended by the Republicans of this body purely and solely upon the ground that it was a just and equitable method of raising revenue. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], the oldest Senator here, made a speech against its repeal. The recent Secretary of State, Mr. Sherman, who was then a member of this body, also made a speech against its repeal, and several other very prominent Senators, amongst them the then Senator from Indiana, Mr. Morton, made speeches against its repeal.

I only want to emphasize the fact that the modern charge that an income tax is a Democratic and a Populistic idea is not true, and that every vote given in the House of Representatives against its repeal was a Republican vote, and every vote given in this body against its repeal was a Republican vote, and that every speech made in either body against its repeal was a Republican speech. I have not looked over the discussions in the House of Representatives as to the ground upon which their position was based, but I state positively and distinctly that no one in this body insisted upon maintaining the income tax upon the ground that we needed revenue or that it was a war tax, but solely and entirely upon the ground that it was an equitable and just method of raising revenue in this country. I so believe, Mr. President.

I believe the time has come when the great expenses of this country necessitate an income tax. I realize, however, that if we are to have an income tax now it must be brought within the purview of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, a decision which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] indicates that he approves of, a decision which practically reversed five solemnly adjudicated cases by that very same court, and one of them as late as 1880, when the court passed upon every point which was discussed in the last case, when the court was unanimously in favor of the constitutionality of the act.

Mr. President, I did not rise to debate that question, but simply to give the reason why I shall not vote with the committee to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I only wish for a few moments before the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] makes his motion to lay my amendment on the table. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that the Constitution of the United States when it was being formed was like a ship sailing over a sunken archipelago of rocks. It was threatened with shipwreck at every moment. The States were very jealous about giving up power to the National Government. Federalism was rampant in the Constitutional Convention; and at last, after a long struggle, the Constitution, mutilated as it is, finally came into being as a succession of compromises.

Now, see what a situation we are in: Involved in a foreign struggle, which may not be great or which may be, with more than $20,000,000,000 of real property in this country to which the taxing power can not reach, which is absolutely beyond control, except by a tax in proportion to population, which would be infamously unjust.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I want to ask the Senator whether he would consent to my asking unanimous consent to bring his amendment before the Senate as a separate amendment?

Mr. MILLS. I am afraid it would never get through. I want to tie it to the pending proposition in order to carry it through.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator want to compel anybody to vote for the amendment who does not believe in it?

Mr. MILLS. I want to get it to the American people, who do believe in it. I want to give them an opportunity to do the voting.

Mr. HOAR. Will not that be accomplished if the Senator's proposition be taken up as a separate measure, when every Senator can record his vote upon it?

Mr. MILLS. If the Senator speaks for his side of the Chamber, and they will agree to that, I shall not object.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator certainly does not want to have the people believe that anybody who does not believe in the proposition will vote for it? I assume, of course, that the Senator would not think of compelling Senators who do not believe in his amendment to vote for it by coupling it with something in which they do believe. That would be a bargain which the Senator never in the world would make. I therefore wanted to ask him whether he would not agree to have a unanimous-consent order that his amendment should be taken up as a separate measure after the pending proposition is disposed of, and let us debate it and record our votes on it?

Mr. MILLS. The Senator from Massachusetts has ascended very high in the ethereal regions when he talks about a member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives never voting for any bill which does not express his views on everything. I hardly think I have ever voted for one in twenty-five years' service in the two Houses where I have not voted for something I did not believe in.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I am not attacking his constitutional amendment now; but I do not think the Senator ever voted or ever would vote for a constitutional amendment in which he did not believe.

Mr. MILLS. I do sometimes vote for provisions in bills in which I do not believe in order to get that in which I do believe. We all know that all legislation is a matter of compromise. We see it constantly before our eyes in all the important bills which come before us.

Now, I want to give the American people an opportunity to correct a great mistake, which was made either by the Supreme Court of the United States or by those who framed the Constitution of the United States. We have made fifteen amendments to the Constitution, whether wise or unwise. Mr. Jefferson said that every generation ought to amend the Constitution; that as a generation advances in civilization it certainly ought to acquire more knowledge than the prior generation had, and there ought to be no ironclad Constitution to bind to all eternity any great nation or race of people. I think it was one of the unwise things our fathers did in so arranging for amendments of the Constitution as to make it almost impossible to accomplish it, except in times of war, when the Administration of the Government had the sword in its hands.

The first ten amendments that were made to the Constitution were made because the public sentiment of the country was unanimous in favor of putting those great rights of personal security into the Constitution which were placed there by those amendments. The eleventh amendment was made also by an almost unanimous judgment of the people of the United States, occasioned by a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Chisolm vs. The State of Georgia. Now the people of the United States find by another decision of the Supreme Court that they are emasculated of that most important of all the powers conferred upon the Government, the power to raise revenue to support it; and it was said by one of the distinguished judges when that decision was made that we would see the evil effect of it when we were confronted by war.

Here we are to-day confronted by war. We have a revenue bill laid upon our tables to retax what has already been taxed, piling up taxes upon the poor people of this country, while the wealth of the country lies out beyond the reach of the Government—$20,000,000,000 worth of real estate beyond its touch. All the immense revenues that come from those rents, gains, and profits are beyond the reach of the Government; all incomes are beyond the reach of the Government, and who is to sustain this great struggle in which we are engaged—a struggle which may develop into a flame of war over all the earth? No man can tell to-day whether this war shall not, before it ends, bring within its infernal vortex all the powers of Europe. Here we are to-day without the power to raise money except by selling bonds and enslaving our people generation after generation, until we shall have no credit and can sell no bonds, and will be in the position in which Spain is to-day.

Our fathers have laid down—Washington and all others—the fundamental proposition that to keep your liberties you must keep your credit, so that you can use it when you get into war. When you get into war you must borrow money, for your taxing power will not be sufficient to carry you through a great struggle. You must borrow, but when you borrow money levy taxes to pay it in a short time after you get into peace again, so that you may have all the instruments of your credit with which to begin the next conflict.

Mr. President, when we now propose to go to the people and ask them to subject this great wealth to the duty of paying taxes to support the Government, we are denied that privilege.

I do not wish to enter into the discussion any further. I simply wanted to say enough to fix the attention of the Senate of the United States and then let them vote as they please upon the question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas before he takes his seat why he says that he and others who think with him and who are in favor of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which shall authorize an income tax are deprived of the privilege of going to the country upon that issue, simply because we who are in favor of the pending amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee ask him and them not to insist upon precipitating that question by way of amendment to another proposed constitutional amendment?

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is not authorized to say for me that I will vote against submitting to the legislatures of the States a constitutional amendment in favor of laying an income tax. He has not undertaken to speak for me on that subject; and I am not certain that I shall not vote for the submission of such an amendment. I am willing to meet that question, and have it discussed and have it voted upon. Certainly I do not think the Senator from Texas has a right to say that he is deprived of the privilege of raising that question before the American Congress and the American people because we ask him not to raise that very doubtful and troublesome question in connection with a constitutional amendment which is desired to secure a result which every Senator in this Chamber, I undertake to say, desires to secure. Now, will not the Senator withdraw his proposed amendment to the pending joint resolution and propose it separately, and let us discuss it? I ask the Senator from Texas that question.

Mr. MILLS. The Senator entirely misunderstood me if he understood me to say that we did not have the right and the privilege to go before the people of the United States and discuss this issue. I do not say that. I say that we are not accorded the right to send this proposition to the legislatures of the States, in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, and invoke their judgment in a legitimate way.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator why he can not have the privilege, if there is a majority of votes in favor of it?

Mr. MILLS. It takes a two-thirds vote of both Houses to do that, as the Senator knows.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, Mr. President, the case stands right out clear. The Senator from Texas asks the Senator from Massachusetts whether he represents all on this side of the Chamber on the income tax, and I ask the Senator from Texas whether he represents all the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber when he says that there shall not go to the legislatures of the States this amendment, which may be very important to prevent chaos in this country by the termination of the existence of the President and Vice-President of the United States; that he and those Senators who act with him politically will not consent to have that obvious error corrected in the Constitution unless Senators who are opposed to an income tax will vote to submit an amendment of that kind at the same time? I doubt whether the Senator represents the other side of the Chamber in taking that position.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I desire simply to say that I have not undertaken to speak for any Senator except myself upon any subject whatever.

Mr. MILLS. Neither have I.

Mr. HOAR. I simply asked the Senator from Texas if he would join me in obtaining unanimous consent to take up an amendment establishing an income tax after the pending proposition was out of the way. That is all. I asked that question, and I should like to ask unanimous consent that the constitutional amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas be taken up for consideration after this proposed amendment to the Constitution is disposed of.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Texas really means that he does not think the legislatures of the States ought to be allowed the privilege of voting upon the constitutional amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee unless they also vote upon the constitutional amendment providing for an income tax.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield in order that the request of the Senator from Massachusetts may be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the proposed constitutional amendment of the Senator from Texas may be submitted to the Senate after the pending proposition is disposed of.

Mr. MILLS. Of course that can not be given. I want a vote on my amendment.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Texas objects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas objects to the proposition made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will not the Senator from Texas withdraw the proposition?

Mr. MILLS. Of course not. I want a vote on it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will not the Senator from Texas agree to have a vote upon it as a separate proposition? The Senator does not pretend to represent his side of the Chamber in saying that we can not send this other constitutional amendment, to which nobody objects, to the legislatures of the States unless we at the same time consent to send an income-tax amendment—he does not really mean that, does he?

Mr. MILLS. I have not said anything of the kind. I have simply given my views to the Senate in favor of amending the proposed amendment to the Constitution, and on that I want a vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator can get a vote on that as a separate proposition. Why does the Senator say that this obvious fault in the Constitution, which arouses no discussion, shall not be corrected unless Senators will vote against their convictions in favor of submitting an income-tax proposition? I do not think Senators on the other side of the Chamber will agree to that proposition or are willing to take that position. I certainly do not think that my friend from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], who has been patiently waiting to submit a few remarks in the midst of mine, will take such a position.

Mr. STEWART. I have not interrupted the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to address the Senate in my own right for a few moments.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thought the Senator wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. STEWART. No; I want to make a few remarks.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not occupy the floor long, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not yet finished.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair supposed the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] had left the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I had not yielded the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Chair now understands that the Senator from New Hampshire retains the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator from Nevada wanted to ask me a question. I am not quite through with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I always yield when a Senator rises, in accordance with the customs of the Senate, expecting him to ask a question.

Mr. FORAKER. I merely want to make a remark, which is apropos to what the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has said, and it may be to what was said by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] also.

I favor both these proposed amendments. I believe in an income tax, but I do not believe in associating the two propositions; and if they are to be submitted together, or, rather, if the amendment of the Senator from Texas is to be insisted upon, I shall vote for the motion to lay the amendment upon the table, simply because I think if they were to go out together the one would kill the other. If, however, they can be separated, or whenever they are separately presented, I shall vote for both of them.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, there, Mr. President, I show the Senator from Texas that he is losing apparently two votes on his main proposition because he insists upon this, as I call it, unfair method of dealing with a subject which he has very much at heart.

There is another amendment to the Constitution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which is in order this afternoon. That simply proposes to make the close of the Congressional and Presidential terms the last week in April instead of the 4th of March. That is a very simple matter. The proposition of the joint resolution as reported is that the last Wednesday of April in the year 1901 shall be the end of the term of office of the President and Vice-President of the United States and of the Fifty-sixth Congress—the next Congress—and that thereafter the last Wednesday of April shall be substituted for the 4th of March.

The Senator from Massachusetts, since the joint resolution has been reported, has suggested that the last Thursday of April would perhaps be equally appropriate; and it is suggested, I understand, because that was the day upon which the first President, General Washington, was inaugurated.

That constitutional amendment, if adopted, would lengthen the short term of Congress from the first Monday in December until the last Thursday of April. It is an amendment which, I think, ought to be unanimously adopted by the two Houses of Congress. I should hate to see the Senator from Texas, if his income-tax proposition is not put upon this first amendment of the Constitution, then move it upon the next proposition, and embarrass these two questions, which are simple and which ought to arouse no discussion, by bringing a moot question into debate here.

If the proposition of the Senator from Texas means that these two constitutional amendments, which ought to arouse no feeling and which have been prepared with care by two committees of this body, are not to be allowed to pass the Senate and go to the House of Representatives—if that is what the Senator means—if he speaks for the party with which he has been up to this time associated in the politics of this country; if he speaks for himself and his party associates, and they mean that neither of these amendments shall be adopted unless an income-tax amendment to the Constitution goes to the people at the same time, then I hope other Senators will frankly say so, as the Senator from Texas has said so. But, Mr. President, I hope that will not be the position of the Senate. I hope, as American Senators, we shall recognize that we ought to deal with these two questions without embarrassing them by bringing into the debate, and seeking to force action of the Senate thereon, questions of an exciting character upon which there is so much difference of opinion.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, we have passed over a hundred years without the contingency happening which the pending constitutional amendment provides for. It is almost an impossible contingency, and the proposition might wait a little longer. But we have reached a point where a great evil exists, where we can not wait unless we intend to deny justice to the American people.

The want of power to levy equal taxation upon the rich as well as the poor is one of great concern. Whatever may be done, whatever may be said, an issue was created by the decision of the Supreme Court, which will not stop agitating the country until it is settled, and settled rightly. As was said in an address sent here some thirty-five years ago, unsettled questions have no pity for the repose of mankind, and while this question remains unsettled, the people will feel that they are unfairly dealt with. It is creating a feeling in this country which is dangerous to the perpetuity of our institutions.

It is not only necessary that you should have just laws, equal laws, and equality before the law to make the people content, but that condition must be so plain that they will know the laws are equal. The idea that the great wealth of the country shall not contribute to the support of the Government in time of peace and defend the honor of the flag in time of war, but that the burden shall fall upon the poor, upon the masses, while the classes have all the property, will create a feeling in this country before which every man should pause. It is the duty of every Senator to bring that question forward at all proper times. No proposed amendment of the Constitution ought to be adopted by Congress without having such an amendment attached to it. Why amend the Constitution in inconsequential things in an attempt to provide against imaginary wrongs, when you have before you a wrong which all fair-minded men recognize?

We had supposed for a hundred years that the power to levy an income tax existed, but we find by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that it does not exist, and to call upon the States for direct taxation, dividing it among the States according to population, would be entirely inadequate and should not be resorted to. It is necessary for this Government to have the power to make all the property and all the men in its jurisdiction contribute to its support. This Government should rest upon all the property, the property of the rich as well as of the poor; and to say that an amendment of that kind must be set aside, must not be considered, and that an amendment to correct an imaginary evil is of importance——

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Nevada a question on this subject?

Mr. STEWART. Any question.

Mr. HOAR. How many States in the Union have the income tax?

Mr. STEWART. I do not know.

Mr. HOAR. A considerable number?

Mr. STEWART. But they have a power of taxation which we do not possess.

Mr. HOAR. I know; but they do not have the power of imposing duties on imports as we do.

Mr. STEWART. They have power to levy taxes, and they can levy taxes upon property without limit. We can not begin to raise enough revenue on imports. It is inadequate.

Mr. HOAR. The point of my question is this: The Senator says that nobody who is fair-minded disagrees with him. I suppose I am not fair-minded.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator's mind may be a little crooked, and he may not be conscious of it.

Mr. HOAR. I do disagree with the Senator down to the very roots. I think the income tax was considered by this people, when we got through trying the experiment, the most odious tax ever levied; and if we get one again, it will be considered by the people the most odious tax ever levied after being tried a few years. I think, further, that the States of this Union, with some half dozen exceptions, although they have a perfect right to levy one and although it ought to be left to the States to levy when they want to, because the States still raise the larger share for our expenditures, do not do it. I think I know from the reading of documents that if it had been suggested when the Constitution was formed that the power was conferred by it to levy an income tax, it would not have had the assent of a single State. The Senator thinks that people who do not agree with him are not fair-minded.

Mr. STEWART. That is my general judgment, because I know I am fair-minded, of course.

Mr. HOAR. I want to say that the income tax is about as big a piece of demagogism as was ever brought out.

Mr. STEWART. That shows the perversity of the Senator's mind.

Mr. HOAR. I think that most of the people, not all of them, who favor it think they are going to get political advantage in stirring this thing, and that they will find themselves dreadfully mistaken, as they have in a good many other like efforts.

Mr. STEWART. We may get no political advantages; we may have no political rights; but we would like to have the rich contribute as well as the poor.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask another question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. How much do the millionaire mine owners of Nevada contribute through income tax to the expense of that State?

Mr. STEWART. There are no millionaires there. You have destroyed them all by your legislation. We are not very much obliged to you for having destroyed the industry, but still having done it, we do not want you to proceed any further in your spoliation.

No; this is a more serious business than is generally supposed. The rich are practically exempt, and the taxation under this bill falls upon the poor, the business men. I undertake to say that if it had been understood when the Constitution was framed that the taxes should come out of the poor and that the rich should be exempt, the States would not have adopted the Constitution. If it had been supposed that more than half of the wealth would be owned by 1 per cent of the population and that there was no power in the Constitution to reach by taxation the half held by the rich, your Constitution could not have been adopted. An evil has grown up so great that it requires action on the part of the General Government.

It ought to be considered. We know the power of wealth; we know the difficulty of amending the Constitution, when it requires three-fourths of the States; we know how strongly the wealthy are intrenched in a few States, but still we will continue to try it. We will not give it up. Will anyone say that the States would not have adopted the Constitution if it had been known that it did not contain a provision which would exempt the rich, if they had known that it would be a fair Constitution? You could not have adopted a Constitution at all if there had been before the people the decision of the Supreme Court. The people never would have gone into a compact where the mass of the people would be taxed for the benefit of the classes, who have all the benefit of legislation.

Those who believe it is inopportune to bring this forward now will always believe it inopportune. There will be no time. We do not expect to pass it through this Congress. We do not expect it to pass while the party are in power which are now in power. They are opposed to the income tax. We do not expect anything of the kind; but we do want them to vote, so that we can have their record on this question as often as we can get it; and I thank my friend the Senator from Texas for bringing it up. We want a vote; we want to count noses, and to see how everybody stands, and let it go to the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course the Senator from Nevada may have a vote and count noses, but what sort of statesmanship is it to say that an amendment to the Constitution shall not go to the legislatures of the States, of which two-thirds of the Senate are in favor, unless there goes out with it also an amendment to the Constitution of which less than two-thirds of the Senate are in favor?

Mr. STEWART. How does the Senator know about it, in the first place?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will tell him.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator does not assume that two-thirds are not willing to do right?

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will let me answer the question, I will tell him how I know. It is because the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Nevada will not let the two propositions be voted upon as separate propositions. That is the way I know.

Mr. STEWART. If we can have votes for the right, for a great cause, by coupling it with a mere fancy—and some people will vote for a fancy who do not care much for the right—if we can get any votes in that way, we want them. The main thing is to get votes for the right.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not call it by a bad name, but it is not fair dealing and it is not statesmanship to adopt a coercive policy in reference to amendments to the Constitution of the United States in this way.

Mr. STEWART. A coercive policy! Do not the majority adopt it all the while? Do they not put things in bills and force us to vote for them every day? Now they object to having an amendment proposed to a measure which they bring forward. We have a right to propose amendments, and if a majority of the Senate vote it down, that is the end of it. But we want a vote on it. We want to see how you stand on this particular question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I will move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MILLS and Mr. STEWART called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] would vote "yea," I am quite sure.

Mr. CAFFERY. On that statement I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I should like to know whether my colleague [Mr. MURPHY] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am paired with him, and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY]. He is absent. I do not know how he would vote on this question.

Mr. BATE. I think he would vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BATE (when Mr. TURLEY'S name was called). My colleague is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who did not vote, I believe.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course I did not vote. I rose and stated that I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee, and I was proceeding to state, as I always do when the fact warrants it, that he was absent, and that therefore I was not at liberty to vote, and that if I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BATE. I know the Senator from Wisconsin would not vote, under the circumstances, except inadvertently.

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is absent from the Chamber. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and therefore withhold my vote. On this particular motion I should vote "yea" if at liberty to vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. Has he voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted, the Chair is informed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Therefore I will not vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENNEY. Has the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. KENNEY. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—32.

So Mr. MILLS'S amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. RAWLINS. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Massachusetts who has this matter in charge. The inquiry relates to the scope of the word "entitled." The provision is that where—there is no person entitled to discharge the duties of the office of President, the same shall devolve upon the Vice-President, etc.

Might that not involve the question as to whether the person claiming to be elected President was an alien-born person not entitled to hold the office, or might it not involve the question whether the person claiming to hold the office of President was lawfully elected to that office, involving not merely an inquiry as to facts, but as to a conclusion of law to be drawn from the facts in certain contingencies?

Mr. HOAR. The committee discussed that and more so than any other single word in the amendment, and we were all agreed that that was the best phrase we could find. The committee desired to keep off the ground of cases where a President actually in office became disqualified. There is likely to be great division of opinion in the country about that, and we thought it best not to enter into that domain. So I suppose the word "entitled" means simply where there is no person in existence who can lawfully assume the office.

Mr. RAWLINS. Then, if I understand the meaning which the committee takes this word to bear, it would include a case where a question was raised as to the qualification of a person who had been voted for for President, namely, whether he was a native-born citizen of the United States?

Mr. HOAR. I suppose that question would have to be settled in one of two ways. Of course my answer is my own speculation, which may not be approved by better constitutional lawyers than I am. I suppose there must be some time, under the general legislative authority to provide for all cases not specially provided for, a legislative establishment of a tribunal which can try the question of the lawful election of a President or Vice-President or of their qualifications, if that were a question in dispute. Suppose the birthplace of a President-elect were in dispute, it being claimed by some persons that he was born in Canada. That is one way. The other way, which I suppose is our present constitutional way, is that the title of the President of the United States must be determined by the recognition, as a political act, of him as the lawful official by the two Houses of Congress. But that is a very profound question, which I do not feel qualified to enter upon without a great deal of preparation and reflection. As I said, the committee thought it was wisest in providing for this very possible emergency to keep off that ground and leave it untouched.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator permit one other question? Doubtless the committee had it under consideration. Suppose a case where two persons are voted for for President and three persons for Vice-President. There might be no question as to the election of a certain individual as Vice-President and the title of the President might be clouded, conflicting claims being made in respect to it. Then the question would arise under the proposed act whether a particular person claiming to be entitled to the office of President was so entitled. If not, the Vice-President would take his place. I ask the Senator, in case of such a contingency arising, how it would be disposed of?

Mr. HOAR. It would be disposed of in the same way that a question of contested election for the office of President would be disposed of, and what I said in answer to the Senator's other question would be applicable to this. In other words, it was not the object of the committee in framing this amendment to provide for the case of contested title to the office between two persons—a contested election. That must be left to the existing remedies or to those hereafter to be provided. We only intended to provide for what the old Constitution provided for in the case of the death, removal, resignation, or disability of a President. That provides that the office shall then devolve on the Vice-President. But the Constitution neglects to care for this case. Let me put a case. I do not know what the historic fact is. I hope nobody will understand that I want to make any assumption. I put it by way of illustration. Suppose the stories are true that Mr. Lincoln was in danger on his way to the capital just before the 4th of March, 1861. If he had been killed in a railroad accident or in a popular uprising, there would have been no provision for anybody to have taken the place of President. The Vice-President, Mr. Hamlin, could not have succeeded, and we should have had anarchy. So the suggestion made by one Senator that this is a very doubtful and remote possibility does not seem to me, and does not seem to the committee, applicable. Now, it is for that case and the further case where there is no election either of President or Vice-President, as may happen where there are three candidates, and the case where they both die after they are elected and before the beginning of the new term, before they are inaugurated, that this provides, and it stops there and does not enter upon the question of settling whether there is a disability or of settling disputed cases of election.

Mr. RAWLINS. If I understand the Senator from Massachusetts correctly, it is intended to provide for contingencies happening after the election of a President.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; after the electors have voted and before the 4th of March.

Mr. RAWLINS. Why would it not be a good idea to have that made clear by the insertion of words to read, "Where no person is entitled by reason of a contingency happening after the election."

Mr. HOAR. I think it is as clear as we can make it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the purpose of the proposed amendment.

The framers of the Constitution originally intended that wherever for any reason there was a vacancy in the office of President, the Vice-President should exercise the duties of the office. They doubtless attempted to carry that intention into effect, and therefore they enumerated all of the several causes of vacancy which occurred to them at that time as probable to arise—the case of death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office. Doubtless to the framers of the Constitution those were the only probable causes which they anticipated might create a vacancy in the office of President, and therefore they enumerated those several causes and stopped there.

Mr. SPOONER. The office having been filled?

Mr. BACON. The office having been filled. Since that time the suggestion has been made that there might be vacancies which would not arise from either one of those three specified causes. To cure one specific contingency, to wit, the death of an elected President before the actual beginning of his term, the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] introduced a bill proposing to amend the Constitution so as to cover that particular defect, and if the original resolution is referred to it will be found that it was limited to that when it came before the Committee on the Judiciary.

In the various discussions which were had quite a number of other contingencies were suggested under which it might possibly arise that there would be a vacancy in the office of President, and there were repeated efforts made on the part of the Judiciary Committee to frame an amendment which would specify every conceivable contingency, to cover every suggestion which could be made as to the circumstances under which a vacancy might occur. It was found to be exceedingly difficult to do that, and finally the general language was adopted which has been incorporated in the proposed amendment now before the Senate, the original of which came from the Senator from Massachusetts. The purpose was to use such general language that not only in the particular instance the Senator from Utah now specifies, but that in all other instances, wherever there is a vacancy in the office of President under the Constitution, the office shall devolve upon the Vice-President.

That is the purpose. It is not simply to cover the particular suggestion made by the Senator from Utah, it is not simply to cover the particular suggestion contained in the original resolution framed and offered by the junior Senator from Maine, but it is to cover all possible contingencies; those now anticipated and any contingency not now anticipated. If the Senator from Utah will examine the language he will see that there can arise no possible contingency under the language of the resolution, if it is incorporated as an amendment to the Constitution, where in case of a vacancy the office would fail to devolve upon the Vice-President. That I understand to be the purpose of the committee and to be the intent of the language which they have recommended the Senate to adopt and to incorporate in the Constitution.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator from Georgia yield for a question?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. In the question which I propounded to the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the committee, I did not wish to be implied as stating that the amendment would cover only one contingency. The purpose of my inquiry was whether it would cover not only all contingencies happening after the election of President is held, but also whether it would not cover an emergency which might arise as to who was at a given election elected to the office of President?

Mr. BACON. I do not think it has any such relation. It certainly was not so designed.

Mr. RAWLINS. The object of my question was to obtain that statement, so that it would be understood, so far as the interpretation of this clause might be affected by the statements of those who prepared it, that the word "entitled" would relate only to vacancies happening by reason of some contingency subsequent to the time of the election.

Mr. BACON. During the consideration of this amendment by the committee that particular question was suggested and discussed, and there was a distinct disclaimer on the part of the committee in its deliberations of any purpose to have the amendment in any measure or in any manner relate to a question of contested election.

I desire to say that while it appeared to be an exceedingly simple matter to frame the resolution, which now appears to be in such simple language, it is an exceedingly difficult thing to do, and occupied the attention not only of the full committee for several meetings, but it occupied the attention of the subcommittees for several meetings, where they would report back to the full committee and have it again recommitted to them, where every word was most carefully weighed, where there were a great many different forms suggested, and where a great many words which appeared to be entirely proper at first were, after full discussion and deliberation, found to be improper and necessary to be eliminated. I believe, after the most careful consideration, the language which has been adopted is probably the best which can be found to effectuate the purpose for which it was designed.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. GEAR. I should like to have the joint resolution read at length.

The joint resolution was read the third time at length, as follows:

That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for ratification by the legislatures in the several States, which, when ratified by legislatures in three-fourths of the United States, shall be valid as a part of the said Constitution, namely:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"In all cases not provided for by Article II, clause 5, of the Constitution, where there is no person entitled to discharge the duties of the office of the President, the same shall devolve upon the Vice-President. The Congress may by law provide for the case where there is no person entitled to hold the office of President or Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability shall be removed or a President shall be elected."

Mr. PASCO. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the twelfth article of the Constitution provides for a case that is not in the second article, and whether he thinks reference ought not to be made to that also in this amendment. The joint resolution applies to all cases not provided for by Article II.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator will see, on looking at it, that the twelfth article makes no provision in the way of succession. It is merely as to the mode of election.

Mr. PASCO. The twelfth article provides that—

If the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the 4th day of March, next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.

Mr. HOAR. This provision is that the same shall devolve upon the Vice-President. It includes that. It is the same provision made more general which is found in the twelfth article in that special case. I do not think a reference to that article is necessary.

Mr. PASCO. If the attention of the Senator has been directed to that point I am satisfied.

Mr. HOAR. It has been.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass? [Putting the question.] The joint resolution is passed, the Chair declares by unanimous vote, two-thirds of the Senators present therefore concurring.

PRESIDENTIAL, VICE-PRESIDENTIAL, AND CONGRESSIONAL TERMS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before that motion is put, I desire to say that I am willing to let the other part of the special order, the joint resolution (S. R. 83) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, go over until 2 o'clock to-morrow, as the special order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to making Senate joint resolution 83, laid over from to-day at 3 o'clock, the special order for to-morrow at 2 o'clock? The Chair hears no objection. The order is made.

USE OF POSTAL CARDS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill (H. R. 1596) to amend the postal laws relating to the use of postal cards was passed on Monday. I will not ask that the vote be taken now, but enter a motion to reconsider.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Notice will be taken of the motion.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 496) granting a pension to Simpson Everett Stilwell;

A bill (S. 637) granting an increase of pension to Oliver P. Silvey;

A bill (S. 739) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Wright, of McPherson, Kans.;

QUARTERMASTER'S SUPPLIES, ETC.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 10, and 11.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 13, and 14, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment strike out the word "Sixth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Fourth;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. T. HULL,
B. F. MARSH,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. GORMAN. As I understand this bill, which was passed very hurriedly within the last day or two, it contains a provision which is probably the most extraordinary in any bill ever passed through Congress, suspending the rule and the law during the war with Spain, and authorizing any of the officers, upon the general direction of the Secretary of War, to make purchases without limit, without notice, and without advertisement. I have not had time to go back and look at the statute, but if my recollection serves me, even during the civil war, when the emergency was very much greater than it is now, no such purchases were authorized to be made unless in each case by some commanding general or the head of a Department, and then the cause of the emergency was certified to and appeared upon the vouchers in the Treasury Department.

As a matter of course, there have been cases, such as the recent appropriation of $50,000,000, placed in the hands of the President necessarily. That authority was given him because the expenditures were directly under his eye, and it has been understood generally that of that great expenditure there is a separate account kept, so that there may be no question hereafter about the expenditure, which is directly under the eye of the President. Extraordinary as that was, it was so safeguarded. But in this case any commanding officer, any purchasing officer, as I understand it, on his own motion can go into the open market and purchase anything he pleases under the authority given and the appropriation made.

I submit that there can be but one result from opening this door so wide. It matters not who is in control of the executive branch of the Government or the politics of the Administration, it is an unwise, imprudent, and, in my judgment, unnecessary authority to be granted. It ought not to be granted. There is no emergency that warrants it. If it were limited to a certification by the Secretary of War or the general commanding a corps or a brigade, there might be some excuse for it.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do I understand the Senator to say that the taking away of the restrictions by the pending bill gives greater latitude to the bureau officers of the War Department in making purchases than they had during the war of secession?

Mr. GORMAN. That is my belief. As I said a moment ago, I have not refreshed my memory by looking at the statute, but I do not think there is any doubt about it. I do not think it is questioned.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator from Maryland make that as an assertion?

Mr. GORMAN. I do.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope, if that is true, that the Senator from Connecticut will be able to show exactly what we do. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to say a word?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand that during the late war, now happily long passed, advertisements for supplies were necessary, except in those cases where the head of the Department certified that there was an emergency, so that there could not be delay for advertising, and that that certificate had to be made in each particular case.

Mr. GORMAN. That is my understanding.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, do I understand that the Senator from Maryland believes that the proposed law, as the Senator from Connecticut now brings it in, removes all necessity for the certification by some superior officer that there is an emergency in the particular case before the rule of competition is dispensed with?

Mr. HALE. Let us have the language of the bill read.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that to be the effect. If not, I hope the members of the Committee on Military Affairs will correct me. I think it bears that interpretation and it is so understood.

Mr. GEAR. Let it be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. It reads:

Be it enacted, etc., That the operation of the following provisions of law—

Now, those are certain requirements that there shall be advertising for a certain time, that proposals shall be brought in at a certain day and be examined by a board, and awards made, etc. In this rapid organization and reorganization of 150,000 men, it will be extremely difficult to do that without a delay, which would be very injurious to the service. But to meet the objections that have been made, this is in the bill:

That the operation—

"The operation," in the singular number—of the following provisions of law be, and it is hereby, suspended in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

They can not be suspended without the direction, the consent, of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. TELLER. He can make a general suspension.

Mr. HAWLEY. He can make a general suspension of certain things, or he can restrict that general suspension to certain cases.

Mr. TELLER. Would it not be better for us to restrict it?

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not tell exactly where to do it.

Mr. CULLOM. There is another clause in the latter part of the bill where it speaks of $200 in amount.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to understand what that refers to. What does it mean?

Mr. HAWLEY. Under the old law, when there was a broad, general limitation in certain directions, the instructions and limitations I have spoken of, there was nevertheless a loophole in the case of small transactions where it was necessary to buy something under $200 worth. That is suspended with the other provisions, because it required that each case should be reported to the War Department or to a commanding general somewhere for his approval. Now, when this disbursing and purchasing officer makes up his account all these things are to be reported, but they are not reported at the instant, to be sanctioned by a commanding officer, before the purchase can be made. Suppose a colonel in Cuba buys offhand 10 mules for $100, has he got to go all around Cuba hunting up a general or somebody or other to approve that purchase before he can use the mules? I think he will not wait for that.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is precious little in Cuba to buy, so far as that part of the proposition is concerned.

Mr. CULLOM. If the sum of $200 is excepted from the rule of advertising, the Secretary of War can except the whole thing. So there is nothing that can not be taken from under the present law, as I understand the meaning of the bill, but it is in the discretion of the Secretary of War——

Mr. HAWLEY. It is in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CULLOM. It is in the discretion of the Secretary to restrict the purchase except under the general law if he sees proper to do so.

Mr. SPOONER. Every account, I understand, approved by the Secretary of War without any advertisement would be his act in suspending or approving the suspension. How long is that suspension under this bill to last?

Mr. HAWLEY. During the existing war. I take it he can revoke a suspension. This provision applies during the whole war, but if the Army should be in camp anywhere in a peaceful country, as, for example, in Mobile or New Orleans or around Atlanta, the Secretary of War would not permit random purchases to be made, because there would be time. So in the late war of the rebellion it was not necessary to release officers from any of those restrictions, because we were slow in organizing our troops comparatively, on both sides, and there was no such extraordinary emergency as there is now or will be before the next month or the next two or the next three months probably.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator kindly specify, as he has the bill in his hand, what the sections are that may be suspended?

Mr. HAWLEY. Has the Senator the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have the Revised Statutes here.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am afraid they may not be apt to be found in the Revised Statutes of 1878, because some of the restrictions are incorporated in appropriation acts, and they are rather difficult to hunt up in a minute:

The provision of the first section of the act entitled "An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes," in the following words—

The suspended clause, that which can be suspended by the Secretary of War, is as follows:

Provided, That hereafter no part of this appropriation shall be expended in the purchase for the Army of draught animals until the number on hand shall be reduced to 5,000, and thereafter shall only be expended for the purchase of a number sufficient to keep the supply up to 5,000.

We have an army six times as large now.

Mr. HALE. As the Senator reads it, that is not a continuing provision. That is only a provision to provide for the particular appropriation. Will the Senator read it again?

Mr. HAWLEY. We considered that. I know exactly the point the Senator from Maine wishes to make. When they desired to have a bill of that sort in force only during the life of the appropriation act, they did not put in the word "hereafter;" but when they put in the word "hereafter," it is held by the committee that it then becomes a permanent law.

Mr. HALE. The language there confines it to the act, as I understood the Senator to read it. Will not the Senator read it again?

Mr. HAWLEY. The word "hereafter" occurs.

That hereafter no part of this appropriation shall be expended—

It does say "this appropriation"—

no part of this appropriation shall be expended in the purchase for the Army of draught animals until the number on hand shall be reduced to 5,000, and thereafter shall only be expended for the purchase of a number sufficient to keep the supply up to 5,000.

Hereafter the number shall be only 5,000. That would be permanent.

Mr. HALE. No; I think it would be limited to that appropriation; but probably it has been continued in subsequent appropriations.

Mr. HAWLEY. It may be in some of them.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a permanent law, I think.

Mr. HALE. I doubt it. It says "this appropriation."

Mr. HAWLEY. This was drawn very carefully. It has been studied as much as any Army bill that we have had here. It was drawn very carefully by the War Department at our request, at mine especially, in order that they might be satisfied and that they might have it carefully drawn by men who are accustomed to the whole business of raising and conducting an army, and accustomed to drafting statutes also. It has been drawn by one of the most skillful men in the Department.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me, does it not meet every possible exigency to require that the officer shall purchase with the approval of the Secretary of War, that the Secretary shall certify that the necessities of the service are such as to require a suspension of advertisement in each case? In other words, does not this provision absolutely as to all cases, to all intents and purposes, do away with those restrictions which it has been found wise to throw around the purchases of every Department, and for an indefinite time?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; in the discretion of the Secretary of War. If he finds it necessary to purchase 5,000 horses, he will authorize their purchase in open market, so that there will be competition. I was told that in the matter of the purchase of mules the price was put unnecessarily high by men who control the market, whereas if the quartermaster were allowed to go about the Western and Middle States and buy as an ordinary dealer would buy, he could get the mules for prices less than those held by the combination.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that under that provision, which is very general, the Secretary of War would not be obliged to wait until a given instance came before him to pass upon it, but he could issue an order beforehand suspending such and such act for such and such time.

Mr. HAWLEY. For such purposes.

Mr. HALE. For general purposes, and thereby do away with all this restriction. He would not have to wait until a subordinate reported to him that he wanted the authority, but undoubtedly would, as a matter of general administration, sweep away the law for a certain time, and then his subordinates would act under that order, and would report to him that they had acted under it. It is undoubtedly giving very great power.

Mr. HAWLEY. He might suspend it for the matter of the purchase of certain mules, or certain hay, or certain corn, or various other things of that sort, where they desire the power to make immediate purchases without waiting for advertisement, and where there may be no newspapers, for aught I know.

Mr. CHANDLER. The first clause which the Senator has read is undoubtedly correct; that is to say, it removes the limitation upon the number of horses or other animals that may be purchased. What I should like to have the Senator tell me, if he can, is whether section 3709 of the Revised Statutes is repealed or suspended. That section seems to be carefully drawn. It requires advertisements where there can be advertisements, and it does not require advertisements where there is an exigency. I will read that section. I ask the attention of the Senator from Maryland:

SEC. 3709. All purchases and contracts for supplies or services in any of the Departments of the Government, except for personal services, shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals respecting the same, when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the articles or performance of the service. When immediate delivery or performance is required by the public exigency, the articles or service required may be procured by open purchase or contract, at the places and in the manner in which such articles are usually bought and sold, or such services engaged between individuals.

It has always seemed to me that here was ample provision for all emergencies. You must advertise unless there is a certificate that there is an emergency, and when there is such an emergency the form of purchase known as the open-purchase system prevails. I am not aware of a necessity for the law which the Senator from Connecticut has brought in.

Mr. HALE. How far back does the statute run? Is that the statute which was in force during the civil war?

Mr. CHANDLER. It was passed on the 2d of March, 1861.

Mr. HALE. That is the existing law, and it is the law under which the war was prosecuted between the States.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand so. It may be that there ought to be further relaxation, and that the Senator from Connecticut can show us that fact. We shall be very glad to vote—I shall certainly be glad to vote for any further change in the law that is necessary; but it has always seemed to me that here was an elastic provision, which required advertising when there should be advertising and dispenses with it when there is an exigency. I remember very well, and so do other Senators, the form of the voucher. The voucher contains a certificate made by the superior officer that there is an exigency which did not permit of advertising, and that the articles therefore are procured by open purchase. If that provision is not ample for the present exigency, I want to make an ample provision.

Mr. HALE. And that provision was passed in just such an emergency as the present.

Mr. PROCTOR. The point in regard to section 3709 is that it is confined to immediate delivery. That is the point that induced the committee to make this change. It would be necessary for the War Department, of course, to make contracts for delivery in the future for supplies of tents and various things. The delivery will be extended along from time to time. It occurred to us that those contracts could not be made under the provisions of section 3709.

There is another point that strikes me as a matter of policy. While in ordinary times these purchases can be made to better advantage by advertisement, because the Department always reserves the right to reject any bids and has its full time, yet at this time, when they must buy promptly, there is great opportunity for bidders by combination to put up the price. If negotiation is opened, I think the Department will be able to purchase decidedly cheaper than if they were obliged to make bids and accept the lowest, which might be, and very often would be, a good deal higher than the price at which they could buy by private negotiation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call the attention of Senators to the fact that this clause is not very rigid as it stands. The Senator from Vermont now admits that the object is to get rid of the word "immediate" in this provision. The word "immediate," of course, has a liberal construction, and the statute was sufficiently elastic for all purposes during our civil war, because the law does not require six weeks' advertising or four weeks' or three weeks' advertising. It simply says:

All purchases and contracts for supplies * * * shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals respecting the same.

That provision, taken with the provision as to immediate delivery, covers the whole case. The Department can make their advertisement just as short as they like. They can make it two days, three days, one day, if they choose to take the responsibility of it; but when they advertise, if it is only for a day, there is competition. The moment that you repeal this law and allow contracts for delivery off in the future, one month, two months, three months, six months, or a year ahead, without advertising, of course the law of competition is destroyed unless the Department officers choose to obey the law of competition and to secure competition although the law does not require them to obtain it.

Mr. CULLOM. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that several Senators have expressed a desire that the conference report shall go over and be printed, so that it may be examined. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, submitting the report, will allow that course to be pursued.

Mr. HALE. That will involve the printing of the entire bill, as well as the report.

Mr. CULLOM. It will include the printing of the bill, so that we can see exactly what is the legislation proposed.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill be printed, so as to show the result of the conference.

Mr. CULLOM. Then Senators can see exactly what it means.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request? The Chair hears none. The report lies over, and the bill will be printed as indicated.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 5, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 4, 1898.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 4, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

FREE ZONE.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration House joint resolution 27, reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object to the present consideration of that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 27) to repeal the joint resolution in reference to the Free Zone.

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution in reference to the Free Zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States," approved March 1, 1895, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the full operation of section 3005 of the Revised Statutes as existing prior to the adoption of such joint resolution is hereby revived.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas raises the question of consideration.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANHAM. How does this bill come up?

The SPEAKER. The bill comes up regularly, it is claimed, as a privileged report.

Mr. LANHAM. I respectfully submit to the Chair that to hold this resolution privileged would not be a fair construction of the rule, for this is not a bill raising revenue. As I understand the rules, only such bills of the Ways and Means Committee as "raise revenue" can be submitted as a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas upon that point.

Mr. LANHAM. That is not the purpose of this resolution, as I understand. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, from the reading of the report that this is not a bill to "raise revenues" for the Government; on the contrary, it has reference essentially to certain transportation companies of the United States. Now, on page 235——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to hear the discussion upon the point of order, if gentlemen would permit it.

Mr. LANHAM. Page 235, clause 57 of Rule XI provides:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated.

Then, coming to the Committee on Ways and Means—

The Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue.

If this were a bill raising revenue for the Government, then it would be a privileged report; but I respectfully submit to the Chair that it is not a bill raising revenue; on the contrary, a slight inspection of the report will show the resolution which is sought to be repealed is a certain joint resolution heretofore enacted in relation to the transportation of goods in bond through the United States into what is known as the Zona Libre, or Free Zone, in Mexico.

Now, from the report the following appears: "On the contrary, the only effect of the resolution which is sought to be repealed here has been to drive from our own transportation lines large traffic to European and other transportation companies—a very large and profitable business—without any return whatever." It is the manifest object of the resolution to give increased advantages to transportation lines of the country, and not to "raise revenue" for the Government. Therefore I make the point that it can not be considered as a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means, because by no sort of construction can it be determined that it is a bill designed to "raise revenue" for the support of the Government.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the general proposition laid down by the gentleman from Texas. The difficulty that he labors under is that the resolution itself does not bear out his statement. I take it that a measure coming from the Committee on Ways and Means will require, in order to come within the rules, something dehors, extraneous to the record. Now, the resolution provides for the repeal of a certain repealing resolution which was passed some three years ago; and the committee state on the first page of the report that "the reason for the passage of that joint resolution was to prevent what was represented as a large smuggling trade back into the United States from the free goods admitted into this zone."

Now, that was said to be the purpose of the former resolution. I take it if that was the purpose of the resolution, to prevent a large smuggling business, the gentleman himself in his argument would concede the privileged character of this resolution. If you prevent smuggling, you enhance the revenue of the Government. Now, the committee say that the object of the former resolution was to prevent what was represented as "a large smuggling trade back into the United States from the free goods admitted in the zone."

Turn to the second page of the report and we have a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, who states that the operation and effect of the former resolution did not stop smuggling; on the contrary, it enhanced the business of smuggling; and therefore he recommends the repeal of that former act. It seems that makes it entirely plain. The Chair will not undertake to say by the very fact that this resolution simply repeals the former act, without looking into that act, and without looking into the reasons of these two acts—he will not undertake to say that it does not affect the revenue of the country. To illustrate for a moment. Supposed it was a joint resolution to repeal the tariff act, or to repeal any item of the tariff law, it would not appear to the Chair upon the resolution that it would affect the revenue.

Suppose it simply said that paragraph numbered so and so of some act of Congress should be repealed. Certainly the Chair would not undertake to say that because it did not say in terms that it related to an increase or decrease of revenue therefore it was not covered by the rule of the House.

Mr. LANHAM. Does the gentleman from Ohio contend that if this joint resolution were to pass it would have any effect of raising revenue for the Government?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is not for me to contend; the committee has contended that way, and the Secretary of the Treasury contends that way.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman further allow me? He has referred to a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, the concluding portion of which is as follows:

The opinion was also expressed that the only practical result of the legislation which it is intended to repeal has been loss of business to American railway companies by reason of the diversion of the traffic to points in the Free Zone by way of Mexican seaports. The views then expressed are reiterated, and I see no objection to the passage of House resolution No. 27.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is not all it says by a long ways.

Mr. LANHAM. I was only calling attention to the concluding portion.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; that is the concluding portion, but this is what he says:

On the 2d of February last, in reply to a letter from you inclosing, for an expression of the views of this Department thereon, House joint resolution 224, which is substantially the same as that under consideration, you were advised that there is abundant opportunity for the perpetration of frauds on the revenue by reason of the Free Zone of Mexico, and until the privileges pertaining to said zone are abolished by the Mexican Government the danger to the revenue will continue to exist.

Now, says the committee, it is our opinion that the former act, instead of affecting favorably the revenue, affected it unfavorably, and therefore it ought to be repealed.

Mr. LANHAM. Whatever may be the purpose, the joint resolution itself has not the right of way now. That is the point I am making.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand that; it is a public matter of some importance——

The SPEAKER. It is a change in the collection of the revenue—in the method of it, is it not?

Mr. LANHAM. No, sir; I think not. I do not think that is the effect of the resolution originally, or that the repeal contemplated will have any effect upon it.

The SPEAKER. The substitution of transportation in bond for something else, or something else for transportation in bond?

Mr. LANHAM. Not at all. It does not go through the United States in bond under existing law. It goes to the Mexican ports and up on Mexican railways. The object of this is that it may give certain benefits to the American lines of transportation.

The SPEAKER. That may be the ultimate object of it, but at present it is to change the method of treating imported goods.

Mr. LANHAM. Only with reference to what is known as the Free Zone.

The SPEAKER. It is with reference to that, a change in the method of treating the receipt of imported goods and the collection of revenue thereon.

Mr. LANHAM. Not of American revenue. Goods are allowed to be imported into the Free Zone at reduced rates of tariff.

Mr. BAILEY. If my colleague will permit me, I suggest that he read section 305 and he will perceive that it does not affect the revenue, which I take it to be the crucial test. I desire to say that while I think my colleague is right on the point of order, I do not agree with him on the merits of the proposition.

I thought it was generally agreed that the law which this section seeks to repeal had failed to accomplish the purpose intended, and that it ought to be repealed and the former law revived. It seems to me on the question of order the test is this: Will the revenue raised under the law as it will stand when this bill is passed be either greater or less than the revenue raised under the law as it stands to-day? I believe it will be precisely the same. The only difference is that the section which it is now sought to revive simply permits the goods to pass in bond without paying any duty.

The SPEAKER. It is suggested that goods are smuggled, and that this present system affords more facility for it than the one proposed to be revived.

Mr. BAILEY. It would not affect the collection of revenue at all.

The SPEAKER. The more smuggling there is, the less revenue.

Mr. BAILEY. I think in deciding the point of order the Chair could not go into a question of that kind. Now, if the rule had read "all bills affecting the revenue," I would agree that this does affect the revenue, and would therefore be privileged.

But the language is explicit. The words used are "raising revenue," and I take it that even a bill changing the methods of collecting would not be privileged under that wording. I suppose the rule was carefully drawn, and drawn with the purpose of excluding all kinds of bills except those which add to the revenues of the Government. I take it that a bill simply changing the method of collecting revenue, either customs duties or internal-revenue taxes, could not be privileged under the language of the rule, for, while this bill undoubtedly affects the collection of the revenues, it does not raise them. I believe myself, from the best information I can obtain, that the bill ought to pass, but I do not believe it is privileged under the rule.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to ask my friend from Texas whether a bill dealing with the bonding privilege, which affects directly the collection of revenue, is not a privileged matter?

Mr. BAILEY. If the proposition stood alone, I should say no, under this rule. But if a bill raising revenue embodied some other provision, then the whole bill would be privileged. But I ask the gentleman from Maine——

Mr. DINGLEY. But the words "raising revenue" apply as well to reducing revenue as increasing it. In order to come under the terms of the rule, the bill need not make any increase of revenue.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the language of the rule is unfortunately chosen.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at all. When it speaks of "raising revenue," it does not necessarily mean to reduce it. There have been a great many tariff bills recognized as privileged which did not raise revenue in the sense of increasing it.

Mr. BAILEY. I venture to suggest that reducing can not be raising.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Texas does not mean to be understood as claiming that, in order to bring a bill within the scope of this rule, it must appear that the revenue will be increased by the passage of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. On reflection I am inclined to think that the words "raising revenue" might mean levying taxes, and might apply to the imposition as well of lower duties as of higher duties.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Of course.

Mr. BAILEY. I am perfectly sure, upon a moment's reflection, that that view is correct. Still that does not escape the proposition that the bill, in order to be privileged, must be one that lays a duty or a tax—either lower than the existing one or higher. While the words "raising revenue" might be understood to apply to a bill laying taxes without reference to the amount of the tax as compared with the existing tax, still that language can not possibly be construed to have reference to any bill that does not lay a tax. A measure, in order to meet the requirements of this definition, must be an effort to raise revenue, not merely to effect its collection.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman whether an administrative customs measure, when presented to the House, is not privileged?

Mr. BAILEY. I should think not if it merely——

Mr. DINGLEY. It has been so held in the House.

Mr. BAILEY. I should think not if it merely related to the manner in which duties should be collected. In that respect the language of the rule seems to me too plain for misconstruction.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that Mr. Carlisle expressed the opinion that the administrative customs bill, which did not apply to the question of taxation, but only as to the methods of collecting the revenue, was a privileged bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. Speaker, if that be true—and no doubt it is as the gentleman states it—it only illustrates the vice of construing rules rather than executing them. It was so easy to provide for all these cases, if the Committee on Rules had seen fit to do so, by simply using the words "affecting the revenue" instead of the words "raising revenue;" and as the committee did not choose to use the word "affecting," but did choose to use the word "raising," we must assume they meant "raising," instead of "affecting." And I am in the habit of believing that it is as true of presiding officers as it is of judges, that they ought to enforce the rules as they are written rather than construe them to mean what they think ought to have been written.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will not discuss the question further. I am willing to leave it to the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. LANHAM. May I make a very brief suggestion to the Chair? I maintain that whether this resolution be passed or not, it will have no effect upon the matter of smuggling, so far as the Free Zone is concerned; and I want to repeat the reading of a portion of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury from which the gentleman from Ohio read:

> On the 2d of February last, in reply to a letter from you, inclosing, for an expression of the views of this Department thereon, House joint resolution 222, which is substantially the same as that under consideration, you were advised that there is abundant opportunity for the perpetration of frauds on the revenue by reason of the Free Zone of Mexico, and until the privileges pertaining to said zone are abolished by the Mexican Government the danger to the revenue will continue to exist.

I respectfully submit to the Chair that it is the existence of the Free Zone that encourages smuggling; and the passage of this resolution will have no effect so far as that matter is concerned. Nor will it raise or increase the revenues of this Government. That is clearly inferable from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. I repeat, it will neither raise revenue for the Government nor will it prevent smuggling.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to call your attention to the fact that this resolution if passed will raise revenue for railroad companies and not for the Government.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on the subject-matter of the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has really stated the identical point involved here; and that is as to the words "raising revenue" for the support of the Government. The gentleman admits that if the bill were a bill affecting the raising of revenues, he would regard the question of order as decided.

The Chair thinks that the interpretation always given, with reference to the pending point, is such as to make it quite the equivalent of a bill "affecting revenues," as suggested by the gentleman from Texas, and that the mere language used of "raising revenue," instead of "affecting revenue," can have no material application to the question of order.

Not only in the opinion cited by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], where Mr. Carlisle agreed that an administration bill was privileged in the same sense as the bill now presented, but in almost every other instance every tariff bill which has been considered by the House has contained, necessarily, some administration measures, pure and simple, which the bill would not have been entitled to carry unless in order and privileged under the rule, inasmuch as any unprivileged feature would necessarily take away from the bill the effect of such privileged matter as it might carry; and the Chair thinks that it has been the universal construction that all measures affecting the revenue or the methods of collection of revenue are understood to affect the raising of revenue. While it is true that any Speaker, when this question is raised, might construe the rules very strictly, nevertheless after they have been reenacted they are understood to be reenacted as carrying with them the construction placed upon the rules, just as the reenactment of a statute after a decision of the court is understood to be reenacted with the approval of that provision.

So it seems to the Chair that this being a measure relating to the revenues, and the collection of the revenues, and without determining whether it increases or decreases the revenue, it is a matter that comes strictly within the rules and can be considered under the rules.

The Chair therefore overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise the question of consideration——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is that in order now, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I make the point that this should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas is well taken.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill which has been reported by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. LACEY in the chair.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to be recognized in opposition to this bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to call attention very briefly to the resolution under consideration. I desire to say that this is a public matter——

Mr. STEELE. Would it not be better to have the resolution reported?

Mr. HULL. It has not been reported to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to get the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution in reference to the Free Zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States," approved March 1, 1895, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the full operation of section 3005 of the Revised Statutes as existing prior to the adoption of such joint resolution is hereby revived.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is a public matter, a matter that affects the administration of the Treasury Department. It can not be said to be a local matter, and if there are one or two Congressional districts in the United States that oppose the passage of this resolution because the present state of things is beneficial especially to those districts, then that is a good reason why this resolution ought to pass, because it affects the collection of the revenue of the entire country.

I will briefly state the points in the case, and then I will yield time to gentlemen familiar with the operation of the conditions both under the existing law and the law prior to the passage of the resolution of 1895.

The Mexican Government, you might almost say from time immemorial, has first established and then maintained a strip of country 13 miles wide, known as the Free Zone, or in the Mexican language, the "Zona Libre," into which foreign goods are permitted to come free of duty, transported in bond through the Mexican Republic, and, until the former action of Congress, transported in bond through the United States, and delivered into the Free Zone without the payment of duty.

It is a matter that the United States Government can not control. It is the prerogative of the sovereignty of the Mexican Republic. I had the benefit of the complete and perfect learning of the distinguished minister of Mexico to the United States, giving a most interesting history of everything relating to the Free Zone. However, it scarcely affects, one way or the other, our pending question, but it is so interesting that I felt, after consultation with the committee, that it would be a proper thing to incorporate it into the report of the committee.

Now, in 1895, the law previous thereto having permitted the transportation of goods through the United States into the Free Zone, Congress, in the hope that the Mexican Republic would discontinue the Free Zone, passed a resolution repealing the authority to transport goods in bond through the United States into the Free Zone of Mexico, a right which had existed for many years. I remember the debate very well, although at the time I took no part in it. It was resisted with great energy and much research by the distinguished Representative from Texas, Mr. Crain, and he in his speech, which I have before me, pointed out that two things that it was claimed would happen would not happen, and that the precise conditions which we find would exist.

But Congress did not heed Mr. Crain's argument upon the very ground which I have laid the foundation for, and that is that he had no right to put up any supposed interest of a single Congressional district to undertake to defeat the will of Congress in relation to a national matter of this character.

Now, something like three years have passed, and the Secretary of the Treasury, having been appealed to by the Committee on Ways and Means, says that there has been no benefit to the United States derived from the repeal, and that so long as the Mexican Government maintains the Free Zone there can be no benefit; and I may say we have no complaint against our sister republic upon this ground.

This is a matter for her. It is not our revenue. It does not in that way affect our revenue, theoretically, at least, and the only way in which our revenue is affected is by the furnishing of better facilities for smuggling than there would be without it, and I think I can make it very plain to everybody here who may give me his attention for a moment. If goods are transported in bond through the custom-houses of the United States along the border line of Mexico into the Free Zone, the representatives of the Government at the custom-houses know something about what is going on, and so it has been found that, now that our knowledge of the importations into the Free Zone has been entirely cut off, the effect has been unfavorable. I remember how strenuously Mr. Crain said that if we wanted to promote smuggling, this was one of the steps to take, as it barred United States officials from all knowledge of that which was going into the Free Zone of Mexico.

Well, now, there is another objection, and I stand here very boldly to say that it does not affect my judgment to say that the railroads of the United States are unfavorably affected by the condition. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] thinks that that will be a potent argument here, I think he misinterprets the will of the House.

Let us now come exactly up to the very point of this argument. There is a Free Zone, into which goods will go, under the right of sovereignty of the Republic of Mexico. If this law stands, they can not be carried in bond through the United States, but they may come in bond without limitation through the Republic of Mexico upon two great railroad lines down there. Now, the gentleman says this repeal will favorably affect the railroads on our side of the line.

Is it possible there is a feeling here that you will make war upon the interests of the American railroads in the interests of the Mexican railroads? I do not think so. I think that if these goods are to be carried, and they are; if this traffic is to be continued, and it is; then, in my judgment, that argument alone, that it will transfer the traffic to American railroads or some part of it, is a good argument to use to anybody on the floor of this House, and that especially when you couple it with the power of supervision that it gives to the custom-house on the United States side of the line. They are now debarred from having anything to do with it.

Why, it is said that the Southern Pacific Railroad is affected. Possibly it is. So is the Pennsylvania Railroad; so are the steamboat lines that come to New York; so is the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; so is the great Southern system. For they are all contributors to the transportation results that carry these goods from the United States in bond and deposit them in the Free Zone of Mexico.

So, Mr. Speaker, I shall not be driven from my position by simply making an appeal that this would help our railroads. I would be glad to see the traffic of our railroads built up, doubled, quadrupled, so that the laboring men of the United States might have the right to demand and the power to insist upon and secure their share in the results of that traffic.

So, while it is a matter of no very great importance to the railroad lines, I am not going to run away from it because we may assail it on that ground. Now, gentlemen, this is a matter relating merely to the matter of the collection of the revenue of the country, relating merely to the protection of the revenue of the country from smuggling, and in favor of this proposition it has the unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means, passed upon the request and advocacy of two Secretaries of the Treasury in succession.

I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, this question of the abolition of the right of transportation of goods in bond to the Mexican-Texas frontier for delivery in the Free Zone is not one of very great importance to the revenues of the country one way or the other. In my judgment, it does not affect smuggling into this country or out of this country. It is a mere question of whether or not we shall deliberately put upon our railroads an injustice and a hardship and entail unnecessary cost upon them in the transaction of their business, and whether we shall deliberately affront by a petty annoyance the Republic of Mexico, which lies on yonder side of the Rio Grande. The Free Zone is a peculiar institution, the like of which we do not have in our country. To term it "free zone" is to term it inaccurately.

The Government of Mexico imposes a duty of 17½ per cent of the regular tariff on goods going into that zone. When first inaugurated, I believe, it was the practice to permit the introduction of goods at a rate of 2½ per cent of the ordinary duties of the country, which 2½ per cent was merely intended to cover the local charges for inspection and handling. A most interesting history of the Free Zone is given by Mr. Romero in the document published in the report of this committee, which will repay perusal by all who are interested in the commercial history of the country, of Mexico, and specially of the frontier. I will say briefly that the Free Zone was inaugurated prior to the civil war in this country because Mexico saw her people on the borders constantly moving into the more prosperous territory of Texas.

Wishing to prevent the loss of all her people, they conceived the idea of the establishment of a free zone into which goods were permitted to be introduced at a very moderate customs charge, believing that it would have the effect of giving that country a prosperity which it might not have, and thereby retain her citizens in her own country. The theory which they undertook to put into practice had no fair opportunity for trial before the civil war came on in this country, when immediately that part of Mexico adjacent to the territory of the United States assumed unusual importance; and Matamoras, which before the war and before the inauguration of the Free Zone was a straggling Mexican village, became at once, or almost at once, an important city of 40,000 people, with a great commerce.

Cotton and other articles of export required by Europe were taken out of Texas, at the back door of the Confederacy, so to speak, and could go to English, French, and German ships and be transported to Europe without hindrance. As many as eighty vessels at a time were anchored in the open sea off the mouth of the Rio Grande River. Some Mexicans, doubtless many of them, attributed this increased prosperity to this new law of their own, that creating the Zona Libre. To disprove the position which they took on that question you have only to investigate a little into the history of the border subsequent to the civil war.

Immediately after that unhappy war was over our own towns began to prosper. Brownsville, Laredo, Eagle Pass, and El Paso immediately began to grow in trade and population, and almost simultaneously the Mexican towns began to decline. They still believed—many do to this day—that the Free Zone created the prosperity they enjoyed during the civil war. On the other hand, the distinguished gentleman who represents the Republic of Mexico, Mr. Romero, a scholar, a man well informed upon all matters of history, literature, and commerce, has been and is now of the opinion that the Free Zone is of no benefit to Mexico, and now advocates, as he did some twenty years ago when secretary of the Mexican treasury, the abolition of the law. In this connection I wish to say if we desire to secure the abolition of the Free Zone we had best not go about it by trying to coerce Mexico. For my part, and right here, I wish to say that I believe the Free Zone is of absolute benefit to the commerce of my own State. The people of Mexico on the other side of the river buy the most of their staple articles of food on this side.

I can not speak with exact knowledge of the city represented by my colleague, Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, the town of El Paso, for that town seems to oppose the repeal of this law. I do speak, however, of Eagle Pass, which is in my district, and of Laredo, in the district represented by my friend Mr. KLEBERG. The merchants who originally advocated the passage of the resolution are uniformly demanding its repeal. They say with absolute sincerity that the only effect of it has been to put additional charges for the handling of their business on our railways and increasing the labor of our customs officers and to annoy the Mexicans.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the Clerk read a letter which I send to the desk, received from the collector of customs at Eagle Pass, Mr. Fitch.

The Clerk read as follows:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, PORT OF EAGLE PASS,
DEPUTY COLLECTOR'S OFFICE,
February 4, 1898.

DEAR SIR: I notice by the Express that you have introduced a bill for the repeal of resolution No. 20, regulating the shipment in bond of goods destined for points within the Zona Libre of Mexico. A few days ago I signed a petition addressed to you asking you to work to that end, and inasmuch as I was one of the principal advocates of said measure, as you will find in the records of the Treasury Department in my letters addressed to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, bearing date of March 26 and April 1, respectively, for the year 1894, I therefore desire to state my reasons for my present action.

At the time of the agitation for the passage of the resolution this town was suffering in a marked degree from the effects of the Free Zone, and still does, for that matter. The bill failed of its purpose, as a way was found to defeat the law, and the result was that goods continued to pass through our country in bond to the Free Zone the same as before.

As the law now stands, it is of no benefit to towns on this side of the river, and is a great annoyance to those doing business on the other side. It causes much unnecessary labor to the clerical force of this office and much expense to the Government at the first port of arrival, where all goods have to be opened, examined, and appraised when intended for the Free Zone in like manner as if they were going into consumption in this country.

I would favor a law curing this defect in the law, which could perhaps be done, except for the reason that the Mexican Government has ruled that goods destined for the Free Zone may be imported through the ports of that country and shipped through that country to points in the Free Zone without the payment of the Mexican duties. Under these circumstances I favor the repeal of the law unconditionally, but believe that any bill looking toward a reciprocity treaty with Mexico should contain a clause looking to the abolishment of the Free Zone. I will be pleased to give you any further information on this subject at any time.

Very truly, yours,

W. A. FITCH.

Hon. JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the author of the law which we now ask to repeal thought, of course, that it would increase the sale of merchandise on our side of the river, and that the effect would be to ultimately coerce the Mexican Government into the abolition of the Free Zone. But the President of the Republic of Mexico, exercising his constitutional right, modified the customs regulations of that country, which had previously forbidden the introduction of goods through Mexican ports and their transportation across the country in bond. His answer to the resolution of our Congress was to immediately modify the customs regulation of Mexico and to give Mexican merchants in the Zona Libre the right to bring in goods by way of Guaymas, Tampico, and Vera Cruz, and to pay the zone duty upon the delivery of the goods on the frontier where they were to be offered for sale.

That alone operated so as to nullify the desired effect of the resolution. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, our own railways immediately, as suggested in the letter read by the Clerk, found the means of evading and getting around the law. The goods were opened, examined, and appraised in the ports of entry at New Orleans, New York, Galveston, or wherever they happened to be entered, and were then sent to custom-houses on the border at Eagle Pass, El Paso, and Laredo, immediately taken out there and taken across the river. The only effect of the law has been to divert some trade from our roads to the Mexican roads and to put additional responsibilities and labor upon our officials.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is unquestionably true that the railways of this country do desire the resolution repealed; they do desire the privilege of carrying goods in bond across this country to be delivered into the Free Zone, and in my humble judgment they ought to have it.

I believe that whenever I can with propriety contribute to the prosperity of an American individual or an American corporation I should do so. I have occasionally, in my feeble way, fought railway companies, or rather I have fought their unjust exactions, but I have never fought the corporation itself. I do not believe that because the railways of the country desire that this resolution should be repealed, and because it may increase their prosperity to some extent, that a single vote should be cast against it, and I can not believe it will be done.

Mr. Chairman, before resuming my seat I want to read a few lines to the House from a letter received three years ago from the collector of customs at Laredo, in the district represented by my friend, Mr. KLEBERG. It was written in reply to a letter by the lamented Mr. Crain:

I am just in receipt of the marked copy of the Washington Post dated February 13, sent me by you, containing an extract from the report of Civil Service Commissioner Lyman on his recent tour of inspection along the Mexican frontier. With the greater part of the conclusions reached by Commissioner Lyman I very heartily agree; but I am unable to see what benefit will accrue to the United States from the abolition of the Free Zone. It is true that petty smuggling is constantly carried on between the towns in the Free Zone, just across the river, and those on this bank.

Let me say, in passing, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Earnest says further along in this letter that petty smuggling will continue to go on there. The Rio Grande River ordinarily is not over 10 inches deep; it is about half a mile wide. They have brandies, cigars, and a few things of that sort on the other side which people of good taste on this side want and which occasionally they are willing to enjoy without paying the Government its tribute in the way of revenue. As long as that river is shallow and as long as human nature is what it is there will be more or less smuggling going on. The letter continues:

This petty smuggling is annoying, and it is almost impossible to prevent it. The purchases of foreign goods in Nuevo Laredo, for instance, made by persons from this side are usually small in quantity and value. I think that in most cases the petty smuggling of this character is done by ladies who conceal about their persons a few pairs of silk hose, of kid gloves, small quantities of lace, and in some instances silk dress patterns. As the majority of the people here, however, do not indulge in silk goods of any character, these purchases are not extensive. On the other hand, the people who live across the river buy very largely on this side, their purchases consisting of groceries, prints, hardware, and articles of like character.

Now, to those gentlemen who insist upon the abolition of the Free Zone of Mexico I desire especially to call attention to this passage of the letter from Mr. Earnest:

One gentleman who lives in Nuevo Laredo told me lately that his monthly bills on this side of the river amounted to $60. Numbers of families living in Nuevo Laredo buy practically all of their groceries from merchants on this side of the river. The commission merchants here tell me that they have in the Free Zone one of their best markets. Flour, bacon, and many other American products are sold in Nuevo Laredo and the territory above and below that point. In fact, the balance of trade is very largely in our favor. I can not assent to the proposition that the existence of the Free Zone has inured very largely to the benefit of the Mexican border towns, and that business is "dead and unprofitable" in the American towns opposite them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to have two minutes more.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, so far from desiring the abolition of the Free Zone, I would, if I could exercise any influence whatever upon the Mexican Government, ask it to extend that zone three, four, or five hundred miles farther back. This territory adjacent to us has a duty of only 17½ per cent of the normal Mexican duty; and on the other side it backs up against a part of Mexico which has a tremendously high duty, so that the extension of this Free Zone would certainly be a benefit to the trade of this country. Therefore I say that so far from asking the abolition of the Free Zone, I would vastly prefer to have it extended farther back into the interior.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state the territorial extent of what is called the "Free Zone of Mexico?"

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is 13 miles in width and runs along the entire border between Mexico and the United States.

Mr. HUNTER. How much coast line does it embrace?

Mr. SLAYDEN. No coast line. It extends from the Gulf of Mexico up the Rio Grande, following the entire border line between the United States and Mexico.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the Zona Libre, or Free Zone, is a strip of territory on the Mexican side of our international boundary 12½ miles wide. Foreign goods imported into this zone of Mexico pay only 18½ per cent of the regular Mexican import duties. Goods imported into Mexico from the United States pay 18½ per cent at the first line, and if they pass the second line, 12½ miles farther on in Mexico, they pay 81½ per cent more. But goods to be used in Mexico beyond the Free Zone must pay the full duties at the first or boundary line of Mexico. By the treaty of 1848 the Rio Grande River became the boundary line between Mexico and the United States from the Gulf of Mexico to El Paso.

The tariff duties of the United States were very light from 1848 until the civil war, while the Mexican rates were very high. Mr. Romero, in his forty-page report on this bill, speaking of this period, says:

That the import duties (of Mexico) on foreign goods were so high as to be practically prohibitory. Many commodities were actually excluded from the country (Mexico) under the plea of protection to our national industries, and among these were articles of prime necessity, such as grain and provisions.

The result of this was that radically different prices prevailed in the towns on the two sides of the river. At Brownsville, Tex., for instance, on the north bank of the Rio Grande, commodities and the necessaries of life, such as provisions and clothing, were bought at a low price, while at Matamoras, on the south bank (Mexican side), the same articles of domestic production, and often of an inferior quality, cost twice and even four times as much as at the stores just across the river. The difference in taxation—and consequently in prices on the frontier, brought about one of two results. It either caused the inhabitants of the Mexican towns to emigrate to the settlements on the other (American) side of the river in order to enjoy the advantages which were to be had in this country, or it induced them to purchase in the United States the goods which they needed and to smuggle them across the river to their homes in Mexico.

This condition of affairs in 1849 forced the Mexican Congress to pass a law reducing duties through the custom-houses of the State of Tamaulipas on provisions to be used by the people of that State. This was the first step to the present Mexican Free Zone law, and in 1858 the governor of that State issued a decree establishing the Free Zone in that State. This decree exempted all foreign goods intended for use in the frontier towns of that State from the payment of all duties. But when removed to the inland towns of Mexico the importer had to pay the regular duties. The reason for the establishment of the Free Zone is explicitly stated in the words of the decree, viz:

Whereas our towns on the northern frontier are in a state of actual decadence for lack of laws to protect their commerce; and

Whereas, being situated in close proximity to a commercial nation which enjoys free trade, they need equal advantages in order not to lose their population, which is constantly emigrating to the neighboring country; now, therefore, desiring to put an end to so serious an evil by means of franchises which have so long been demanded by the frontier trade, etc., I have seen fit to decree as follows, etc.

This decree was approved by the Federal Congress of Mexico in 1861, and was extended in 1870 and in 1885 so as to include the whole boundary between Mexico and the United States, and at present 18½ per cent of the regular duties must be paid before goods can be introduced into the Free Zone from this country. Mr. Romero, in the letter I have referred to, states that—

Such articles as coffee, sugar, straw hats, shoes, vegetables, flour, beans, milk, fruits, meat, common clothing, blankets, etc., used and consumed by the poorer class of people, are, if Mexican products or manufactures, cheaper than if imported from the United States.

Thus it is evident that the people of Mexico living in the Free Zone have been greatly benefited by their Free-Zone law, and that the United States has been correspondingly injured thereby.

In the same letter he further says that—

Public men in the United States, or at least some of them, have been for some time under the impression that the way to abolish the Free Zone was to repeal the acts which allowed foreign merchandise to go in bond to frontier custom-houses, as if Mexico was very anxious, which was by no means the case, that the border towns of the United States should enjoy that privilege. And this accounts for the efforts made to repeal such acts, which were always unsuccessful until Mr. Cockrell passed his bill.

Senator Reagan, of Texas, was one of the public men referred to by Mr. Romero who wanted to repeal the acts to permit foreign goods to go in bond to frontier custom-houses, and on July 1, 1890, he presented a bill, known as Senate bill 1642 (Fifty-first Congress, first session), for this very purpose; and where Reagan leads, no man (surely no Texan) need fear to follow. Pope says that—

An honest man's the noblest work of God.

I know of no man to whom this maxim better applies than to John H. Reagan, of Texas, for—

Titles of honor add not to his worth
Who is himself an honor to his titles.

Mr. Romero says that a similar measure to Senator Reagan's bill was finally passed by Congress on February 27, 1895, and this is now the law that is sought to be repealed by the pending measure. This House resolution was introduced by my predecessor, Mr. Cockrell, and, in my judgment, should not be repealed until Mexico abolishes the Free Zone.

The resolution is as follows, and is found on page 973, volume 28, Statutes at Large:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to suspend the operation of section 3005 of Revised Statutes in so far as the same permits goods, wares, and merchandise to be transported in bond through the United States into the Free Zone of Mexico so long as the Mexican Free Zone exists: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed so as to prevent the transportation of merchandise in bond to be delivered at points in the territory of Mexico beyond the limits of the Free Zone.

This resolution should not be repealed, for the reason that the same condition of affairs exists now as in 1895 on the borders of Mexico, and the people of the city of El Paso, in my district, are unanimously (so far as I am advised) in favor of the law remaining as it is now.

The Free Zone was created by Mexico to permit her citizens to take from our citizens the benefit of the great prosperity they enjoyed by reason of the low tariff in our country and the high tariff in Mexico. The goods costing the Mexican merchant so much more than they did ours compelled them to sell much higher than our merchants, and thus broke up their business, as shown by Mr. Romero's remarks, before alluded to by me.

The Mexican Government, therefore, to avoid the result of their own laws, seek to and do give their own towns in the Free Zone the benefits and advantages heretofore held by the American merchants and citizens. Mr. Blaine, in 1868, introduced a resolution in the House of Representatives looking to the correction of this Free Zone trouble. In 1870 Senator Patterson introduced a bill which passed the Senate, and later Senator Reagan a bill for the same purpose. It will, therefore, be seen that the measure now sought to be repealed had long been advocated by some of the strongest men in Congress, irrespective of party affiliations. Mr. Romero, in his letter, says that some of the most prominent men in the United States misunderstood the scope and purpose of the Free Zone.

I suppose he alluded to Mr. Blaine, Senator Patterson, and Senator Reagan, and Representative Cockrell, whose resolution finally passed and became a law. He may have had in mind that the legislature of Texas on January 24, 1895, recommended the passage of the Cockrell resolution, and it did pass on March 1, thereafter. If this resolution was necessary then it is necessary now. The members of the Texas legislature, many of whom lived on or near the Rio Grande River, certainly understood this Free Zone question and voted understandingly, and Congress granted their request by passing the Cockrell resolution. The town of El Paso, in the district I represent, is unanimous in their opposition to the repeal of the Cockrell resolution.

The advocates of this measure claim that the merchants of the Free Zone now buy as many goods and put them into their stores in the towns of the Free Zone as cheaply as they did before the present law was enacted. If so, why are all of the merchants in the Free Zone, the railroads, and Mexico, through Mr. Romero, clamoring for the repeal of this law? The reason is that by its repeal they can undersell our merchants and build up their towns and enrich their merchants.

I appeal to all of the members of this House who have a manufacturing constituency to defeat this resolution and thereby we will sell our goods in our own home market and keep out the untaxed foreign goods.

If this law is repealed, we will have to compete with foreign goods on the Mexican side, that pay no tariff duties.

The main reason given for the repeal of this law is that it injures the railroads in the United States and benefits the roads in Mexico. This is not true, for the Government of Mexico does not allow shipment in bond through its territory into the Free Zone except from Vera Cruz and Tampico, and why should this Government permit free of duty a shipment of goods in bond into the same zone, thus granting Mexico a privilege that she refuses to her own people? A proposition to act in this way is neither a common-sense nor a business proposition. As the law now stands neither Government grants this permission, except from two ports in Mexico, and the railroads of each are on exactly the same footing, as they should be.

Granting for argument sake that the repeal of this law would to some extent benefit the railroads, on the other hand it would injure a much greater number of our merchants and traders and also build up the Mexican towns on this Free Zone and correspondingly injure our own towns. In 1895 Commissioner Lyman, of the United States Civil Service Commission, was sent to the Free Zone to study the subject and report. He reported that the Free Zone was prejudicial to the interest of the United States; that it encouraged smuggling, and as a remedy that the bonded privilege for foreign merchandise should be withdrawn. The Cockrell resolution followed this suggestion.

The towns on the Free Zone would have competing lines of railroad to ship over if this law was repealed. Their merchants could ship their goods over either the Mexican or our railroads, because the tariff would be the same either way (if they could get foreign goods through our territory in bond). Thus they could get the very lowest rate of freights. Our merchants can not ship over Mexican roads, because the Mexican Government does not let us ship in bond, but requires us to pay their duties. Hence our merchants are at the mercy of the United States system of railroads and pay double the freight rate that the merchants over the river pay.

But while we continue the present laws in force, our merchants, having competing lines of railway to their towns, get much cheaper rates of freight than the Mexican towns across the border. I will ask this House why our Government should let Mexican merchants ship goods through our territory in bond while they deprive us of the same privilege through theirs, and thus give the Mexican merchants the same rate of freights that our own merchants get? Every Mexican town across the border has only one line of railway, and no competition. Hence the road charges higher rates of freight than our merchants enjoy. By passing this resolution the Mexican merchant will have the same rate of freight as our own merchants have.

The committee reporting this bill, according to their report, have only consulted Mr. Gage, the Secretary of the Treasury, the railroad interests, represented by Mr. Huntington, whose road reaches this Zone at several points, and Mr. Señor Don Matias Romero, the distinguished representative of the Mexican Republic at this capital.

Why were not the representatives of the people of the towns adjoining this Zone—Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. FERGUSSON, of New Mexico, and myself—given at least a hearing before the Committee on Ways and Means before it reported a bill so vitally affecting the towns of our districts. However, the report itself shows conclusively whose interests it guards. It says:

The only effect of the resolution—meaning the resolution to be repealed—has been to drive from our own transportation lines a large traffic in European and foreign lines—a very large and profitable business—without any return whatever.

This statement from the report shows that Mr. Huntington's railroad interest was consulted and was very potent before the committee. Mexico's interest, through Mr. Romero, has been guarded. The committee states in its report that—

The committee has seen fit to embody in this report a very able and comprehensive paper prepared by Senor Don Matias Romero, the distinguished representative of the Republic of Mexico at this capital.

The report of the Committee and Secretary Gage's letter cover less than two pages of the report, and Mr. Romero is given forty pages to argue the Mexican side of the question.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the following editorials recently appearing in the El Paso Times, a paper published in the city of El Paso. These editorials show conclusively the ruinous effects that the passage of this resolution will have on the people whom I have the honor to represent on this floor:

[Editorials from El Paso Times.]

KEEP THE FREE ZONE DOWN.

The Associated Press evidently knows as little about the Mexican Free Zone as some of the members of Congress who are doing Mr. Huntington's bidding in trying to repeal a law that has manifestly proved beneficial to American merchants near the Mexican frontier. Yesterday's dispatches said:

"This Government extended certain rights in connection with this privileged territory, but the rights were suspended by the joint resolution now proposed to be repealed."

Our Government did no such thing. The general laws for shipping merchandise in bond, which have existed for years, long before the Free Zone was extended in Mexico to include the whole frontier, allowed goods to be landed on that zone free of all customs duty, American or Mexican.

The present law, the repeal of which is now sought by Huntington and his lackeys, merely shuts railroads out of the bonded traffic to four towns on the Mexican frontier, viz, Juarez, Nogales, Piedras Negras, and Laredo. These are the only towns in the Mexican Free Zone reached by railroads.

Under the present law all railroads can haul American goods into those four towns, but European and Asiatic goods in bond can not land there to be smuggled back into the United States. Bonded goods can land on the American side, just opposite those towns and less than a mile distant from them, or they can land just beyond those towns, beyond the 12-mile limit of the Free Zone, but not within the towns.

Now let us examine what privations railroads suffer under the present law. The four towns and their population where bonded foreign goods can not land are:

Town.	Location.	Population.
Juarez	Opposite El Paso, Tex	6,000
Nogales	Opposite Nogales, Ariz	1,500
Laredo	Opposite Laredo, Tex	3,000
Piedras Negras	Opposite Eagle Pass, Tex	2,000

Here is a total population of 12,500, whose consumption of foreign goods can not be many train loads in a year. They are not distributing points for the rest of the Free Zone, because they are the only towns on the zone of any importance, and no part of Mexico is more sparsely populated than the Free Zone, 2,000 miles long and 12 miles wide from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean.

If this vast frontier with only a few towns is again to be made a smugglers' paradise just because Huntington's Southern Pacific road controls the traffic at Eagle Pass on both sides of the river, then that railroad is more potent with a Republican Congress than the justice of the real protection of the American frontier merchants from illegal competition.

American goods ought to be good enough for those four towns, and the Times thinks that the United States Senate will check the attempt now being made in the lower House to repeal the present law.

THE FREE ZONE ONCE MORE—LIKE BANQUO'S GHOST, IT WILL NOT DOWN—COLLIS P. HUNTINGTON AND HIS STANDING ARMY OF LOBBYISTS ARE ENDEAVORING TO EFFECT THE REPEAL OF THE LAW PROHIBITING THE HAULING OF BONDED FREIGHT INTO THE ZONA LIBRE.

The recent effort which has been put forth by Collis P. Huntington and his henchmen to effect the repeal of the law prohibiting the hauling of freight from the ports of the United States to the Free Zone of Mexico in bond has created great consternation along the border on this side of the Rio Grande.

The repeal of the law prohibiting the railroads from hauling bonded goods into the "Zona Libre" would once more inaugurate that system of wholesale smuggling of imported goods across the border into this country which once prevailed all along the frontier. If the United States Government desires to increase the traffic of the Huntington roads and foster the collapsed smuggling industry, which for a long time was the most profitable pursuit of the border, it should repeal the law. The citizens of El Paso, and of other border towns, at great expense and trouble succeeded in obtaining the passage of the law which practically broke up smuggling and detracted from the commercial importance of the Mexican towns along the Rio Grande.

The bill passed both Houses in February, 1895, and was signed by President Cleveland on March 2. Its passage was stubbornly fought by C. P. Huntington, but too late to have any effect. He realized that the passage of the act would reduce the income of his roads by substituting American goods for the foreign products hauled in bond from the Pacific coast ports to the Free Zone.

These goods were dumped in large quantities into the Mexican frontier towns and they were thriving in an unusual manner as the rendezvous of smugglers, who conveyed the goods back across the Rio Grande into the United States duty free.

European goods were taken into the sparsely settled Zona Libre in sufficient quantities to have supplied the wants of one of the most populous States of the Union, and the class of foreign goods taken into the zone was such as was utterly incompatible with the requirements of a population whose wants were few and whose poverty restricted them to the consumption of the bare necessities.

Before the Free Zone was established in 1883, none but American and Mexican goods were sold in that portion of Mexico. After its establishment goods of the finest fabric from European and Asiatic countries began to pour in. Silks, satins, manufactured woolens, gloves, dry goods of every description, the most expensive embroideries and laces, and large quantities of opium, crockery, and glassware were hauled there in bond.

In summing up the situation that existed before the passage of the act, a fluent writer has the following to say:

"If the United States Army was stationed along the frontier of Mexico to guard against smuggling these Free Zone goods into this country, it could not be entirely prevented. The Rio Grande from the Mexican Gulf to El Paso is the boundary line, and with its meanderings it gives a length of over 1,000 miles; and the river is dry yearly for eight months of the year from El Paso to the mouth of the Pecos River—over 300 miles. From El Paso to the Pacific Ocean there is not even a dry river to mark the boundary for 1,200 miles.

"The attention of the United States Congress was first called to the matter in 1894 by petition signed by all the merchants and business men of El Paso, Tex., and presented in the Senate by Senators Coke and Reagan, of Texas.

"This petition, which is on file at Washington, showed the facilities for smuggling afforded by the Mexican Free Zone and predicted that smuggling would increase as long as the Free Zone existed.

"There is no legislative remedy now for the evils described, which are growing worse daily, and gaining strength, except to expend millions annually in guarding closely the 2,500 miles of frontier which we have with Mexico. The Mexican Government has a large force of customs guards, called the 'gendarmeria,' but the smuggling in that direction is very small compared with what is done in the United States.

The reason less contraband goods enter Mexico is because their money is depreciated at least one-half, and these foreign goods must be paid for in gold or its equivalent, and Mexican buyers are therefore restricting themselves to their home products in which they get more value for their money."

The only apparent excuse for the repeal of the present law is that the repeal would benefit Huntington by increasing the traffic of his roads, substituting American goods with foreign merchandise.

Mr. Chairman, these editorials are sustained and emphasized by the petition of the merchants of El Paso, who unanimously oppose, as far as I know, the passage of this bill on the grounds I have stated in my remarks.

The city of El Paso is by far the largest and most important town on the American side of the Rio Grande. The Statistical Abstract, House Document No. 259 of this session of Congress, shows that the import duties collected at El Paso were $313,389, while the duties collected at all the other ports of Texas combined only amounted to the sum of $253,000, in round numbers. I therefore insist that the desire of the citizens and merchants of this city should be respected and that this resolution should not pass.

Mr. LANHAM. If I understand you, the repeal of the joint resolution would have the effect to make the goods in the Free Zone still cheaper than they are now and thereby give a ruinous competition to merchants on the American side of the line?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. LANHAM. I want to ask my colleague just one more question. As I understand, El Paso opposes the passage of this joint resolution. They think next to the abolition of the Free Zone that the law as it now stands is the next best thing?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. My friend is correct. The people of El Paso want the law to remain as it now is.

The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] opposes this resolution, but he is not here. The Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. FERGUSSON] also opposes it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman will allow me to say that I think he is mistaken in regard to the views of the Delegate from Arizona.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He has told me that he opposed the resolution.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I understand him to have changed his views, though I am not absolutely certain about it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think I can say positively that he is opposed to the resolution.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Allow me to interrupt a moment. I had two or three conversations with the Delegate from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] in regard to this matter. I found at first that he was opposed to the resolution. I asked him to read the report of the committee. He told me that he had not entirely read it, but had read it pretty well; and that his opposition to the measure was not of much consequence; that it was almost a matter of indifference to him. I inferred—I do not say that he told me so, but this was my inference from his statement—that his opposition to the measure had been based purely upon the request of two or three of his constituents. I believe that he has practically withdrawn his opposition.

Mr. LANHAM. Will my colleague allow an interruption?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. LANHAM. Is it not a fact that El Paso is the largest city on the American side of the river bordering on the Free Zone?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes, sir.

Mr. LANHAM. And are there not more railroads centering there than in any other town along this line?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct. There are four or five railroads centering there or in the vicinity.

I find that the duties collected at El Paso, as shown by this Statistical Abstract, amounted in one year to $318,300 and that the rest of the revenue collected on the border line was only $253,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask if that gives the commodities on which this duty was collected?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; it does not give the items.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it not virtually collected entirely on ores—metallic ores—shipped to the smelting establishments?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not know what part of the duty is collected on ores. But the fact remains and will not be contradicted that there is more duty collected at El Paso than at all the other towns on the Mexican border combined.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not true that some lines of goods go absolutely free of duty to the Free Zone, whether they come from the South, East, North, or West, and that they keep coming all the time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Goods now only come over Mexican lines of railway into the Free Zone free of duty. But if you repeal this law you will give the Mexican merchants the benefit of the same cheap freight rates now enjoyed by our own merchants on this side of the line, which would injure them and benefit their Mexican rivals in the Free Zone. The Mexican Free Zone merchants now pay a much higher rate of freight than their American rivals across the line, for the reason that none of the Mexican towns in the Free Zone has more than one line of road to ship over. But if you pass this resolution you will give them at El Paso and Laredo several competing American lines of railway to ship over.

Mr. KLEBERG. I wish simply to say to the gentleman that there are two railroads that enter Laredo, Tex. There is the International and Great Northern and there is the Mexican National.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I was making the point that they only have one line of road running from the Mexican seaports into Laredo. Juarez and the other Free Zone towns on the border on the Mexican side are under the control of that single line of railroad. They have the power to set the freight rates to the Free Zone merchants as high as they please, as they have no competition unless you give it to them by this bill.

Let us see who it is that is asking this favor from Congress. The report of the committee shows that Señor Romero wrote 40 of the 42 pages that report contains, and the whole tenor of his statements is an argument for the repeal of the Cockrell resolution. I do not blame the Mexican minister at this Capital for working in the interest of the Mexican Free Zone merchants.

Mr. GROSVENOR. One moment. I do not propose that the Mexican minister shall be misrepresented. The Mexican minister did not come in here. He contributed what he did at my personal request, so that the members of the House might have the full history of this matter, and I may say further that what I have incorporated was written by that distinguished gentleman for a magazine and was not written for the benefit of this House. I solicited him to give us the right to use it, and he kindly gave me the permission.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that his committee has indorsed what the Mexican minister has said. Here is the report, and I will read it to the House:

> The subject of the Free Zone, with its history and the variety of historical data connected therewith, is a very interesting subject; and inasmuch as it affects the relations between this Government and the Republic of Mexico, and inasmuch as the whole subject-matter is one of great interest, the committee have seen fit to embody in this report a very able and comprehensive paper prepared by Señor Don Matias Romero, the distinguished representative of the Republic of Mexico at this capital. That gentleman has had ample opportunity to know whereof he writes in this behalf, having been a member of the Mexican Government and intimate with everything connected with the subject.

Now, this language is embodied in this report; the committee indorse it and they ask this House to pass a resolution which is dictated by and upheld by a government that is building up, and desires to build up, its own merchants and its own trade to the injury of the merchants and manufacturing interests of the United States. For what purpose? So that a few lines of railroad can take the business away from the Mexican line of railroad and give it to the United States railroad. That is the only question at issue. Then they will benefit the merchants on the other side of the border, and injure the merchants on this side of the border. At the same time they set up anew smuggling business that will be injurious alike to our country and to all of the citizens along the entire border.

The gentleman from Ohio seeks by this resolution to give our railroads the right to take foreign merchandise, the merchandise of the world, and place it in the Free Zone just across our borders to come in competition with our own merchants.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Quite the reverse. The gentleman is trying not only to establish these free ports but to give them a monopoly of the business.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does not give them a monopoly of the business, but gives the Mexican merchant the control of the business to the injury of our merchants on this side.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Have not they got it now?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; I have read you the petition of the citizens of El Paso, showing what the citizens there want.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The petition is an argument against the Free Zone. I am with you on that question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. You make the Free Zone more effective by bringing the goods across the border from the United States and placing them there in bond, free of duty.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We destroy the monopoly of the Free Zone.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But notice this: All these bonded goods now coming to the Mexican border must come on one railroad. The Mexican merchants have to ship their goods over a single road. In our towns there are several railroads, and the American merchants have the benefit of the cheaper freight rates to the border towns having cheap common-point freight rates, and they can undersell the Mexican merchants because they only have a single line of railroad and no competition, as I have fully explained.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, before yielding to the gentleman from Texas I want to say that I am amazed that any gentleman on this floor should base an argument on the statement that the Mexican minister favors the passage of this resolution. Every word that has been copied into this report from the article of the Mexican minister was written, published, and in print long before this resolution was introduced into this Congress. And Mr. Romero has nowhere given an opinion as to whether or not this resolution ought to pass.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does he not criticise this act of 1895 in the severest terms, and criticise also the position of Mr. Blaine and General Grant?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all. The gentleman has misrepresented him totally.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have read his statements from the report which you yourself prepared and furnished to the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me explain. Mr. Blaine had nothing to do with the question of the passage or the nonpassage of the resolution or act of 1895. Mr. Blaine's inquiry was a pertinent one and related to a totally different subject. It was whether this Free Zone was not itself a violation of the treaty between the United States and Mexico; it had nothing to do with this question of the transportation of goods; it had no more relation to it than the question of the distance to the North Pole.

Mr. Romero in his magazine article has answered Mr. Blaine's argument, if there was one; but it does not appear that Mr. Blaine ever made any argument on the subject. He simply introduced a resolution of inquiry—possibly a friendly one, possibly in the interest of upholding the right of Mexico—a simple inquiry whether the maintenance of this Free Zone (for that was the practical result of it) was not a violation of the treaty. When we adopted the resolution of 1895—and gentlemen are in this House to-day who know it—it was upon what we understood to be an intimation that the Mexican Government would thereupon repeal the Free Zone law and get rid of the whole of this difficulty.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Did the Mexican Government ever take any steps to repeal it?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It has not done so; and therefore we do not propose that Mexico shall take advantage of our action and then refuse to give us the consideration for it that we hoped for.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. One other question: Is it not the fact that this resolution was designed to obviate the trouble that the Mexican Government had in trying to break down the Free Zone?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all—no more than it is true that the Ten Commandments are an argument against this resolution. The resolution came from the Treasury Department, and was designed to get rid of the incubus we ourselves had created.

Now, one word further. This is the first time I have ever heard it argued—I do not know but there is force in the argument; I have been tempted sometimes myself to make it, but never have done so—this is the first time I have ever heard it argued that if you undertake to give to two railroads the monopoly of business in a field already occupied by five or six, it is a good way to get cheap rates of railroad transportation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman know, as a matter of fact, that on the Mexican side there is only one line of railroad, while we have on our side three or four; and that being the case, we have competition; and is it not a matter of fact that we get cheaper rates?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And by passing this resolution, in the present form, you give them on their side of the river practically the same freight rates and the same advantages that we have on our side?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not think so; I do not see how that could follow. The whole tenor of the gentleman's argument, it seems to me, was that we were in a position or should be in a position to impose higher rates of freight on goods in the little neck of woods about which the gentleman seems so much interested, and thus lose sight of the great question which really is involved in the resolution.

Here is a deliberate argument on the part of the opponents of this proposition that we should in effect cut off the operation of two or three American lines of railway in order to cheapen the rate on goods on the American side of the river. That is the logical result of the argument.

But suppose we did that and let these goods come in on the Mexican side of the river, in this Free Zone, is not the competition of the three railroads on the American side of the river, which would not be influenced or affected by such a proposition, going to determine, at least to a certain extent, the question at issue?

I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] the remainder of the time, or so much time as he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty-six minutes remaining.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, as the mover of this resolution now pending before the committee, I deem it proper that I should give some reason why I think it should be passed. Though clear statements and able arguments have been submitted by my colleague [Mr. SLAYDEN] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] in its support, I can only hope to supplement or reenforce their argument by the addition of stronger reasons or facts bearing upon the question.

The facts and conditions are about these: Prior to 1895, when the resolution was passed which this resolution undertakes to repeal, goods were transported in bond from foreign countries over the United States railroads to what is known as the "Free Zone," across the Rio Grande River, in Mexico. It was thought that by the passage of the resolution to which I have referred we would get rid of the nuisance or annoyances which had resulted from the large amount of smuggling carried on between the Free Zone on the opposite side of the river from us and this country. It has been discovered, however, that the inhibition has not been beneficial, and that smuggling continues as before, and that Mexico will not abolish the Free Zone, as supposed. And the result of the passage of the resolution of 1895 was that instead of imported merchandise and goods going into that region over our American railroads, they were shipped to Mexican ports, and transported by Mexican railroads to this Free Zone, thereby cutting out the American lines from any benefit from the transportation of this character of business.

We have gained nothing, therefore, by the passage of the resolution, but have actually lost the transportation and handling of goods that would properly have gone over United States railroads. It was believed when the resolution was passed that Mexico would repeal the law authorizing what is known as the "Free Zone." But she has declined to do so, and as a consequence of our legislation we have lost the transportation of goods and merchandise over the railroads of this country to the various points on the Rio Grande River and in the Free Zone.

I can not see, therefore, the force of the argument of my colleague in opposition to the pending resolution, although I should be exceedingly glad to agree with him at all times. He says that the passage of this resolution would injure the merchants of El Paso, on the American bank of the Rio Grande River. How it can possibly do so I am unable to conceive. The more railroads we have necessarily brings more competition, and if we have more competition the freight rates will be reduced, and the lower the freight rates are the better it is for the merchants. I can not see, therefore, why the people on our side of the river are not to be benefited by this legislation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But does not that make goods cheaper on the American side of the river?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Unless they have competition I do not see how it can.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But is not the American merchant benefited by such competition? My colleague will remember that on the other side of the river they have but one railroad, and consequently the American merchant has a decided advantage over his competitor on the other side of the river. But you seek by your bill to put them on the same level.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. It seeks, it seems to me, to give them cheaper rates, and if it gives them cheaper rates and furnishes the transportation to the railroads and public carriers of this country, the American people are benefited that much. Now, these are the conditions as I understand them, and this is all I have to say respecting the bill. It is a matter of indifference to me locally, because my constituency have no special interest in it, and I represent no interest that could be affected by the passage or nonpassage of the resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How far is your district away from the Rio Grande?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Six hundred or more miles. I represent a district lying upon the eastern boundary of the State. My colleague represents a district lying upon the Rio Grande. Therefore I say I have no local interest in this matter. I believe this bill is a good one and that it will result beneficially to the people of the United States. It has the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. It has the approval of the Committee on Ways and Means, and, frankly, I must say that I have not sufficiently appreciated the force of the argument of my colleague to change the opinion which I originally entertained of this resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield whatever time I have to my colleague [Mr. LANHAM]. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has nineteen minutes remaining.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield that nineteen minutes to my colleague [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. I do not care to use the time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield the time back.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MERCER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 2307. An act to correct the naval history of John C. Dull;

H. R. 9043. An act granting an increase of pension to Ann M. Smith;

H. R. 1596. An act to amend the postal laws relating to use of postal cards; and

H. R. 6468. An act authorizing the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias to erect and maintain a sanitarium and bath house on the Government reservation at the city of Hot Springs, Ark.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 4439. An act to relieve owners of mining claims who enlist in the military service of the United States for duty in the war with Spain from performing assessment work during such term of service;

S. 4476. An act granting a pension to Sarah M. Bennett;

S. 4452. An act authorizing the Campbell-Lynch Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Webbers Falls, Ind. T.;

S. 1631. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Atkinson;

S. 3350. An act granting a pension to Blanche E. Barlow;

S. 413. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the moneys herein specified to the respective bands of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota according to their respective rights and interests;

S. 3466. An act granting a pension to Sarah Hamilton;

S. 3693. An act granting an increase of pension to Leah L. Price;

S. 4248. An act for the relief of Lewis Kyle, of Milton, Pa.;

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 9210. An act granting an increase of pension to George H. Baldwin.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 5880) to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia control of street parking in said District, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7441) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. PROCTOR as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5975) extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HANSBROUGH, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. ALLEN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice-President had appointed Mr. CULLOM and Mr. COCKRELL as a joint committee to act with a like committee to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, under the provisions of the act approved February 16, 1889, "to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments," to consider the question of destroying useless papers, referred to in Senate Document No. 246 and part 2 of the same, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.

FREE ZONE.

The Committee resumed its session.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, the district which I have the honor to represent extends from the mouth of the Rio Grande to Laredo, a distance of about four or five hundred miles. I have the towns of Laredo, Rio Grande City, Brownsville, and other smaller towns on the Rio Grande River, which are directly interested in this measure. I regret to say that my position in the representation of that constituency leads me to conflict with my colleague [Mr. STEPHENS of Texas]. Merchants along the line of the Rio Grande in my district are in favor of this resolution. They insist that the suspension of article 3005 was not only a measure that affected disadvantageously the traffic on the railroads and on the steamers of American citizens, but that the suspension of this law has operated disadvantageously to American merchants on the border.

Now, I am not going to travel over the same ground that has already been sufficiently covered by my colleagues [Mr. SLAYDEN and Mr. COOPER of Texas] and also by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who has pointed out the fact that the only result of the suspension of article 3005 has been a disadvantage to our own carrying trade. I will add this, however, that there is no man on this floor who guards more jealously than I the rights of the American people in relation to the railroads. I am one of those who think that the railroads should be regulated in a reasonable and legal way. I think they should not be permitted to discriminate against the people and the shippers; but when it comes to a question between the railroads of a foreign nation and those of my own nation, there can be no doubt that the choice is in favor of the railroads of my own country; and as has been well said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and other gentlemen who have preceded me, the only advantage in the suspension of this law has been an advantage to Mexican railroads.

Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] in his zeal has stated that he can not imagine why a Representative from Texas should support this measure. Well, I have inquired diligently throughout my district among people who are directly interested in this measure, and they have all asked me to support it; and I will now have read by the Clerk a letter that was written by citizens of Brownsville, Tex., in 1895, which applies with equal force in 1898. This letter was addressed to my distinguished predecessor, Mr. Crain, who opposed the suspension of article 3005 as I oppose it now. The same reasons exist now, and for that reason I cheerfully support the resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Is it not a fact that there is only one line of railroad extending from any Mexican Gulf point to the towns on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande.

Mr. KLEBERG. I think so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Just one line?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then they have no competition, and the Mexican merchant is at the mercy of that road in the matter of freight rates.

Mr. KLEBERG. I do not take that view of it at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then it is not a fact that, as has been stated on the floor, there are several lines of railroads running to the towns on the American side; and is it not a result of that competition that merchants on the American side have an advantage over Mexican merchants in the matter of lower freight rates?

Mr. KLEBERG. There may be a small advantage in freight, I do not know how much, but I will call attention to the fact that it is also to the advantage of the merchants on this side to sell goods to people on the other side, and I am informed that by the suspension of this statute traffic with the other side has practically been abandoned, and that merchants there can actually not exist. That is as far as it affects my district; and if former relations were reinstated, the merchants on this side would have a chance to sell their goods on the other side.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that there are more duties collected at El Paso than at all the balance of the ports along that boundary?

Mr. KLEBERG. I do not know. There are a great many duties collected at Laredo. That is an important port.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do you not know that the statistics show that the collections at El Paso are more than $100,000 greater than at all the other points?

Mr. KLEBERG. I will state that most of the goods smuggled are of Mexican manufacture. I was United States attorney there for four years on the border and prosecuted those smugglers, and it is not American harness and American agricultural implements that are resmuggled into the United States, but it is mescal, cigars, trinkets, and articles of Mexican manufacture that are chiefly smuggled onto this side of the river. The goods that are smuggled are not goods of American manufacture or even goods of foreign manufacture, but goods of Mexican manufacture.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But do they come into competition with the American producer of whisky, beer, and cigars?

Mr. KLEBERG. I have not tried mescal, but I do not think it is a competitor with good whisky or good wine or good beer; but if it is, our people can pay the duty on it, like they pay on their French wines and other luxuries. But I repeat the fact that the smuggling exists chiefly with Mexican goods of Mexican manufacture, and it stands to reason. They do not want to smuggle meal, harness, and agricultural implements that they have bought from America, or even goods that they have bought from England or France, into the United States, but to smuggle goods of their own manufacture; and it is that which our custom-houses are chiefly engaged in stopping.

Mr. RIDGELY. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. KLEBERG. Certainly. But I wish to have that letter read first. My time may expire.

The Clerk read as follows:

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., January 27, 1895.

The arguments favoring the abolition of the Zona Libre do not apply here. The importations into the Zona Libre from Brownsville, Rio Grande City, and Roma are chiefly breadstuffs, agricultural implements, and other goods of American production; hence there is no smuggling back from Mexico to the United States of foreign goods. This is abundantly shown by the character of the seizures made by our customs officers, which seldom embrace anything but articles of Mexican origin, and this no change or modification in the Zona Libre would affect. But our whole transportation system depends on our continuing to supply Matamoras and the adjacent territory with the class of goods they now purchase from us.

If the inhabitants of that section are compelled to pay Mexican import duties on their flour, lard, soap, sugar, beans, cotton goods, clothing, plows, harness, hardware, agricultural implements, and machinery, all of which American manufactures they now buy from us, they will use similar articles of Mexican origin and production, although of inferior quality and higher first cost, because they can get those native articles without the payment of import duties. The result is, we lose our market for a large and constantly increasing quantity of our own products, and in losing this market we so decrease the volume of our trade that we would cease to have direct communication by steamer and otherwise with the great centers of American production, our own local wants not being sufficient to justify the continuance of the steamer line to supply them alone.

You will thus see the matter is of vital importance to us. We therefore ask you to exert all your influence, official, legislative, and personal, to aid us.

There is another phase of the question. The threat to suspend the operation of our bonded system on the northern frontier of Mexico unless that country shall abolish the Zona Libre is a very serious one. Suppose (and the supposition is fully warranted) Mexico declines to be coerced? Then the American railroads running to the Mexican frontier lose the carrying of the best paying and most valuable portion of their traffic, as the transportation of all goods of European origin would be forced into vessels direct to Mexican ports, and not only our railroads but our coastwise carrying companies would suffer severely, and in order to fully load those vessels for Mexican ports direct the Mexican merchant would be compelled to purchase in Europe many goods he now procures from the United States.

In point of fact, the suspension of our bonded system to the northern frontier of Mexico would benefit only European producers, merchants, and carriers, and would work a corresponding injury to those interests of our own country.

We are, very respectfully,

THOMAS CARSON.
JAMES B. WELLS.
JOHN I. KLEIBER.
WM. J. RUSSELL.
G. M. RAPHAEL.
WILLIAM KELLY.

Mr. KLEBERG. Now, Mr. Chairman, the railroad directly affected in my district is a short railroad running from Point Isabel to Brownsville, that carries a good deal of this merchandise under bond; another is the Texas Mexican, from Corpus Christi to Laredo; another is the Aransas Pass road, which branches out throughout my district, and others are the International and Great Northern Railroad and the Southern Pacific. Now, I repeat that I stand here and yield to no man in my ideas and opinions and convictions about bringing all these railroads under the law and making their charges reasonable. But when they come in competition with railroads on the other side of the Rio Grande, I want them at least to have the same advantages, and I would give them whatever little difference there was in their favor because they are citizens of my district and American citizens, and certainly we must give them the protection of American law.

Now, I do not care to say anything more in regard to this measure. I say that my people favor it, both merchants, railroads, and the people, and for that reason I shall support the resolution.

Mr. RIDGELY. The question I wish to ask is this: There seems to be a conflict between gentlemen representing districts bordering on the Mexican line, one in favor of the proposed resolution and the other opposing. Your present argument is in favor of the transportation companies on this side?

Mr. KLEBERG. No; the merchants also.

Mr. RIDGELY. And you say your merchants joined with those railroads in this petition?

Mr. KLEBERG. There was no joining about it.

Mr. RIDGELY. They joined their influence together. Now, the other gentleman [Mr. STEPHENS of Texas] says that the merchants in El Paso oppose this resolution for the reason that if the goods come over the Mexican line of roads into the Free Zone of Mexico, the Mexicans will sell the goods cheaper than they are now, and that they will therefore be better enabled to compete with the merchants on this side. So that it seems that we are left to choose whether we shall satisfy the merchants at El Paso or the other towns?

Mr. KLEBERG. Laredo, Brownsville, and other towns, for instance.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What I say is I have read here a single petition from El Paso.

Mr. RIDGELY. I want to know if these places have influenced that or the railroads?

Mr. KLEBERG. I do not know that it reaches the situation that the gentleman suggests. I have answered the question once before. I was trying to put it in its true light. Some citizens on the Mexican side will perhaps get cheaper freight. Our merchants, the merchants of my district, claim that their trade on the other side has been practically broken up by the suspension of this statute, and if the statute is placed again where it was before their trade would increase and it would be a commercial advantage.

I yield the balance of my time back to the gentleman from Ohio, with the request that he will yield two or three minutes to my colleague [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] is extremely incredulous about petitions that have come in here about the repeal of this resolution. He seems to think there is only one petition, and that is the one he presented, that the resolution be not repealed. I must make confession and let it go to my constituents that I inadvertently smothered a petition that they sent me. I failed to file it with the House. But I hold in my hand a petition which reads as follows:

PETITION.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned, citizens of Eagle Pass, respectfully request you to secure the repeal of resolution No. 20, passed by the last session of Congress, as in its present shape it operates as a hardship to all people interested in the forwarding of bonded merchandise to the limits of the Free Zone, and is absolutely nonproductive so far as any benefits may accrue to the General Government.

Yours, truly,

W. A. Bonnet, E. H. Schmidt, Robt. F. Dowy, Pasquale De Bona, L. De Bona, F. Wueste, J. M. Zapata, John Finnigan & Co., Ed Burkley, G. D. Garcia, S. P. Simpson, Jos. Rosenfield, M. J. Fox, I. Marks, Chas. Mayer, Wm. Cooper, M. L. Oppenheimer, C. W. Hartup, Chas. Fessmann, Josef Geiger, Gus. Rothfuss, B. D. Lindsey, R. J. Tucker, J. H. Jenkins, J. C. Washburn, J. C. Jones, W. A. Fitch, W. W. McCamplar, Jno. J. Burke, Malone Duggan, E. A. Chichester, John Creaton, W. E. Jammos, W. McCallum, W. C. Douglas.

JAMES S. SLAYDEN, M. C., Washington, D. C.

That is signed by every merchant, banker, and business man of the city of Eagle Pass. I want to say that Eagle Pass is second only in population to the city of El Paso, represented by my colleague [Mr. STEPHENS], and very little second to it in the importance of its commerce. It ships into Mexico vast quantities of cotton and other produce, and we receive through the port of Eagle Pass large numbers of cattle. More cattle are imported there and come through that port than any other port in the United States. So its commerce is quite considerable. My colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] is misinformed in relation to the situation at Eagle Pass, and still harbors the impression, notwithstanding I have told him otherwise, that the Pacific Railroad dominates that town by virtue of having its rails in the town or some running arrangement to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is there more than one railroad there at Eagle Pass?

Mr. SLAYDEN. There is more than one railroad at Eagle Pass. There is a road in Mexico and a road on this side.

Mr. Chairman, the whole effect of this resolution and the disturbance it has raised is almost a tempest in a teapot. Now, the effect of resolution 20 that we seek to repeal was simply this: It increased the charges upon commerce between ports of entry in the United States and the Free Zone in Mexico simply by the addition of the cost of handling these goods when opened, examined, and appraised in the port of entry instead of at the frontier.

Railways continued to do the business in this country, but not to the extent they did before, because previous to the enactment of this resolution the Mexican customs law forbade the transportation of goods in bond to the Free Zone. The President of Mexico, under his constitutional right, as I have already said, suspended a section of the custom laws, and goods were then permitted to be imported by different ports to the Free Zone. That gave these roads over there an increased benefit to a trifling extent. Charges were increased by opening, examining, and appraisal of goods in this country instead of being shipped in transit to the Mexican frontier. That is the whole thing, and it is of very little consequence to the railroads of this country. The chief beneficiary by the repeal of the resolution will be the customs officers who have been doing, it is claimed, so much unnecessary work.

I think the merchants of my district and the district of my friend Mr. KLEBERG know their interests as well as those in El Paso know theirs. I took the pains to write to the merchants in Laredo, although it is not in my district, and I got from them letters stating that they desired to have the resolution repealed, because it was offensive to their neighbors across the river, and of no good in the way of building up trade on this side. I hope, therefore, the House will follow the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Ways and Means and repeal this resolution.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bill back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. STEPHENS of Texas)—ayes 42, noes 5.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House resolution No. 27 and had directed him to report the same back with a recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. STEPHENS of Texas)—ayes 48, noes 4.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1631. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Atkinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3350. An act granting a pension to Blanche E. Barlow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 413. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the moneys herein specified to the respective bands of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota according to their respective rights and interests—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 4248. An act for the relief of Lewis Kyle, of Milton, Pa.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4439. An act to relieve owners of mining claims who enlist in the military service of the United States for duty in the war with Spain from performing assessment work during such term of service—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9378. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10197. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for support of the Army for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I present the following conference report:

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7441) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 7, 12, 18, and 19.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17, and agree to the same.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
MAHLON PITNEY,
THOS. C. McRAE,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. C. PERKINS,
EUGENE HALE,
EDWARD MURPHY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7441) making appropriations for fortifications, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report, namely:

All of the amendments of the Senate are agreed to except the following, from which it is recommended that the Senate recede:

Amendment numbered 1: Requiring that all of the appropriations in the bill shall be expended under the direct supervision of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification;

Amendment numbered 7: Limiting the price of steel forgings to 21 cents instead of 23 cents, as proposed by the House;

Amendment numbered 12: Authorizing that $150,000 of the amount appropriated for powders and projectiles for a reserve supply shall be expended for powders;

Amendment numbered 18: Appropriating $22,000 to purchase the patent of Gregory Gerdon for a gas check for breech-loading guns; and Amendment numbered 19: Relating to the compensation of officers of the Army for use of articles invented and patented by them.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $9,377,494, being $22,000 less than as passed by the Senate, $5,222,582 more than as passed by the House, $4,001,077 less than the estimates submitted, and $139,647 less than the amount appropriated by the last fortification act.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
MAHLON PITNEY,
THOS. C. McRAE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, the estimate furnished by the War Department amounted to $13,378,571. At the time these estimates were submitted we had no reason to believe that we should be so soon engaged in war, and the House thought proper to present the bill which it did present. The Senate, by amendments, increased the bill to $9,399,494. Since that time the bill has been delayed in conference, for the reason that the committee desired to ascertain the exact amount that was necessary and required by the Ordnance and Engineer Departments for coast fortification, and during this Congress we have appropriated the money to be used for coast fortification in the following amounts.

Of the $50,000,000 appropriated, there has been allotted and used by the Ordnance Department $9,905,247.95; by the Engineer's Department, $5,635,000. There was appropriated by the deficiency bill that passed the House a few days ago $1,680,800, and by this bill which has been agreed upon $9,377,494, making a total appropriated by this Congress of $26,598,541.95 that will be used for coast defenses and for ordnance supplies. So, in effect, this one Congress has appropriated a sum equal to one-quarter of that required to carry out the Endicott scheme as originally reported. There has been no disposition on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to withhold any sum necessary for the protection of our coast.

As to the amendments stricken out that were offered by the Senate, I call attention to the one which provided that officers of the Army and Navy could go before the Court of Claims and have ascertained the amount due from the Government to them for any invention made by them while in the employ of the Government. We did not believe that the amendment ought to be adopted. We believed that the young men taken from the different States and educated at Annapolis and West Point at the expense of the Government, and retired by the Government on pay after age has rendered them unfit for active service, that their services belonged to the Government, and that they ought not to be paid for inventions made when their time belonged to the Government. For that reason your committee declined to agree, and the Senate receded.

There is only one other amendment of the Senate of any great importance. That amendment provided that the expenditure of the moneys appropriated by this bill should be controlled by the Board of Ordnance and Fortification—a board composed of the General of the Army, together with an officer from the Ordnance Department, one from the Engineer Department, an officer of artillery, and one civilian. We believed that the Secretary of War, the Chief of Ordnance, and the Chief of Engineers knew better how to expend this money than this Board of Ordnance and Fortification.

The Secretary of War, the Chief of Ordnance, and the Chief of Engineers have controlled these expenditures (with the exception of one or two years) ever since the coast fortifications bill has been passed as a separate measure; and we did not believe at this time that there should be any change in controlling the expenditure of this money. For that reason we declined to agree to the amendment of the Senate; and the Senate has receded.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood the gentleman to say that the total appropriations for fortifications in this Congress are in excess of $26,000,000. How does that compare with the average appropriations for the last two or three years—how much increase?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I can not give the exact figures, but prior to the Fifty-fourth Congress and since the adoption of the Endicott scheme (which was in 1886) there had only been appropriated about $10,000,000. The Fifty-fourth Congress appropriated about $16,000,000. This Congress at the present session—there is a bill to follow at the short session—has appropriated $26,598,000, but of that amount about $15,000,000 was allotted from the lump sum appropriated a short time ago.

Mr. PAYNE. Then for the Fifty-fourth Congress—the entire two years—the appropriations were about $16,000,000?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir; being more than had been appropriated in ten years prior to that time.

Mr. PAYNE. That was an average of $8,000,000 a year for those two years?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand that this $26,000,000 includes an allotment from the contingent appropriation of $50,000,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We have included about $15,000,000 allotted from the $50,000,000 appropriated in a lump sum.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then that is really not chargeable to this bill?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It goes to the same purposes for which this bill carries appropriations; it covers items which would have been carried by this bill if necessary.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then your bill in effect meets all the requirements of the Department in its estimates submitted to this Congress?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It does.

Mr. BINGHAM. And those estimates, as I understand, are consistent with the outline of the Endicott board for the development of fortifications?

Mr. HEMENWAY. So I understand. They are following out the scheme adopted by the Endicott board.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What amount is carried by your bill for powder?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Nine hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman is, of course, aware of the fact that the deficiency bill passed a few days ago in the House covered $450,000 for this item?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES. How does that compare with the amounts heretofore appropriated?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is away above any previous appropriation.

Mr. GAINES. Why should it be so much when we are putting up a smokeless-powder factory?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that it is very hard to carry on war without powder.

Mr. GAINES. I would like a serious answer to my inquiry.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is a serious answer. It is very necessary to have powder.

Mr. GAINES. That I understand.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Chief of Ordnance has requested that we make this appropriation for the purchase of powder; and in compliance with the request of the Department the appropriation has been made.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I suggest there is an absolute necessity we should have a great deal of powder.

Mr. GAINES. I understand that; but I am entitled to know from the chairman, the mouthpiece of the committee, how much increase this bill made over the bills of previous years.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand the gentleman, the $26,000,000 covered by this bill includes an allotment of $15,000,000 from the national-defense fund.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And the amount carried in the deficiency bill passed a few days ago.

Mr. DOCKERY. And the conferees are unanimous, as I understand.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Unanimous.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is there any paragraph in this bill corresponding with the paragraph in the naval appropriation bill making immediately available any of the appropriations?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The amounts carried by this bill are immediately available, and remain so until expended.

Mr. DINGLEY. Some suggestion has been made as to the amounts of our annual expenditures for coast defenses. I have before me an official statement which I would like to have go into the RECORD, showing the enormous increase of expenditures for public works. From 1885 to 1890 the average annual expenditure for coast defenses was less than $300,000. In 1890-91 we commenced the construction of coast defenses on a large scale, and the average expenditures for that purpose up to and including the fiscal year 1896 were about $2,000,000 annually. In the fiscal year 1897 there was an increase of $6,000,000, and for the year commencing in March last the expense will run up to over $26,000,000, showing an increase since 1885 from $300,000 to $26,000,000. I desire simply to call attention to the enormous amounts we are now expending, compared with previous expenditures.

I have here an official statement of the expenditures for public works of various kinds from 1885 down to the present time. As this statement is quite valuable, I ask unanimous consent that I may place it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to by Mr. DINGLEY is as follows:

Statement of expenditures for public buildings, light-houses, coast defenses, rivers and harbors, increase of the Navy, and other public works for the fiscal years 1885 to 1897, inclusive, and first six months of fiscal year 1898.

Mr. FOOTE. If the gentleman from Indiana will permit me, I want to ask him, in connection with the report which he has presented, what the bill carries with reference to the Engineer Department, and also what the original bill carried?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will state to the gentleman from New York that the original bill carried $1,000,000, which has been increased, for the Engineer Department, to $3,000,000, and that the original estimates in the bill, embracing all of the items, are as I have already stated. There has also been appropriated, or allotted under the $50,000,000 of appropriation made by Congress a few weeks ago, the sum of $15,000,000 in this direction.

Mr. PITNEY. But the original estimate to which the gentleman refers was not for the engineering work only.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, no; I have just stated that, and that the amount available now will be twenty-six or twenty-six and a half million dollars.

Mr. PITNEY. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, with the consent of my friend from Indiana, I desire to occupy a brief portion of the time of the House to say that in matters of legislation in the House of Representatives, running through all of the years in which I have seen service in this body, the various committees of the House are apt to make a specialty of the matters that come before them and to practically magnify their importance after investigation, while at the same time they may minify other matters of which other committees have jurisdiction. And this is a very natural condition of affairs if we but reflect for a moment on the various classes of business before our committees.

I have not had the pleasure of hearing my colleague's statement with reference to the pending report, but I have no doubt that it has been exact and accurate and full in all particulars, not only with reference to the appropriation that the bill itself makes, but with regard to the proportion of the $50,000,000 defense fund allotted to fortifications, as well as with regard to the appropriations carried in the deficiency bill, all of which enter into the consideration of this conference report.

Now, I desire to call your attention for a few moments to the amounts which have heretofore been appropriated for work of this character, and especially the appropriations in the last Congress.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If my colleague will permit me, I will put in a comparative statement of the appropriations which have heretofore been made by the bill under consideration.

Mr. CANNON. These matters of appropriation were investigated and reported upon by the committee to which my friend and myself belong. Apt and proper, in my judgment, these appropriations were as they left the House, and liberal and efficient for the purpose contemplated. Of course the future must take care of itself touching ordinary and extraordinary appropriations for fortifications.

Mr. Speaker, for many years after the civil war we were in what may be called a transition state, so far as our work for defense or on our naval establishment was concerned. The years that have elapsed have made an absolute revolution in all of the appliances of war, both on land and on the sea. The navies of the world were, at the close of the civil war, antiquated; and much of naval construction made for many years after the close of our civil war is now practically obsolete. And while for many years after the close of the war we were engaged in paying our public debts, our engineers, our inventors, and the naval constructors of the world generally were engaged in evoluting the new Navy; and while other nations were paying immense sums for the construction of new vessels, since obsolete, our expenditures for the Navy were not so materially enlarged.

For one, I am very glad that we did not pay out extraordinary sums for that purpose, because our recent experience has demonstrated the fact that if we had been expending hundreds of millions of dollars, as other nations have done, on our coast defenses and in our Navy for construction purposes, that expenditure would have been a heavy tax upon the people and would have been worse than useless.

About the close of President Arthur's Administration Secretary Chandler, then Secretary of the Navy, commenced the construction of the new Navy. So far as parties were concerned, the Republican party was in power in both Houses of Congress and had the Presidency.

The policy of the construction of the new Navy was vigorously pursued then, and that policy was continued during the first Administration of President Cleveland. We proceeded to make contracts for the construction of steel plants, so that we created them absolutely in this country in two places in Pennsylvania, and subsequently at a third place, so that we have now three establishments of this character, and provision has been made for them year by year by Congress. It was continued under the Harrison Administration; not so vigorously under the first two years of the second Cleveland Administration, because we were in a period of panic and financial disturbance. Very little was done especially touching seacoast defenses, except to follow the policy so far as the Government had been committed to it in carrying out contracts that had been made by virtue of prior legislation.

It is yet an open question as to how efficient the high-power guns are to be and as to how efficient the Navy is to be. I trust and hope that we have the best type of guns and the best Navy, so far as it goes, upon the face of the earth. It has been lately tried and is to be further tried, no doubt, during this present war. Now, I do not claim perfection by any manner of means touching any of these matters. I have but little practical knowledge touching them and not much of acquired knowledge. I have done the best I could, along with every other member of the House of Representatives, during this transition period and during the later period.

I have always been in favor of the construction of the armored cruiser, the monitor, the torpedo boat, and the torpedo-boat destroyer, because it seemed to me that these were the more practical ships, rather than the more heavily armored battle ship. In that I may have been mistaken; but in any event we have progressed pretty well in the construction of a Navy and in the construction of high-power guns for our sea coast defenses. Perhaps we have not gone as rapidly in that direction as many people desire we should go. Perhaps we are subject to the criticism that we have not made sufficient speed from time to time. If so, I am quite content, as one member of the House of Representatives, to take my share of the criticism. I never claim perfection; far from it.

I have no doubt that in all my public career I have frequently been subject to criticism for the want of proper knowledge and proper efficiency. All that Congress has done and all that any of us has done and all that I could do is to act according to my best judgment, taking into consideration the condition of the Treasury and the progress of invention from time to time. Now, some one may ask why do I make these remarks? Partially in answer to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], who gave us on the conference report on the naval appropriation bill a very interesting statement, in which he told, and no doubt truly, the magnificent and glorious part that he had taken as a legislator in the construction of the Navy. I accord him all praise. I have taken occasion to say before in this House that in my judgment his knowledge touching naval affairs, from his peculiar investigations and from his practical service in the Navy, was very great and very useful.

I might, perhaps, add further that I have taken occasion to make these remarks at this time in view of the criticisms that he did me the honor to make upon myself personally as to my opposition to the creation of a navy. According to my recollection, he can run back from Congress to Congress, and I think he will find that so far as it safely could be done, all things taken into consideration, possibly I have been about as sound as the average member of Congress; and if I keep in that position, I shall keep my own self-respect. All of us can not be Napoleons in war and Solomons in peace.

Mr. RIDGELY. Can the gentleman tell us how much this conference report increases or decreases the total amount of the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. HEMENWAY] can do it better than I can.

Mr. GAINES. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] has the floor. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES]?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. GAINES. I simply want to ask the chairman a question, and I take it I certainly have that delightful privilege. At the bottom of page 9 of the bill I find this language:

> That all material purchased under the foregoing provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad, which material shall be admitted free of duty.

"Which material shall be admitted free of duty." I should like to ask why that language is added, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, I do not know why the Government should pay the duty. It would simply be paying it to itself.

Mr. GAINES. Then levying a tariff on these imports would not reduce the price?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, can not the gentleman from Tennessee understand that for the Government to put it into one pocket and take it out of the other would not affect anyone?

Mr. GAINES. I just wanted to know why that sentence was added there.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It has constantly been there, and I do not see that it affects it one way or the other.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may add to my statement some comparisons which I desire to print in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman may extend his remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I submit the following statement showing the appropriations made on account of fortifications, their maintenance or armament for the years mentioned:

During the Forty-ninth Congress (fiscal years 1887 and 1888) no appropriations were made on account of fortifications, their maintenance or armament, and for the twelve fiscal years 1875 to 1886, inclusive, the appropriation by Congress on this account averaged only $540,750 per annum, and only $463,500 per annum for the fourteen years, including 1887 and 1888, for which two latter fiscal years no specific appropriations were made, as stated.

The bill reported herewith contains appropriations in continuance of the policy adopted by the Fiftieth Congress in the passage of the acts approved September 22, 1888, and March 2, 1889, and by the Fifty-first, Fifty-second, and Fifty-third Congresses in acts approved August 18, 1890, February 24, 1891, July 23, 1892, February 18, 1893, August 1, 1894, and March 2, 1895.

The appropriations by said acts for the eight fiscal years 1889 to 1896 aggregate $22,489,224.50, or an average of $2,811,153.06. For the fiscal years 1897 and 1898 the total appropriation was $16,895,029, being $8,447,514.50 per year. For this fiscal year—

Appropriation by this bill	$9,377,494.00
Amount in Army deficiency bill for fortifications and torpedoes	1,680,800.00
Allotted from $50,000,000 emergency appropriation:
Ordnance Bureau, War Department	9,905,247.95
Engineer Bureau, War Department	5,635,000.00
Total	26,598,541.95

It will be noticed that very largely increased appropriations for coast defenses were made by the Fifty-fourth Congress for the years 1897 and 1898, and adding that to sums available from appropriations made thus far by the Fifty-fifth Congress makes a total for the three years of $43,393,570.95, being more than the aggregate of all sums heretofore appropriated for this purpose.

I do not know that anyone else has anything to say, and I ask for a vote upon the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HOMESTEAD LAWS, RIGHT OF WAY, ETC., IN ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I have a conference report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have a conference report I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa presents a conference report.

Mr. LACEY. I call up the conference report on the Alaska bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement, if there be no objection.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa if he will not allow this conference report to be printed.

Mr. LACEY. It is printed. It is in the RECORD, and I will explain in a word that the only difference between the report now presented and the report that we had the other day is that the paragraph relating to a commission has been eliminated from the report. Aside from that, we have simply taken the printed copy of the report as it appears in the RECORD and readopted it, and leave out the only point that was objected to the other day. Having made this statement, it seems to me hardly necessary to have the report read at length. It is identical with that in the RECORD and we have taken it from the RECORD. The gentleman would not want it read now.

Mr. LOUD. I want everything read that can be read in order. Here is a conference report much longer than the bill itself.

Mr. LACEY. I do not like to disappoint the gentleman from California. I hope it will have the gentleman's attention while it is being read.

Mr. LOUD. Well, you will—and afterwards, too, perhaps.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 5975, "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for the right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 6, 9, 15, 47.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 7, 8, 11, 13, 16, 17, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 48, 49, 50, 52, 54, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out amend so as to read as follows:

"That the homestead land laws of the United States and the rights incident thereto, including the right to enter surveyed or unsurveyed lands under the provisions of law relating to the acquisition of title through soldiers' additional homestead rights, are hereby extended to the District of Alaska, subject to such regulations as may be made by the Secretary of the Interior."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "forty," in lines 11 and 12, and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighty;" so as to make the amendment read as follows:

"Provided, That no entry shall be allowed extending more than 80 rods along the shore of any navigable water, and along such shore a space of at least 80 rods shall be reserved from entry between all such claims, and that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to authorize entries to be made or title to be acquired to the shore of any navigable waters within said District."

And the Senate agree to the same.

amendment read as follows: "And it is further provided, That no homestead shall exceed 80 acres in extent;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "The right to take for railroad uses, subject to the reservation of all minerals and coal therein, public lands;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Additional 40 acres to be limited on navigable waters to 80 rods on the shore line;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to give to such railroad company, its lessees, grantees, or assigns, the ownership or use of minerals, including coal, within the limits of its right of way or of the lands hereby granted."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the amendment insert the following:

"Provided further, That all mining operations prosecuted or undertaken within the limits of such right of way or of the lands hereby granted shall, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, be so conducted as not to injure or interfere with the property or operations of the road over its said lands or right of way."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 55 strike out the word "created" and insert in lieu thereof the word "erected;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That all charges for the transportation of freight and passengers on railroads in the District of Alaska shall be printed and posted as required by section 6 of an act to regulate commerce as amended on March 2, 1889; and such rates shall be subject to revision and modification by the Secretary of the Interior."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House provision numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment so as to read as follows:

"That any such company, by filing with the Secretary of the Interior a preliminary actual survey and plat of its proposed route, shall have the right, at any time within one year thereafter, to file the map and profile of definite location provided for in this act; and such preliminary survey and plat shall, during the said period of one year from the time of filing the same, have the effect to render all the lands on which said preliminary survey and plat shall pass subject to such right of way."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Or if the map of definite location be not filed within one year as herein required, or if the entire road shall not be completed within four years from the filing of the map of definite location."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "for an easement;" in line 16 strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "twenty;" in line 19 strike out the words "unappropriated and unoccupied;" in line 29 strike out the words "or map of general route" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of preliminary survey;" in line 40 strike out the word "said" and insert the word "the" in lieu thereof; in line 72 strike out the word "for" and the words "less than;" and in line 73 strike out the words "thirty nor more than" and insert in lieu thereof the word "exceeding;" in line 78 strike out the words "or tramway;" in line 79, after the word "mile," insert the words "or one-half mile of tramway, at a cost of not less than $500;" in line 82, after the word "line" and before the word "actually," insert the words "hitherto constructed or;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That where within ninety days after the approval of this act proof is made to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that actual surveys, evidenced by designated monuments, were made, and the line of a railroad, wagon road, or tramway located thereby, or that actual construction was commenced on the line of any railroad, wagon road, or tramway prior to January 31, 1898, the rights to inure hereunder shall, if the terms of this act be complied with as to such railroad, wagon road, or tramway, relate back to the date when such survey or construction was commenced; and in all conflicts relative to the right of way or other privilege of this act the person, company, or corporation having been first in time in actual survey or construction, as the case may be, shall be deemed first in right."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 5 strike out the words "now or;" in line 6, after the word "Alaska," insert the words "in good faith;" in line 8, after the word "may," insert the word "each," and after the word "purchase" insert the words "one claim only," and strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu the word "eighty;" so as to make line 8 read as follows: "may each purchase one claim not exceeding 80 acres of such land for any;" strike out all after the word "lands," in line 14, down to the word "Provided," in line 16, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and ingress and egress shall be reserved to the public on the waters of all streams, whether navigable or otherwise;" in line 17, after the word "allowed," insert the words "under this act;" in line 18 strike out the word "forty" and insert the word "eighty;" in line 19 strike out the word "forty" and insert the word "eighty;" in line 20, after the word "sold," insert the words "or entered," and in the same line strike out the word "section" and insert the word "act;" in line 27, before the word "wharves," insert the word "and," and in the same line strike out the words "or other like uses;" in line 28, after the word "wharves," add the word "and;" in line 29, strike out the words "and so forth;" in line 30 strike out the word "the" and insert the word "said" before the word "Secretary;" in the same line strike out the words "of the Interior" and insert the words "and a roadway 60 feet in width, parallel to the shore line as near as may be practicable, shall be reserved for the use of the public as a highway;" in line 38, after the word "claims," insert the words "substantially square in form and," and, after the word "initiated," insert the words "prior to January 21, 1898;" so as to make the line read: "vided further, That all claims substantially square in form and lawfully initiated prior to January 21, 1898, by survey;" in line 44, strike out the words "all the limitations" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the requirements;" and in the same line, after the word "act," insert the words "except as to area, but in no case shall such entry extend along the water front for more than 160 rods;" in line 49, after the word "natives," add the words "Provided, That the Annette, Pribilof Islands, and the islands leased or occupied for the propagation of foxes be excepted from the operation of this act;" in line 58, strike out all after the word "the" down to the word "and" in line 60 and insert in lieu thereof the words "admitted in evidence as if taken before the register and receiver of the proper local land office;" in line 79, after the word "lands," add "or any part thereof;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out all of section 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 12. That the President is authorized and empowered, in his discretion, by Executive order from time to time to establish or discontinue land districts in the District of Alaska, and to define, modify, or change the boundaries thereof, and to designate or change the location of any land office therein; and he is also authorized and empowered to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register for each land district he may establish and a receiver of public moneys therefor; and the register and receiver appointed for such district shall, during their respective terms of office, reside at the place designated for the land office. That the registers and receivers of public moneys in the land districts of Alaska shall each receive an annual salary of $1,500 and the fees provided by law for like officers in the State of Oregon, not to exceed, including such salary and fees, a total annual compensation of $3,000 for each of said officers.

"SEC. 13. That native-born citizens of the Dominion of Canada shall be accorded in said District of Alaska the same mining rights and privileges accorded to citizens of the United States in British Columbia and the Northwest Territory by the laws of the Dominion of Canada or the local laws, rules, and regulations; but no greater rights shall be thus accorded than citizens of the United States or persons who have declared their intention to become such may enjoy in said District of Alaska; and the Secretary of the Interior shall from time to time promulgate and enforce rules and regulations to carry this provision into effect."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the words "section 13" and insert in lieu thereof the words "section 14;" in line 4 strike out the words "at the port of Wrangell" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at any of the ports;" in line 9, after the word "States," insert the words "and to persons who have declared their intentions to become such;" in line 12 strike out all after the first comma down to the end of the section and insert in lieu thereof the words "that corresponding privileges have been and are being granted by the Government of the Dominion of Canada in respect of goods, wares, and merchandise passing through the territory of the Dominion of Canada to any point in the District of Alaska from any point in said District."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment of the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

JOHN F. LACEY,
JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
W. R. ELLIS,
Conferees on the part of the House.

HENRY C. HANSBROUGH,
THOMAS H. CARTER,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LACEY. That is all the conference report. I would ask the gentleman from California whether he insists on the reading of the statement?

Mr. LOUD. Is it the same statement as was made before?

Mr. LACEY. There is an addition to the statement which was made before, and if the Clerk will read the manuscript paragraph of the present report of the conferees added to the former report of the conferees, relating to the fish question, it will be sufficient.

The Clerk read as follows:

The present report omits that portion of the former report of agreement of conferees relating to the fishery question, and providing for commissioners; otherwise the agreement is the same as that heretofore reported.

JOHN F. LACEY,
W. R. ELLIS,
JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to omitting the reading of the statement?

Mr. LOUD. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LACEY. I move that the report be adopted.

Mr. LOUD. Are you not going to make any suggestion in regard to this report at all?

Mr. LACEY. We covered the matter fully the day before yesterday, and I only want further to say that all the items objected to the day before yesterday have been taken out of the bill. We have taken out of the bill everything that anybody criticised the day before yesterday, and have confined it to the land and not gone out to the sea, and that ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. LOUD. You embrace the whole earth.

Mr. LACEY. The earth and the fullness thereof.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Only that portion in Alaska.

Mr. LOUD. I should like a few minutes on this myself.

Mr. LACEY. I yield to the gentleman such time as he desires.

Mr. LOUD. I shall not need a great deal of time, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman says that there has been eliminated from this bill the only portion to which there was objection. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I reserved the point of order the other day because I was not exactly positive as to whether it was subject to a point of order or not. But I reserved the point of order on the ground that this was all undigested; and, as I am informed by some people who ought to know, it is very vicious legislation.

Now, the point of order was raised not for the purpose alone of defeating that paragraph, but for the purpose of defeating the whole measure. I want to call the attention of the House to what they are doing to-day. Here is a bill that passed the House containing four or five pages, which grew over in the Senate to twenty-one, and came back to the House and passed in a conference report which covers God knows how many pages. I venture the assertion that outside of the conference committee in this House there is not a man upon this floor who has any conception of what this bill contains. Now, my objections to this are not as to detail, but are objections to the principle and the fundamental nature and character of the bill; that is, that you are now ingrafting a full set of land laws for a Territory unknown to the membership of this House upon a right-of-way bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the gentleman recognize the fact that that was not placed on it by the conference committee, but was placed upon the bill by the Senate?

Mr. LOUD. I understand that these amendments as they appear in this bill were placed there by the Senate. I understand that they amended the title of the bill by adding the words "and for other purposes," which permitted you to embrace every subject under the sun. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is vicious legislation, which no man can deny. Now, then, my people are somewhat interested in Alaska. The best people in my State have done more to develop Alaska than all the rest of the interests of this country. They are in favor of some legislation for Alaska in relation to land laws. They believe such legislation should be enacted by a competent committee, after the committee has digested that question, before it presents it to the House of Representatives, and that the House of Representatives should have an opportunity to amend that bill as presented.

Mr. Speaker, the conference committee tell me that this bill is "all right." A gentleman with whom I conversed a short while ago, the governor of Alaska, who, I think, knows as much about that Territory as any man, says it is "all wrong."

Mr. LACEY. Who says it is all wrong?

Mr. LOUD. The governor of Alaska.

Mr. LACEY. The governor of Alaska appeared before the conference committee and approved substantially all of it.

Mr. LOUD. He told me all this within an hour.

Mr. LACEY. The only thing he objected to was something about a claim of his own. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. I have been in consultation with one of the Schloss boys, of the Alaska Commercial Company, that has had rights in this Territory for more than thirty years and has done more to develop the Territory of Alaska than all the rest of the people of this country——

Mr. ELLIS. What rights of theirs does this bill abrogate?

Mr. LOUD. I have said that the details of the bill I am not familiar with, and I say there is not a member of this House that is familiar with it outside of the conferees. I object to this system of legislation, with all due respect to the conference committee. I do not believe there is one of the conference committee that knows any more about Alaska and its conditions than he does about the kingdom of heaven.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose the gentleman from California thinks he is an expert about that.

Mr. LOUD. I think I am an expert on that question.

Mr. FOOTE. On both of them.

Mr. LOUD. Yes, I think I am nearer both places. [Laughter.] I noticed one beneficent provision in the bill, and that is that they have permitted the President of the United States to establish as many land offices and as many receivers and land agents as he sees fit, and as he can find officers for. I know there are three or four men left in the country who did yeomen's service in the last campaign who are yet unprovided for, and would be willing to go to Alaska and live for $3,000 a year.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. They would be under the civil-service rules, would they not?

Mr. LOUD. Of course they would not; they would be Presidential appointments. Gentlemen, you are passing legislation which you know nothing about—legislation that should have been considered in this House section by section and well digested. I want to admit again that I am not in a position to contend against the specific sections of this bill; but I want gentlemen to know that from what people tell me who have been in this country from thirty to thirty-five years—and I think it must be apparent to this House—if you are to enact land laws for the Territory of Alaska, they should be adopted by the committee only after hearings have been given to the people who are familiar with the conditions in Alaska and procuring information which is easily obtainable.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the gentleman know that that was done, that the governor of Alaska appeared before our committee, and various other parties interested particularly in Alaska, and made statements as to what they thought was best?

Mr. LACEY. The conference committee held the matter open ten days waiting for the arrival of the governor of Alaska.

Mr. LOUD. Then we are getting back to the position that the conference committee has ingrafted on the bill this legislation. I said before your committee no one ever appeared from Alaska.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly not.

Mr. LOUD. I am speaking of the committees of the House, and that no one appeared before you; that there may have been persons who appeared before the conference committee; if the gentleman from Iowa says they did, of course I must accept it. I have been told to the contrary, and yet, of course, I believe what the gentleman from Iowa says. The gentleman himself can not deny but that this is an improper way to enact legislation.

Mr. LACEY. What is there improper about it? The Senate, under the Constitution, added amendments to our bill. Did not it have a right to do it?

Mr. LOUD. Of course it had.

Mr. LACEY. Then the bill went to conference, and we considered it in conference. What is there improper about that?

Mr. LOUD. There is this impropriety, if the gentleman will pay attention to me again: It is improper to enact legislation of this kind upon a right-of-way bill. I do not care whether the Senate put it on there or not. Without any disrespect to the Senate, I have seen that body ingraft measures on bills that did not commend themselves to my favorable attention, to say the least; neither did they to the gentleman from Iowa. I say again, it is not a proper way to enact legislation to take up a simple right-of-way bill and enact a full code of land laws and create land districts in the Territory of Alaska; and the gentleman from Iowa knows that as well as I do. If any legislation were necessary for the Territory of Alaska, as representing the people who have interests there, I should naturally look to the sources where that legislation would originate.

I thought I was in close touch with the two committees which would naturally handle legislation of that kind—the Committee on Territories and the Committee on Public Lands—and we were prepared to bring men here who were thoroughly familiar with the conditions, if any legislation of this character was to be inaugurated before either of these committees.

Mr. ELLIS. Did the gentleman seek to appear before the Committee on Public Lands or to bring any of those gentlemen there, in order that the committee might be apprised what legislation, in their opinion, was necessary?

Mr. LOUD. Permit me to say again, that neither of those committees has presented any legislation to this House in any other shape than through a conference report, except this small right of way bill. Can not the gentleman understand me? Do I not make myself sufficiently plain? Is my language so obscure that no person can understand what I am saying?

I say that no legislation on this subject has come from the proper committees of this House to which members would naturally look for such legislation. I say again that I was prepared with my colleagues to go before those committees and endeavor carefully to assist in framing such legislation for the Territory of Alaska from an expert standpoint, taking advantage of the knowledge of men who have lived in that Territory for many years. But neither of those committees, I say again, has seen fit to bring before this House such legislation, except as it comes from the other body, and then fixed up in conference in such a shape that no man, I repeat, has any conception of what is contained in this conference report. I do not care whether we have heard it read or not. No man can sit in his seat and hear a conference report read, especially so long a one as this, and have any conception of what legislation is contained in it.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this bill started originally in the House as a simple bill for right of way in the Territory of Alaska to facilitate the building of a railroad; that this bill, containing originally only 4 or 5 pages, comes back now with some 20 additional pages, and that as now presented it has never been printed so that members of the House can read it?

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman, I know, would not make any such statement as that.

Mr. LOUD. The conference report has been printed in the RECORD; but no member of the House has ever had an opportunity yet to examine this bill as it is to-day, or as it appeared when presented the other day, except by taking the conference report and comparing it with the bill—a work which the average member will not undertake.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Allow me to say that on the 4th day of March last this bill, with the Senate amendments added to it, was printed. I know that there are changes embraced in the conference report relative to particular sections which the Senate passed, but not making a great many changes.

Mr. LOUD. I might possibly doubt that statement, when I find that in this report you have gone off to embrace the ocean as well as the land.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand the bill as reported has never been printed.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, yes; it was printed in the Senate, and printed with the amendments. It is not a bill simply for the right of way; it extends the homestead laws as well as the right-of-way laws to Alaska. Those are two very wide subjects. The homestead law constitutes practically all that is left of the land laws of the United States. And when gentlemen talk about this being a little matter, I say it is a big matter. There are practically no land laws of the United States except the mineral land laws which are already in force in Alaska, and the homestead laws which this bill proposes to extend there. That comprehends practically all the land laws. Yet gentlemen come here and say that this was a little bill that did not amount to anything. It amounted to everything; it covered that whole territory, and embraced the entire domain of land legislation.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that nearly every amendment proposed by the Senate has been amended by the conference committee. I remember myself one or two cases where the conferees agreed to strike out the amendment of the Senate and substitute other language. That was the way the report read. Now, that other language has never been printed, as I understand.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. PAYNE. It is not printed in ordinary shape for the use of the House.

Mr. LACEY. It is printed in the bill and in the RECORD.

Mr. PAYNE. I know that it is allowable under our rules to bring up a conference report in this way, but I think there ought to be a change in our rule of action in this respect. I think that every important conference report that is brought into the House should lie over long enough to be printed.

Mr. LACEY. Had not the gentleman better attack the Committee on Rules instead of the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. PAYNE. I am not attacking anybody just now. I am merely making a suggestion for the improvement of our methods of doing business, and this bill gives me the chance to make that suggestion. I trust I shall be allowed to make it by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the gentleman recognize the fact that this bill was before the House on Monday last and received consideration at that time?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, one section of it was considered for a few moments.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman from Colorado will allow me now, I will finish my remarks. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish to submit one parliamentary question before the gentleman from New York proceeds. Coming into the House just at this moment, I am not fully acquainted with the status of the bill. If I am correct in my recollection, this bill, as it passed the House originally, was a mere right-of-way bill——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). And it has been amended in conference so as to embrace features covering, practically, the general land laws of the country?

Mr. LACEY. That is exactly what the gentleman from New York has been stating, which is a mistake, because he knows nothing of the matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I said that because the gentleman from California made the assertion. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. And he did not know anything about it, either.

Mr. PAYNE. And when the assertion was made by the gentleman from California, and neither the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands nor his able adjutant, the gentleman from Colorado, denied the assertion, I felt warranted in assuming that the statement was an accurate one. I had to assume that the bill was passed in a certain form by the House and these amendments were "put on the bill," to use the words of the gentleman from California, by the conference committee, and the statement that the bill now covers a great deal more than it originally sought to cover has not been denied by anybody, as I understand it——

Mr. LACEY. Well, Mr. Speaker, the record will show how unwarranted such a statement is.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). And it seems to me now, as I understand from the statements of gentlemen around me, that this bill embraces other matters not originally in the House bill, because, from the statement of the gentleman from California, it originally consisted of only some 4 or 5 pages, but it has been increased by Senate amendments and by the House committee of conference into a very formidable looking document embracing some 21 or more pages. That statement—and it was not denied either by the chairman of the committee or by the gentleman from Colorado—I assume to be a correct one.

Now, my statement is only made on the strength of the suggestions of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], who is generally correct in all of his statements.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, let us submit to the record. That is better than the suggestion or opinions of any member here. I have in my hand the original bill. Here it is. Gentlemen can see what it contained.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, as I understand, they do not deny the fact that the bill has been increased from some 4 or 5 pages, embracing only a trifling matter, to some twenty-odd pages.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Because of amendments placed upon the bill by the Senate.

Mr. PAYNE. But that is not so much the point, Mr. Speaker. Of course the Senate has a right to make amendments, and they do make amendments to most of our bills. But the committee of conference seems to have gone further, and inserted amendment after amendment to those proposed by the Senate. They have stricken off some of the amendments of the House, as I am informed, and have inserted other amendments in their stead.

Now, of course, I would not reflect, and do not undertake to reflect, upon the committee or its members. I am speaking of the general policy of legislating in that way. I think that a conference committee should be required to present their report and have it printed and laid before the House, so that the members could understand exactly the changes which have been made in the matter, and not leave it to be determined—either adopted or rejected—on a formal reading before the House, which can not, as a rule, give the information which we should have before acting upon it. I think it wrong in practice, and I think the gentleman from Iowa himself, if it were a matter coming from some other committee excepting his own, would agree with me in that. I think we ought to have some information about these changes before undertaking to determine the question in this way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman think that in the closing hours of Congress, for instance, we could have the reports of the conference committees, the reports on large appropriation bills, printed when they are only brought in at midnight, and must be considered between that time and the hour of adjournment?

Mr. PAYNE. There are occasions, of course, when these reports could not be printed and laid before members——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Would the gentleman insist, then, that reports of this character should be privileged after printing or before printing in the manner he suggests?

Mr. PAYNE. I would make these reports privileged—especially so far as the appropriations are concerned—at all times. The same rule might prevail in reference to them as prevails with reference to privileged motions—to suspend the rules, for instance, in the last six days of the session. I do not think there would be any objection to a provision of that kind, which would enable members to have access to such reports, and to understand them thoroughly before they are taken up or presented for consideration.

Mr. TALBERT. Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that this is a bill which is now before us or a conference report? [Laughter.] I would like to know exactly what we are considering.

Mr. LACEY. This is a conference report.

Mr. TALBERT. Then we ought to have some information in reference to it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would be willing to compromise on a speech from the gentleman from Iowa stating the matters at issue.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Iowa if the Senate amendments to the bill when it was considered in the House were adopted without debate?

Mr. LACEY. The matter was discussed fully when it was before the House a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from New York might have accomplished his object by debating the Senate amendments when they came back for action on the part of the House.

Mr. LACEY. Well, the difficulty about the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from California both is that they find nothing to criticise, and therefore they are, in a general way, indulging in a scolding of the House and everybody else.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not alluding to that part. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. And the Committee on Rules seems to have been the special object of their assault.

Mr. STEELE. He is trying to enlist support now.

Mr. PAYNE. That might relieve the gentleman from Iowa, then.

Mr. LACEY. The conference report has been published in full, on Monday. There has been no change, except to leave out the only thing that was objected to on Monday, and instead of less information being given to the House than usual, a great deal more is given than is usual, and that is not all——

Mr. DOCKERY. Seriously, I did not hear the debate the other day, and I hope the gentleman from Iowa will, at some point along the line of this discussion before we take a vote, state briefly the provisions of the bill.

Mr. LACEY. I explained them the day before yesterday, and my friend from California [Mr. LOUD] found one point only that he objected to. We have gone back to conference and taken that out, and now he complains that he can not find anything else. He thinks if he had time maybe he could.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes; I found something else. And let me say again to the gentleman that I had no serious objection to this roving commission that he proposed to investigate all questions between this Government and Great Britain. I should like to have seen that commission organized, if the gentleman has gotten on it. I think it was probably a very beneficent proposition to consider, but I did not care anything about that. I simply took the only opportunity that was presented to me to get this bill before the House in such a shape that the House could have an opportunity to know at least what it was passing upon. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has no more conception of what this bill contains, although he has talked upon it, than if he were not a member of this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Have you?

Mr. LOUD. And I will apply the same statement to everybody else in the House except the conferees, without disrespect to any member of the House either. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has no conception of what this bill contains.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not the slightest on earth.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the gentleman think, if this goes over, that anybody will inquire into the matter?

Mr. GROSVENOR. As I am referred to, I will say that I was told that this bill began at Alaska and ended at Nova Scotia, and gave away pretty much all the rights that there were intervening between those places. That is all I know about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I did not know that it ended anywhere.

Mr. LACEY. Nova Scotia was taken out of the bill. That got into the bill against our objection, and we took it out, and now there is nothing but Alaska left in the bill.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is California left out of the bill?

Mr. LACEY. All except my friend from the San Francisco district. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from Iowa says this was a bill extending the homestead laws and providing for rights of way, etc. "Extending the homestead laws" was well put in this bill originally, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that they might have wanted at some time in its progress through these two bodies to have embraced that subject; but it seems when it got over to the other end of the Capitol that was not broad enough, and they put in that clause that we put on appropriation bills, "and for other purposes." Of course that is broad enough to embrace every subject under the sun. Now, I say that I have been unable to find anything in this bill, originally, pertaining to anything except directly to rights of way. I will venture to say to the membership of this House that no member ever contemplated that any other question was ever before this House when the bill was up for consideration.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman makes that misstatement for the third or fourth time in this House.

Mr. LOUD. That is the first time I have made that statement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LACEY. I wish you would withdraw it, because this bill extends the homestead laws as well as rights of way.

Mr. LOUD. I say I have been unable to find such a provision. I will say that I think the House was unable to understand, when this bill was up before, in what manner it extended the homestead laws——

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask if the conference report is accompanied by a statement of the House conferees of the effect of the report.

The SPEAKER. It is accompanied by a statement.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] agree that if two days' more time are allowed, he will read this matter over?

Mr. LOUD. Yes; I will.

Mr. LACEY. I object.

Mr. LOUD. I will, if I have time, Mr. Speaker. I will make that limitation. If by ten hours' work a day I can complete it, I will do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. This bill has been laid over for weeks and weeks in an effort to take care of the very gentlemen whom my friend [Mr. LOUD] has been so anxious about. Now, if the gentleman is through, I will explain just what I mean by that.

Mr. GAINES. Who is it that he is trying to take care of?

Mr. LACEY. Under the act of 1891, authority was given to various canneries, fisheries, etc., to purchase tracts of land, "substantially square in form, at $2.50 an acre, not to exceed 160 acres."

The Senate amended this bill so as to cut down the rights of these men under the act of 1891 to 40 acres. Thereupon those companies and persons who had commenced to build canneries commenced to send petitions to my friend from California, who had a post-office bill on hand which so engrossed his time that he does not fully understand the situation.

Mr. LOUD. Do you not think I understand it as well as 350 members of this House do?

Mr. LACEY. No; I do not believe you have the remotest conception of it, and you are unwilling to understand it. There are none so blind as those who will not see.

Mr. LOUD. Take it to some man that does know.

Mr. LACEY. A number of Californians have bought land there on which to build canneries, and my friend from California came to me when the matter first went to conference and said, "I am anxious to see that these men are not deprived of their rights. This bill as it came from the Senate cut the land down to 40 acres." As it now stands, under this conference report, it will be 160 acres. Their rights have not been cut down. Each right now remains at 160 acres of land. The protests that the gentleman has heard are from those parties, thinking their rights have been cut down to 40 acres, after they had been at an expense of thousands and thousands of dollars in the erection of these canneries. This conference report stands by the House proposition, holding these tracts up to 160 acres.

Now, there is nothing else that my friend has been able to point out.

This bill has been held in conference for a particular matter. The gentleman has been unable to point out anything else to which there is objection. The report was printed in full two days ago in the RECORD.

Mr. PITNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. PITNEY. No one gentleman has said what this bill means since the conference report has been presented.

Mr. LACEY. The matter was presented and discussed fully the day before yesterday.

Mr. PITNEY. I have been out and it was read while I was not in. No one understands your conference report. Will no one explain it?

Mr. LACEY. The statement of the conferees has been published and read. Does the gentleman wish it to be read again?

Mr. PITNEY. Can not the gentleman explain it in a few words?

Mr. LACEY. No, I can not explain it in a few words; but I will be glad to have the gentleman point out his objections.

Mr. PITNEY. I want to know what the bill means; nobody understands it.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman does not want to misrepresent me or the point I made. Now, I said I could not take this bill by details, but I did object to legislation of this character. That I thought was plain and explicit enough. I say that the House can not properly digest this bill with this information. I say that no one except the conferees can possibly really understand what this bill means; and it is a method and manner of legislation that should not be adopted by any body.

Mr. LACEY. Suppose the bill had come over from the Senate in the first place, and there had never been a right-of-way bill or a homestead bill sent to the Senate, and they had sent us this bill. Gentlemen would have the same opportunities as now. They had the right to amend the bill, and they did amend it inside of their constitutional powers and inside the rules of the Senate, and we can not object to that.

The Senate has included other matters. We limited it to railroads and they included wagon roads. That was proper; the wagon roads are really of more importance in the development of that country than the railroads. They put in tram roads. Was not that a very proper amendment? Were not these tram roads of more immediate importance than railroads? Now to that they added one amendment which is new legislation entirely. That was a proposition that where the Dominion of Canada extends to the citizens of the United States certain mining rights we should reciprocate and extend the same mining rights to the citizens of the Dominion of Canada. This is a change of the mining rights and laws. It is entirely within the scope of a land bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Does this change include all the public lands of the United States?

Mr. LACEY. No; only in the Territory or District of Alaska.

Mr. PITNEY. Can the gentleman furnish us a statement or a copy of the bill as it will read if it becomes law by the adoption of the conference report?

Mr. LACEY. The statement is printed in the RECORD as it was made in the House the day before yesterday.

Mr. PITNEY. Nobody can understand it unless it is accompanied by an explanation or a print of the bill as it will remain after the conference report is agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That was made in the House, and it was printed in the RECORD last Monday.

Mr. LACEY. The statement was printed when the conference report was considered.

Mr. PITNEY. But is there a print of the bill as it will be when the conference report is adopted?

Mr. LACEY. There is no provision in the rules authorizing anything of that kind. The bill has been printed with all the Senate amendments numbered in full. This bill, instead of being so complex as expressed by the gentleman from California, is clearer than appropriation bills are usually presented. They are not printed in full as they will read after the conference report is adopted.

Mr. PITNEY. No, sir; we do not bring in all sorts of legislation on them.

Mr. LACEY. We have nothing on this bill but land legislation.

Mr. PITNEY. What is it? Please let us understand it.

Mr. LACEY. It is very simple. If the House will bear with me I will endeavor again to explain it. I am glad to have the the House manifest some interest in the bill, and if I can get members' attention I will explain it. There is nothing difficult about it. It is a little irritating to be criticised for putting in the fisheries amendment when it was put in by another body against our objection. Now, the bill is simply a land bill. The original proposition of the bill was to extend the right-of-way laws in a modified form and adapt them to the Territory of Alaska; also to extend the homestead laws. The town-site laws had already been extended, and the mineral-land laws also.

Now, this bill carries the right-of-way laws in a modified form. We have this difficulty in Alaskan legislation. There is no Territorial government, and no Territorial representation in this Congress, so the committee was bound to do the best they could for these people at a long distance, and got all the information they could get in every way. The governor of Alaska telegraphed from San Francisco, I believe, that he was on his way, after the bill had passed the House and Senate and got into conference, and wanted to be heard. The matter was held up until he could come. He was heard, and has been consulted with very freely. His information has been quite useful. There is only one criticism of the bill that he has ever made, and that is this: Under the act of 1891, which gives the right of purchase of 160 acres of land, in substantially a square form, for canneries and other purposes, the rule in the Land Office has limited the purchase of that land to the amount in actual use. In his own instance he had been limited to 20 acres, although he had taken or tried to take 160. Subsequently, on appeal, it was extended to 50 acres. The real difficulty and criticism the Department has made is that instead of taking the land in substantially a square form, they have, in some instances, attempted to make a ribbon of the 160 acres along the shore, and instead of taking half a mile of water front they have tried to take a mile or more with 160 acres of land only. The act required it should be in substantially a square form. The Department refused to issue patents and to recognize the surveys, and has refused to recognize the title of the companies purchasing land taken in that way, but held that it should be taken in a square form, as near as practicable.

When the bill came into the Senate, the Senate provided that all the land taken under the act of 1891 should only be taken under this act, and be limited to 40 acres, and those men who have attempted to buy sites for canneries should get only 40 acres instead of 160 acres. I thought that was unjust, but that they should not be permitted to abuse the law by taking it in a strip along the water front, and consequently we agreed to leave the amount at 160 acres, but limit the water front to one-half mile in all these purchases heretofore made.

There was a controversy between the Senate and the House as to how large a homestead should be. The House bill provided that it should be 160 acres, but the Senate cut it down to 40 acres. Just why we never could realize, but they seem to have got the idea that 160 acres of land in Alaska was something of peculiar value. We reserved the mineral rights; nobody can get a quarter section of a placer claim or a mineral claim; that is expressly reserved in the bill. So we could not see why the original homestead law, applicable to Missouri or California, should not apply to Alaska; but the Senate insisted that it ought to be 40 acres, and we finally compromised and agreed that it should be 80 acres, but that the bill should not cut down the grants under the act of 1891 that the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] has been so anxious about, and, I think, justly so; I think the rights of the purchasers are properly preserved in the form in which the bill now stands.

There was another difficulty. The question was raised whether or not under this new law they might not get too large a shore right on the water front or get too large a fishery right, and in order to prevent anything of that kind, the bill reserved alternate 80-rod fronts on the water. So, a homestead of 80 acres can be taken 80 rods on the shore, fronting on the water, but the next 80 acres must be reserved for the Government. This will absolutely prevent any possibility of the shores being monopolized. Then, again, the streams were reserved, so as to prevent anybody putting up wire fences across the streams and stopping the passage of boats. They were held open as highways.

In addition to that a wagon road was required to pass over every tract that fronted the water. If the bill is subject to any criticism whatever, it is the criticism that in order to prevent monopoly and give full and free rights of way along the shores the committee has fallen into the error of too great strictness in cutting down shore rights.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman state whether this was reported by the Committee on Public Lands in the House?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. PITNEY. But the Senate amendments constitute three-quarters of the bill in its present form.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I should like to make an inquiry as to section 13.

Mr. LACEY. That has gone out.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Altogether?

Mr. LACEY. It has gone out altogether, and two new sections—sections 12 and 13—have been substituted.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. What is the nature of the new section 13?

Mr. LACEY. That is very simple. It provides for additional land offices.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Was that in the original bill, either in the House or the Senate?

Mr. LACEY. In the Senate it was.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. What section was it in the Senate?

Mr. LACEY. I think it was section 13; I am not sure of the number.

A MEMBER. Section 12.

Mr. LACEY. We have accepted the Senate proposition. The House last July passed a bill authorizing the President to appoint, in his discretion, one more register and receiver of the land office, locating the office, in the President's discretion, somewhere in the Yukon region. The Committee on Appropriations failed to make an appropriation for the pay of those officials, and they have not yet been appointed. In framing this bill it was deemed best, instead of providing simply for one additional register and receiver, to give more leeway, owing to the uncertainty as to the number of these officers that would be required in that region. So, as the bill now stands, the President is authorized, in his discretion, to establish such land offices as he may deem necessary with the additional land officers that may be required in that country.

The same difficulty will arise here that arose in California. California sprang into existence as a full-fledged State, as Minerva sprang from the head of Jove. The miners went there, took possession, and organized a government. California became a State at once, with a large population. The same thing is liable to occur in Alaska. Thousands of people are going in that direction, and it would seem wisest under the circumstances, especially in view of the difficulties of travel, to enable the President to locate these land offices where they may be needed, as future developments may demonstrate the necessity for their existence. So that instead of standing by the provision allowing only one register and receiver to be appointed, as was provided in the act of last July, we give the President in the new section 13 the larger authority I have stated.

Mr. RIDGELY. The gentleman said that the bill limited the depot privileges for these railroads to 20 acres.

Mr. LACEY. Twenty acres are allowed, but at terminal and junction points, with the privilege of buying 40 acres more at $1.25 an acre. As to the water front, these companies are limited the same as anybody else.

Mr. RIDGELY. Along an important shore line might they not cover the entire water front?

Mr. LACEY. They will have no right on the shore except a simple right of way. Their shore rights are limited in the same way as the shore rights of a cannery or of any individual.

Mr. LOUD. Where in the original bill, or the Senate amendment, was the provision relating to soldiers' additional homesteads? Was that in a Senate amendment?

Mr. LACEY. It was in a Senate amendment.

Mr. LOUD. On what page?

Mr. LACEY. Right at the beginning of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman give us some light upon that? Will he state what was the necessity for extending this great right?

Mr. LACEY. It is not a great right; it is a very small right. There were what were known as additional soldiers' homestead rights, the scrip having been issued a good many years ago. That scrip has all been taken up except about 8,000 acres, which may be located anywhere. It was believed that if the soldiers wanted to locate these land rights inside the Arctic Circle, they ought to have the privilege of doing so. The Senate put in a provision allowing those additional homestead rights to be thus located in the District of Alaska, and the conferees on the part of the House yielded to the contention of the Senate on that subject.

The amount of land involved is trifling, will not exceed 8,000 acres; and when those 8,000 acres have been taken up that particular homestead right, or scrip, will be extinguished. The sooner it is extinguished the better. I would not vote for any proposition for land scrip of any kind. We have met in the Committee on Public Lands propositions of all kinds for the issue of various kinds of scrip. We have resolutely set our faces for years against anything of that nature. This scrip has been outstanding for a good many years. This is all there is left of it. We allow it to be located under this bill.

Mr. LOUD. What is the object of the provision? The soldier himself is not required to make the location? This scrip may be sold in open market?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly; the soldier may assign the scrip and somebody else make the location. The provision for the issue of land scrip was found to be unwise, and the further issue was stopped. No more can be issued. It has all been made available, with the exception of about 8,000 acres; and who holds the scrip now for those 8,000 acres nobody knows.

Mr. LOUD. You know that this scrip has been used for fraudulent purposes, as a rule?

Mr. LACEY. I suppose it has been used the same as any other scrip. As to all these various kinds of scrip the privilege has been abused. And the policy of the Government for years has been to issue no more such scrip. If this were a proposition to issue new scrip for 8,000 acres, to soldiers or anybody else, to be located in Alaska, the committee would not have consented. But this scrip is already outstanding, with the right of location.

Mr. TALBERT. As I understand, this provision is not retroactive. It does not interfere with arrangements already made. We can not take away the rights of the holders of that scrip if we wanted to do so. It is already in circulation.

Mr. LACEY. Now, there is another provision of the bill, and that is that the act of 1891 with reference to the purchase of manufacturing sites and other matters of that kind is repealed. It will be remembered that the former law made provision for quarter sections which might be taken up or purchased. Under the present provision only 80 acres can be taken up. And it also provides that no such location shall front more than one-quarter of a mile on any stream.

These, I believe, are substantially all of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. What provision or what section embodies the additional homestead feature?

Mr. LACEY. The first section of the bill. If the gentleman has a printed copy of the Senate bill before him, he will find it in the first section.

I will state to the gentleman, in a general way, as to this particular part of the bill, that the right of way for railroads was fully discussed in the House before the matter went into conference committee at all. The original proposition of the House committee was to give 160 acres at the various railroad stations for railroad purposes. That matter came before the House, and it was cut down to 20 acres on motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON].

That embraces about the entire features of the bill.

Mr. PITNEY. If the gentleman from Iowa will allow me, I notice in the bill as it passed the Senate that there are thirteen sections only, of which about three-fourths present new matter——

Mr. LACEY. Not such new matter as it seems, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The matter embodied in the bill is pertinent to the action of the House.

Mr. LACEY. I will state to the gentleman that we divided some of the sections——

Mr. PITNEY. If the gentleman will just allow me a moment until I make my statement.

I find in the conference report that you have modified the proposition contained in the bill as it passed the Senate and make section 13 to read as section 14; and I gather from the report that there is a new section 13. But the report provides that section 13 shall read as follows:

SEC. 13. That native-born citizens of the Dominion of Canada shall be accorded in said District of Alaska the same mining rights and privileges accorded to citizens of the United States in British Columbia and the Northwest Territory by the laws of the Dominion of Canada or the local laws, rules, and regulations; but no greater rights shall be thus accorded than citizens of the United States or persons who have declared their intention to become such may enjoy in said District of Alaska; and the Secretary of the Interior shall from time to time promulgate and enforce rules and regulations to carry this provision into effect.

Now, I do not find that language in the former section 13, either as it passed the House or as amended by the Senate.

Mr. LOUD. And I do not find the additional homestead provision either in the bill.

Mr. PITNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, let us dispose of one part at a time.

I understand that certain provisions are to be now incorporated in the bill which have not been considered by either House; and, if true, I insist, Mr. Speaker, that the committee of conference has exceeded its jurisdiction, and certainly it has exceeded its jurisdiction in inserting a new provision here. This new section 13 is a provision which has not passed either body. If it is recommended by the conference committee, and if they have authority to make such a report or recommendation, I want to understand it.

Mr. LACEY. If the gentleman will allow me, here is the original provision——

Mr. PITNEY. Well, I hope the gentleman will state it. We can not understand, from the reading of the conference report, what was done.

Mr. LACEY. Here is the original proposition as embodied in the bill itself. I refer now to amendment No. 56. That amendment provides, in substance, that under certain rules and regulations, to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the privilege of entering goods, wares, and merchandise in bond or placing them in bonded warehouses, and the withdrawal of the same for exportation to any place in British Columbia or the Northwest Territory, without payment of duty, is hereby granted to the Government of the Dominion of Canada in exchange for certain rights to be granted to our citizens.

The whole amendment is in the following language:

SEC. 13. (56) That under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the privilege of entering goods, wares, and merchandise in bond or of placing them in bonded warehouses at the port of Wrangell, in the District of Alaska, and of withdrawing the same for exportation to any place in British Columbia or the Northwest Territory without payment of duty, is hereby granted to the Government of the Dominion of Canada and its citizens or citizens of the United States whenever and so long as it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, who shall ascertain and declare the fact by proclamation, that no exclusive privilege of transporting through British Columbia or the Northwest Territory goods or passengers arriving from or destined for other ports in Alaska is granted to any person or corporation by the Government of the Dominion of Canada, and that the privilege has been duly accorded to responsible persons or corporations operating transportation lines in British Columbia or the Northwest Territory of making direct connection with transportation lines in Alaska, and that the Government of the Dominion of Canada has consented to and is allowing in behalf of the citizens of the United States the entry free of duty of all miners' outfits and a supply of provisions and clothing, the whole not exceeding in quantity 1,000 pounds for each citizen of the United States proposing to engage in mining in British Columbia or the Northwest Territory, and that the Government of the Dominion of Canada has removed all unequal restrictions as to the issuance of miners' licenses to citizens of the United States operating or intending to operate in British Columbia or the Northwest Territory, and that the fishing vessels of the United States having authority under the laws of the United States to touch and trade at any port or ports, place or places, in the British dominions of North America shall have the privilege of entering such port or ports, place or places, for the purpose of purchasing bait and all other supplies and outfits in the same manner and under the same regulations as may exist therein applicable to trading vessels of the most favored nations, and of transshipping their catch to be transported in bond through said dominions without payment of duties, in the same manner as other merchandise destined for the United States may be thus transported.

It will be seen that provision is made there with reference to the right of Americans in the Dominion of Canada with regard to miners' licenses.

Mr. PITNEY. But we do not undertake to enact that. It is simply a recital of facts.

Mr. LACEY. There is a provision, if the gentleman will observe, that when the Dominion of Canada shall remove the restrictions on our miners certain rights shall be accorded to them.

Mr. PITNEY. What rights?

Mr. LACEY. Certain rights are given to them——

Mr. PITNEY. What does the bill say?

Mr. LACEY. Why, that when the government of the Dominion of Canada has removed the unequal restriction as to the issuance of miners' licenses to our citizens, certain reciprocal provisions shall be adopted. It gives certain rights to the people in the Dominion of Canada in exchange for certain other rights accorded to our citizens. The whole provision has been boiled down and simplified; and we make a proposition to them that where the miners of the United States are accorded rights in Canada, the same rights shall be accorded to Canadian miners. In other words, we place them upon the same level with citizens of the United States under similar conditions, provided they shall do the same with us.

Canadians will obtain the same rights in Alaska that are accorded to our own citizens in the Klondike. This very necessary provision for the benefit of our miners should not be lost on any technicality. The provision in section 13 is simplified by reducing the proposition to the one item set out now in the new number 14.

Mr. PITNEY. I understand that the only proposition that the Senate put in as its amendment No. 56, which gave citizens of the British dominions rights in our territory, was this: That they should have the privilege of entering—such port or ports, place or places, for the purpose of purchasing bait and all other supplies and outfits in the same manner and under the same regulations as may exist therein applicable to trading vessels of the most favored nations, and of transshipping their catch to be transported in bond through said dominions without payment of duties, in the same manner as other merchandise destined for the United States may be thus transported.

That is a fishing privilege. That is a trading privilege. That is not a mining privilege, or anything like it. Now, the conference report proposes to put in a new provision that was not considered or adopted by the House, that was not considered or adopted by the Senate, and was not within the jurisdiction of the conferees.

Mr. LACEY. You have not read the part on which the jurisdiction of the conferees is based.

Mr. PITNEY. I read the part immediately following that which the gentleman from Iowa read.

Mr. LACEY. The bottom of page 20 and the top of page 21.

Mr. PITNEY. That recites the privileges which the Dominion has granted to citizens of the United States, but that does not state what privileges your conference report proposes to give to Canada. It is in the latter part of page 21 that that is to be found, and it is a fishing and trading right and not a mining right at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It also relates to the entry free of duty of all miners' outfits. That is at the bottom of page 20. I will state to the gentleman that this amendment 56 of the Senate was simply this: There were certain differences existing between the United States and Canada, among which was one relating to the letting in, duty free, of miners' outfits. The question was upon what terms miners should be permitted to enter British territory. Now, this amendment also included the fishermen. It was inserted there against our request. This, it seems, the House did not want. We have formulated section 14, which relates solely to the question upon what terms American miners can locate mines upon British territory. Now, it seems to me that is a very proper amendment to a land bill. British miners or Canadian miners are permitted to locate upon certain terms. We want the same terms to apply to American miners, and in order to do so we give them certain rights upon American territory in Alaska.

Mr. PITNEY. That is not the point. The gentleman from Colorado misses the point.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you object to that little amendment? Do you not think that amendment is very proper?

Mr. PITNEY. It may be or it may not be. What I object to is being called upon here to vote for a proposition, under the guise of a conference report, which is really a matter of legislation that has not been considered either in the Senate or in the House.

Mr. ELLIS. Why do you not make a point of order?

Mr. PITNEY. If it is subject to a point of order, I will make it now. But it may be too late to raise the point of order, and I presume it is. Gentlemen say this is a perfectly simple proposition, and they ask us to examine it, and the moment I get an opportunity to examine it I find a matter developed that is manifestly out of order, not provided by the rules of the House or the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you want time to examine it?

Mr. PITNEY. I have asked for a simple explanation. I have got a bewildering one—a partial explanation. I think it ought to go over. I think the members of the House ought to have further opportunity to look into it, and I think there ought to be a reprint of the bill showing how it will stand after the conference report is adopted. I ask unanimous consent that a print of that sort be ordered, so that we may vote intelligently upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent——

Mr. LACEY. Well, I object. We will have to get after these appropriation bills in the same way if that is to be done.

Mr. PITNEY. That is a fling that is entirely uncalled for and very unworthy of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. There is no fling about it. I simply tell you the facts. The gentleman speaks as though this was something unusual.

Mr. PITNEY. I think it is unusual to put new, important legislation into a bill, including matters not considered in either House. I think it is unusual to put that into a conference report.

Mr. DALZELL. It is not right.

Mr. LACEY. I object to letting it go over.

Mr. PITNEY. If the gentleman will not give that consent, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman will withhold that for a moment, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I appeared before the committee for the purpose of proposing an amendment looking to the protection of rights which would have already accrued there if there had been authority to grant rights; but it was made necessary by exigency, because of the need of tramroads and other transportation of which construction had begun. I saw the committee as to incorporating an amendment on that subject. Does the gentleman think the present provision covers the point that I mentioned to the committee?

Mr. LACEY. I think it does. It provides that whichever is first in time of survey or first in time of construction would be first in right, and these matters are left to the court, and I think that would be good law. Of course, in the absence of such a provision as that, all that they had done heretofore is wholly without law, and the rights would accrue only at the passage of the law. I think the provision there fully protects these parties connected with those roads, and the controversies go to the courts.

Mr. McMILLIN. I thank the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY] for his kindness. The gentleman has answered my inquiry.

Mr. PITNEY. I do not want to insist upon the motion to adjourn if I can get an agreement for a fair consideration of this conference report at a later day; but if the gentleman will not give his consent, I shall have to insist.

Mr. LACEY. I will ask the gentleman if he was here when this bill was presented on Monday and considered in the House?

Mr. PITNEY. I was not here at that time on Monday. I think I was here when the bill was presented to the House, but it was a very different proposition at that time from what it is now, and it was not in contemplation by any member of the House that these provisions were to be subsequently inserted. I will inquire of the Chair, pending the motion that the House adjourn, whether it is too late now to raise the point of order upon the conference report that it contains new matter not in dispute between the two Houses?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PITNEY. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 18, noes 34.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. LACEY. If no other gentleman desires any further explanation——

Mr. PITNEY. We have had no explanation yet. The gentleman from Iowa began by a simple statement as to what was the original purpose of the House bill and discussed the objections of certain gentlemen, but I have heard no explanation of the bill as it comes from the conference committee.

Mr. LACEY. The bill was fully discussed here on Monday, and I have undertaken to confine my remarks as far as possible to the new matter contained in the bill.

Mr. PITNEY. But here is a whole lot of new matter. I think the gentleman had better consent to take it up to-morrow, and have it printed, so we can understand it.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. DE VRIES. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LACEY. I withhold the demand for the present.

Mr. DE VRIES. I desire to ask the gentleman about amendment No. 20, on page 4, which places the power of regulating the railroad rates on railroads in Alaska in the Secretary of the Interior, without any power remaining in the Interstate Commerce Commission upon that matter.

Mr. LACEY. Without that provision the interstate-commerce law would apply. Let me say, in explanation of that, that was a matter which was in disagreement between the House and the Senate committee. The House committee preferred to leave this matter with the Interstate Commerce Commission. But, on the contrary, the Senate committee contended that inasmuch as the Secretary of the Interior had a full set of officials there, and as these railroads had to be built upon public lands, as practically all the Government management of the Territory or District of Alaska was under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, it would be safer to leave the regulation and fixing of the rates to be attended to by him; and on that point the House conferees yielded, leaving the matter to be settled by the Secretary of the Interior to prevent extortionate rates. The Interstate Commerce Commission is, of course, located in Washington, thousands of miles away, while the Secretary of the Interior has officials upon the spot, constantly in touch with the business of that Territory, and the conferees agreed to accept the views of the Senate in that respect.

Mr. DE VRIES. Then the effect of this provision will be to exclude the railroads of Alaska from the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. LACEY. The companies will fix the rates, and as to whether the rates are reasonable or unreasonable will be settled by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DE VRIES. He will be the final judge of the rates in Alaska?

Mr. LACEY. For the time being. It gives him the power to fix the rates. It was thought that would be safer to the people of Alaska than to have a tribunal thousands of miles away, and one that could not easily get there.

Mr. DE VRIES. If the Secretary of the Interior regulates the rates here, he is located in Washington the same as the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LACEY. But the Secretary of the Interior has men in Alaska under his control and agents that he can send anywhere, while the Interstate Commerce Commission does not have such authority as that.

Mr. DE VRIES. Is there anything to deprive the Interstate Commerce Commission of power over those rates?

Mr. PITNEY. It is a repealer pro tanto of the interstate-commerce law.

Mr. DE VRIES. That is my understanding, if they are to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That was taken into consideration when it was determined that the Secretary of the Interior should have the right to fix these rates. The question was as to the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to do so, and when it is remembered that this bill relates absolutely to Alaska, inasmuch as the Secretary of the Interior had the machinery there for the purposes of the United States and to determine what should be the rates, why we thought it could be done better by him than through the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McEWAN. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Is the only advantage to be derived from the provision that the Secretary of the Interior shall pass upon the rates rather than the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. LACEY. There are other advantages. There are means by which he can inquire concerning those rates.

Mr. McEWAN. In what way?

Mr. LACEY. By his agents in Alaska.

Mr. McEWAN. They would have to fix all the rates up there, and so gain the advantage of expedition, and then it will be done by the agents of the Secretary of the Interior. He would have to get a report from those agents and see what they were, or there would be no expedition whatever.

Mr. LACEY. The Interstate Commerce Commission has no agents that may travel and make reports the same as personal commissioners of the Secretary of the Interior. The commissioner visits various parts of the country in considering these questions. But there were other good reasons; and for the time being the Senate insisted that the Secretary should fix those rates and that it could be transferred to the Interstate Commerce Commission, if it was best, afterwards.

Mr. LOUD. It is very easy to repeal a bill!

Mr. LACEY. I move the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PITNEY) there were—ayes 59, noes 8.

Mr. PITNEY. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business appears to be closed.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9008, being the Post-Office appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9008) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. QUAY. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments of the committee be disposed of as they are reached.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and that course will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 2, line 16, before the word "dollars," to insert "three hundred thousand;" in the same line, after the word "Provided," to strike out:

That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to expend during the current fiscal year for clerk hire at stations or post-offices which may be established in lieu of post-offices discontinued by reason of consolidation with other offices, in addition to the amount provided above for clerk hire, a sum not exceeding the total compensation paid to postmasters at such post-offices during the same period of the present fiscal year, as shown by the records of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department: And provided further.

And on page 3, line 5, after the word "court," to strike out:

And provided further, That the Postmaster-General may in his discretion use of the above appropriation a sum not exceeding $500,000 in payment of clerks in third and fourth class post-offices.

So as to make the clause read:

For compensation to clerks in post-offices, $11,300,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ substitutes in the place of clerks subpœnaed as witnesses in the United States courts in cases arising under the United States laws, and to expend for the employment of such substitutes a sum equal to the compensation allowed the clerks during the time actually absent from duty attending court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 19, after the word

"quarterly," to strike out "for a term not exceeding ten years;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class post-offices, $1,700,000: Provided, That there shall not be allowed for the use of any third-class post-office for rent a sum in excess of $400, nor more than $60 for fuel and lights, in any one year: And provided further, That the Postmaster-General may, in the disbursement of this appropriation, apply a part thereof to the purpose of leasing premises for the use of post-offices of the first, second, and third classes at a reasonable annual rental, to be paid quarterly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 9, to strike out the word "and" after "thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Free-delivery service," on page 4, line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty-five" and insert "one hundred and ten;" and in line 24, before the word "four," to strike out "seven hundred and eighty-five thousand and" and insert "eight hundred and ten thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For incidental expenses, including twelve mechanics in the six largest cities, exclusively employed in repairing boxes and locks and erecting boxes, planting posts and pedestals, at $900 per annum; letter boxes, package boxes, posts, satchels, repairs, marine free-delivery service at Detroit, $110,000; in all, $13,810,400: Provided, That 10 per cent of the foregoing amounts for free-delivery service may be available interchangeably for expenditure on the objects named, but no one item of appropriation shall thereby be increased more than 10 per cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 3, to strike out:

For rural free delivery, including pay of carriers and horse-hire allowance, $300,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to expend during the current fiscal year for rural free-delivery service, in addition to the sum provided above for such service, a sum not to exceed an amount equal to the aggregate amount of the compensation paid to postmasters, for cost of mail transportation, star-route service, and mail-messenger service that may be discontinued by reason of the establishment of rural free-delivery service, during the same period of the present fiscal year, as shown by the records of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department: And provided further, That no portion of the above sum provided for the support of the rural free-delivery service shall be used for any other purpose than for payment of carriers and horse-hire allowance, and necessary equipments or mechanical appliance.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let that amendment be passed over for the present. I think the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] wishes to speak to it, and he is absent.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from North Carolina so stated yesterday. I have no objection to the amendment being passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over temporarily.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 10, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That no more than $200 of this appropriation shall be expended in any post-office for each 50,000 population or fraction thereof above 25,000.

And in line 13, after the word "Provided," to strike out "further;" so as to make the clause read:

For rental or purchase of canceling machines, $100,000: Provided, That one canceling machine may be placed in the post-office of any city.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 7, line 12, after the word "into," to insert "and no additional contracts shall be made unless hereafter authorized by law;" so as to make the clause read:

For transportation of mail by pneumatic tube or other similar devices, by purchase or otherwise, $225,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in extending such pneumatic service beyond the service for which contracts already are entered into, and no additional contracts shall be made unless hereafter authorized by law.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The amendment made by the committee to this provision in regard to pneumatic tubes, "that no additional contracts shall be made unless hereafter authorized by law," resulted largely from the fact that the pneumatic-tube service, which perhaps a year ago was a matter of experiment, has now been demonstrated to be of great utility, and while it does not reduce the cost of transporting the mail in the great cities, but on the contrary, under the present arrangement, increases the cost, it does increase the facility with which the mails are handled, and is undoubtedly a great convenience. However, while the question was not decided by the committee, it seems to me that under these circumstances it is the duty of the United States to purchase whatever of right individuals or any corporation may have to put in pneumatic tubes, the Government itself owning the service. In the past we have declined to do these things, and in the case of the telegraph allowed an institution to grow up in this country with a capitalization of $130,000,000, having to-day a plant that can be reproduced for less than $30,000,000.

Mr. QUAY. I call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota to the fact that in the eighth line provision is made for the purchase.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say in reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania that that exact provision was in the law last year and yet nothing was done; no effort was made on the part of the Post-Office Department to see whether we could purchase the right. On the contrary, additional contracts were made at excessive rates, and we have commenced the building up of another corporation depending largely upon the Government for its support, having millions of watered stock upon which the people of this country will be taxed to pay interest.

In New York to-day the plant which we use and which certainly would not cost more than four or five hundred thousand dollars, receives a compensation from the Government of the United States for its use which is equivalent to 3 per cent on $5,000,000. We have placed these tubes in three cities. When they are extended to all the cities of the country we shall find a company capitalized at $100,000,000 receiving from the Treasury of the United States, consequently by taxation from the people of the country, interest on that vast sum.

It seems to me that really the whole provision which increases the compensation in any way for this service ought to be stricken out; but certainly we ought not to enlarge this service a single dollar unless we can purchase whatever rights these people have, and own the plant and operate it in the interest of the Government and the people of the country. We have made mistakes enough in this direction. While I think the provision in the bill, inasmuch as it allows no additional contracts in the future, may be permitted to stand, I simply make this statement for the purpose of emphasizing the position of the Senate and the position of the Committee on Appropriations upon this question.

Mr. QUAY. I do not think there will be any objection to the insertion of an amendment, if the Senator from South Dakota thinks it proper, authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to ascertain whether a purchase can be made of the plant already in use or the right to use the plant of the company, and make report to Congress.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think that would be a very proper amendment.

Mr. HALE. There was an additional reason why the committee inserted the provision that no additional contracts should be made unless hereafter authorized by law. The committee discovered that although the only basis for action by the Post-Office Department was a single appropriation of $150,000 last year upon the appropriation bill, the Post-Office Department has gone on under that and made a contract, among others, for the city of New York, covering nearly $150,000—I think $147,000—for four years, and has bound the Government by a contract with these parties for four years at a rate almost absorbing the entire appropriation for the year in addition to what is done in other cities.

Mr. QUAY. I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that that contract was made conditional upon an annual appropriation.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. QUAY. It was made under the control of Congress.

Mr. HALE. Every contract, of course, must be so made; but the committee was rather restive under the contract that had been entered into with only a single annual appropriation, finding the Government bound practically by a contract covering four years. Therefore this provision was put in in order to notify the Department that it must only make contracts covered by appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, line 17, to increase the appropriation for railway post-office clerks from $8,350,000 to $8,467,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 23, after the word "the," to strike out "amount now received by" and insert "rate now paid to;" so as to make the clause read:

For inland transportation of mail by electric and cable cars, $300,000: Provided, That the rate of compensation to be paid per mile shall not exceed the rate now paid to companies performing said service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 11 on page 11.

Mr. COCKRELL. At the end of line 11, after the words "second-class mail matter," I move to insert:

And provided further, That hereafter the correspondence to any Government official or to any person upon official or departmental business authorized to be sent under frank shall not exceed 2 ounces in weight.

Mr. QUAY. I think I will not make the point of order on that amendment unless the Senate objects to the provision going into the bill, and we can take it into conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. It simply increases the weight of official matter from 1 ounce to 2 ounces. Repeatedly I and other Senators have had letters from the Departments sent back because they happened to weigh a little over an ounce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 12, line 11, after the word "inspectors," to strike out:

Including salaries of inspectors, and for per diem allowance to inspectors in the field while actually traveling on business of the Department.

Mr. QUAY. That amendment was inserted under a misapprehension, and I hope it will be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 12, line 14, to reduce the item for mail depredations and post-office inspectors from $430,000 to $400,000.

Mr. QUAY. I move to make the amount $415,000. That is the suggestion of the Department.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 13, line 24, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in all cases where undelivered matter of these classes is of obvious value, the sender, if known, shall be notified of the fact of nondelivery, and be given the opportunity of prepaying the return postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General shall prescribe, which regulations shall also comprehend instructions as to the prepayment of postage where the matter is to be remailed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 6, to insert:

SEC. 5. That a joint committee consisting of three members of the Senate and three members of the House, and in addition the two chairmen of the Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, shall be appointed by the Senate and House to investigate, during the coming recess of Congress, the question whether or not excessive prices are paid to the railroad companies for the transportation of the mails and as compensation for postal-car service, and all sources of revenue and all expenditures of the postal service, and rates of postage upon all postal matter, the expenses of said joint committee to be paid, one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House, upon vouchers to be approved by the two chairmen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. STEWART. If amendments are now in order, I desire to offer an amendment. At the bottom of page 6 there is the following provision:

For inland mail transportation, namely: Inland transportation by star routes, including temporary service to newly established offices, $5,095,000.

I move to add, after the word "dollars:"

Provided, That no part thereof shall be paid to any subcontractor, and the Postmaster-General shall require proof by affidavit or otherwise before making any payment to a contractor carrying the mail on any star route that the service was performed by himself and not by a subcontractor.

I should like to submit a word in explanation of the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator's amendment been printed?

Mr. STEWART. It was printed in substantially the same form. I have changed the wording of it somewhat.

Mr. HALE. Can the Senator give me a copy?

Mr. STEWART. What I hand the Senator is the substance of it.

A resolution was passed by the Senate calling upon the Postmaster-General for information on this subject, to which the Postmaster-General made a reply which shows a very bad condition of affairs, in my estimation. After repeating the resolution, the Postmaster-General says in reply:

In reply I would state that as the amount actually paid to contractors and subcontractors are shown by the records of the Auditor of the Post-Office Department, the resolution was forwarded to that officer for his consideration as to those points. The following is a copy of his letter relating thereto:

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th ultimo, transmitting a Senate resolution calling on the Postmaster-General to furnish certain information relative to star routes, which resolution is herewith returned pending further consideration of the matter.

"The resolution calls for the following information."

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. I will say to the Senator from Nevada that I think, after reflection upon the amendment he has offered, I will assent to taking it into conference on the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I will ask that the correspondence from the Department be printed in the RECORD in connection with it, as an explanation.

Mr. QUAY. To that there is no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 184, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.]

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 4, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the resolution of the Senate dated February 25, 1898, reading as follows:

"Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to inform the Senate what was the aggregate amount of money expended during the last calendar year for carrying the mails by use of horses or other animals over what are commonly known as star routes; how much of the money so expended was paid to the original contractors, and how much was paid to subcontractors; also, whether any original contractor obtained more than one contract which he subcontracted; if so, give the name and number of contracts which each person received and sublet, and the amount that he received from the Department over and above what was paid to the subcontractors."

In reply I would state that as the amount actually paid to contractors and subcontractors are shown by the records of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, the resolution was forwarded to that officer for his consideration as to those points. The following is a copy of his letter relating thereto:

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th ultimo, transmitting a Senate resolution calling on the Postmaster-General to furnish certain information relative to star routes, which resolution is herewith returned pending further consideration of the matter.

"The resolution calls for the following information:

"(1) The aggregate amount of money expended for mail service on star routes for last calendar year, showing how much was paid to the original contractors and how much to subcontractors.

"Settlements for the last quarter of the last calendar year will not be completed until March 31, 1898. As payments made to subcontractors are charged to the contractors, and no separate accounts are kept with subcontractors, it will be necessary, in order to ascertain the facts required, to go through the pay books, taking each route sublet, and add together the four quarterly payments. This would involve an immense amount of labor, as there are nearly 20,000 routes sublet.

"(2) Whether any original contractor obtained more than one contract which he subcontracted, etc.

"This information can be furnished by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

"(3) The amount each contractor received from the Department over and above what was paid to the subcontractors.

"To obtain this information will involve a vast amount of labor, far beyond the capacity of the clerical force in the division having charge of this kind of accounts to accomplish within any reasonable time, even by working over hours.

"It will thus be seen that to comply literally with the resolution we will be obliged to wait until after March 31 before commencing the work, and that we could not complete the same for several months unless provision was made for a considerable addition to our clerical force.

"Allow me to respectfully suggest that if the object of the resolution is to ascertain how much 'speculative contractors' receive over and above what is paid their subcontractors, a fair estimate could be obtained by taking 10 or 12 of those having the largest number of routes and showing a comparison between the annual pay of the contractors and that of the subcontractor on each route. Such a statement could be furnished with little labor or delay. It could be commenced immediately, as it would not require a complete settlement of accounts for the last calendar year.

"Very respectfully, yours,

"HENRY A. CASTLE, Auditor.

"Hon. W. S. SHALLENBERGER,
"Second Assistant Postmaster-General."

In reply to that part of the resolution reading as follows: "Also whether any original contractor obtained more than one contract which he subcontracted; if so, give the name and number of contracts which each person received and sublet," the following is submitted:

The VICE-PRESIDENT,
United States Senate.

[Senate Document No. 222, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.]

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1898.

SIR: In response to the resolution of the Senate of March 28, 1898, in relation to the response made by the Postmaster-General to the Senate resolution of February 25, 1898, relative to the pay of contractors and subcontractors for carrying the mails on what are known as star routes (as per Senate Document No. 184) and calling for the amount annually paid to certain specified contractors and the subcontract rate of pay on the routes sublet by said contractors, I have the honor to submit the following:

There are contracts now in force in the name of J. M. Boreing for carrying the mail on 618 star routes throughout the United States, on which his annual pay is $97,165.93. On 592 of these routes subcontracts have been filed in the Department, for which the contractor's annual pay is $88,619.31 and the subcontractors' pay is $79,611.75.

There are contracts now in force in the name of A. A. Call for carrying the mail on 764 star routes throughout the United States, on which his annual pay is $208,174.01. On 693 of these routes subcontracts have been filed in the Department, for which the contractor's annual pay is $178,562.67 and the subcontractors' pay is $158,156.94.

There are contracts now in force in the name of W. H. Steele for carrying the mail on 614 star routes throughont the United States, on which his annual pay is $229,173.28. On 578 of these routes subcontracts have been filed in the Department, for which the contractor's annual pay is $208,846.32 and the subcontractors' pay is $189,724.80.

There are contracts now in force in the name of L. H. Hansberger for carrying the mail on 814 star routes throughout the United States, on which his annual pay is $207,784.02. On 795 of these routes subcontracts have been filed in the Department, for which the contractor's annual pay is $202,552.49 and the subcontractors' pay is $177,258.23.

There are contracts now in force in the name of Evan Jones for carrying the mail on 282 star routes throughout the United States, on which his annual pay is $43,360.28. On 271 of these routes subcontracts have been filed in the Department, for which the contractor's annual pay is $41,633.68 and the subcontractors' pay is $37,912.83.

There are contracts now in force in the name of J. B. Anglin for carrying the mail on 411 star routes throughout the United States, on which his annual pay is $41,105.89. On 306 of these routes subcontracts have been filed in the Department, for which the contractor's annual pay is $35,360.09 and the subcontractors' pay is $30,419.18.

There are contracts now in force in the name of J. D. Franklin for carrying the mail on 319 star routes throughout the United States, on which his annual pay is $59,096.42. On 286 of these routes subcontracts have been filed in the Department, for which the contractor's annual pay is $51,061.37 and the subcontractors' pay is $45,618.28.

There are contracts now in force in the name of Gardner Cowles for carrying the mail on 874 star routes throughout the United States, on which his annual pay is $197,540.65. On 845 of these routes subcontracts have been filed in the Department, for which the contractor's annual pay is $187,322.13 and the subcontractor's pay is $162,262.84.

There are contracts now in force in the name of J. M. Slavens for carrying the mail on 167 star routes throughout the United States, on which his annual pay is $59,180.08. On 155 of these routes subcontracts have been filed in the Department, for which the contractor's annual pay is $54,997.58 and the subcontractor's pay is $51,307.91.

There are contracts now in force in the name of F. S. Smith for carrying the mail on 364 star routes throughout the United States, on which his annual pay is $75,457.94. On 347 of these routes subcontracts have been filed in the Department, for which the contractor's annual pay is $70,653.97 and the subcontractor's pay is $61,993.23.

There are contracts now in force in the name of F. E. Means for carrying the mail on 737 star routes throughout the United States, on which his annual pay is $153,264.41. On 723 of these routes subcontracts have been filed in the Department, for which the contractor's annual pay is $151,118 and the subcontractor's pay is $136,552.60.

There are contracts now in force in the name of W. L. White for carrying the mail on 130 star routes throughout the United States, on which his annual pay is $20,564.11. On 124 of these routes subcontracts have been filed in the Department, for which the contractor's annual pay is $19,058.31 and the subcontractor's pay is $16,791.62.

To recapitulate, the total number of contracts for service in the names of these twelve contractors is 6,080, on which the aggregate annual pay is $1,391,874.02. Of these, subcontracts have been filed in the Department for 5,775 routes, on which the annual contract pay is $1,289,756.52, and the subcontract pay is $1,147,610.60, the excess of the contract pay over the subcontract pay for those routes on which subcontracts have been filed in the Department being $142,145.92 per annum.

Very respectfully,

JAS. A. GARY,
Postmaster-General.

The VICE-PRESIDENT,
United States Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. Allow me to inquire what was done just at that moment. My attention was diverted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Nevada was agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. What was the matter that was agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it from the desk.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "dollars," in line 2, page 7, the following proviso:

Provided, That no part thereof shall be paid to any subcontractor; and the Postmaster-General shall require proof by affidavit or otherwise before making any payment to a contractor carrying the mail on any star route that the service was performed by himself and not by a subcontractor.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Nevada will have an effect which I think he does not contemplate and one which I think has not been considered by those gentlemen who have offered their support to it. It happens that I made an inquiry into this business a good many years ago. At that time I happened to be chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the House, and I instituted, I believe, the first inquiry into what were called the star-route frauds.

I then attempted to do exactly what is attempted by this amendment, but upon consultation with the authorities of the Post-Office Department it was discovered that the field of competition in the business would be so narrowed that the effect would be to very much increase the cost of the service without in any manner improving its efficiency; and I think that will be the effect of this amendment if it becomes a law.

I have had considerable experience with post-office affairs, and I think I can say, and I think the postal authorities will bear me out in the statement, if this amendment is adopted the field of competition will be so reduced and so narrowed that the cost will be very much increased without in any manner increasing the efficiency of the service.

It is perhaps a very desirable thing that the local mails shall be carried by local contractors, but the local contractors can at any time have that privilege by simply underbidding everybody else. As the Senate very well understands, the bids that are made for these routes are first advertised for. The bids are all sealed; at a certain hour on a certain day they are opened; and no bid is permitted to be received after the opening has been begun.

The contractors who do the thing by wholesale here, the syndicate, put in their bids with a pretty full knowledge of what was the preceding cost of carrying the mail. They know exactly what they are doing, while the local bidder imagines that he and his neighbors are the only bidders, and he wants to make a considerable profit. The result is that the contracts go into the hands of the syndicate, who sublet them to these very same local bidders, who are not willing to bid low enough in the beginning.

I have no desire whatever to influence the action of the Senate on this matter, except to give what I consider genuine information on that point. For my part, I do not care to promote the fortunes of the contractors, or the subcontractors, or the local contractors, or the syndicate, but we are here to secure the highest possible efficiency in the postal service, and to get it at the lowest rate we can, and under the law as it stands to-day I believe we are doing that.

We have an efficient postal service in the star routes as well as otherwise, and we are getting it at a very low rate. The very fact that the local bidders do not get these contracts shows that we are getting the service cheaply.

I do not care anything about the amendment, but that is the fact, and a year's experience will demonstrate fully that under this amendment, if it becomes a part of the postal law of the country, the service on the star routes will be performed at a largely increased price and at the same time with doubtful efficiency.

Mr. STEWART. If there is to be a supervision of these contracts, I do not propose to pay to outsiders a large amount of money for doing it. I have prepared a further addition to the amendment, which is as follows:

Provided further, That the Postmaster-General may refuse to accept bids which he deems excessive, and readvertise the routes until he can procure the service for a reasonable compensation.

I ask that that be adopted in addition to the amendment which I have already offered, so as to throw this duty upon the Postmaster-General.

Before that is acted upon, however, I want to call attention to the fact that the Postmaster-General says it would be too expensive to give full details of these routes, but says if we pick out ten or twelve of them they will give the result. The Senate passed a resolution naming twelve of them. There were three or four hundred cases, and the Postmaster-General gives the details in ten or twelve cases, and then he says:

To recapitulate, the total number of contracts for service in the names of these twelve contractors is 6,080, on which the aggregate annual pay is $1,391,874.02. Of these, subcontracts have been filed in the Department for 5,775 routes, on which the annual contract pay is $1,289,756.52, and the subcontract pay is $1,147,610.60, the excess of the contract pay over the subcontract pay for those routes on which subcontracts have been filed in the Department being $142,145.92 per annum.

The go-between has secured over $142,000 on the few contracts which the Postmaster-General has picked out and sent to us. I have traveled by stage over two or three States and Territories considerably during the last vacation on the star routes, and I know the distressed condition of the service. I have also learned something of it by correspondence. All the while, no matter what bids the local bidders put in, the syndicate will bid a little lower. How one man can have four or five hundred contracts, and get the contracts regularly, I do not know. There has not been a contract let in all that region for years to the persons who perform the service; but the middlemen have made fortunes by the business. They must have some means of ascertaining the amount of other bids, which is not legitimate. The evidence of it is abundant. If the bids which are made are excessive, the Postmaster-General should refuse to let contracts in all such cases. He knows what they ought to be. Let him readvertise and let there be a supervision by officers of the Department, not a supervision by go-betweens, who are receiving hundreds of thousands of dollars every year from the Government for supervising this service.

Mr. WILSON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. I call to mind right now a bid for carrying the mails, where the local bidder bid $2,500, and some one here in Washington bid $625. Now, what would be the result if we adopt the Senator's amendment? Would it not be necessary for us to more than double the appropriations for this service?

Mr. STEWART. Not at all. I have prepared a further amendment to cover that point.

Mr. WILSON. In a case of that kind would not the local bidder very largely increase his bid? He thinks the service is worth more, but on account of the competition from the class of people here—I do not know what you call them—he is obliged to put in his bid at reduced rate, in order that he may get the contract in the first place.

Mr. STEWART. If the Postmaster-General can not make contracts directly without paying hundreds of thousands of dollars for superintendence, then we had better have the Post-Office Department abolished. I think the Postmaster-General ought to exercise his power and jurisdiction to refuse to accept any excessive bids. He knows what they are, and he knows just as well as the contractors what they ought to be. The balance of my amendment will place it in his power to supervise the matter and that ought to be done.

Mr. WILSON. Has there not been a constant and continued reduction of star-route appropriations and of the rate for carrying the mails during the last few years?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; but there has been no reduction in the amount of money which the middlemen have been receiving. Why should they be here and have opportunities to know as to these matters and to get large commissions? We should have that done by the officials, who should hold these contractors down.

I know of many instances where the service is so badly performed that the people do not get their mail regularly, and constant complaints are made. The contractors take advantage of the local men. They get their horses; they get their supplies; they get their living; and they make the local contractors carry the mail for practically nothing. It is very oppressive. It seems to me the Government should deal directly with the local contractors.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator says he knows of places where there is bad service.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is not that the fault of the local postmaster in not reporting it?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. The contractors are under penalties for every time the mail is not delivered at a given hour, and a deduction is made. If the service is not in accordance with the requirements of the law, it is because the local postmasters do not perform their duty and report it, for there is a fine attached in every one of these cases, and those fines have frequently driven contractors out of the service because the subcontractors did not fulfill the contracts, and they were made to suffer for it.

Mr. STEWART. The postmasters make their reports; but there is a controversy going on all over my State constantly between the contractors and the postmasters as to those reports. The postmasters have the right to make reports; but what I want to know is why is it necessary to pay these large subsidies to middlemen to run the Post-Office Department and see that we have proper contracts?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator talks about subsidies. Let me give him an instance. In one of the counties in Missouri a number of letters were written to me some years ago, appealing to me not to let a certain man have a contract for a mail route beginning at that point, on the ground that he had found that a poor, worthy, and deserving man who wanted the contract had put in a bid at a fixed sum, and this man had gone in and bid $10 below him, and the people there did not think the Post-Office Department ought to encourage such conduct as that. I went to the Post-Office Department to look into the matter, and there I found, I think it was, thirteen different bids; and this man's bid, that they wanted me to make the Post-Office Department accept, was from $75 to $100 higher than the lowest bid.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I am indifferent to the insertion of this amendment. In fact, I am rather favorable to it. If it is the sense of the Senate that it should go into the bill, I am ready to accept it and take it into conference and have it there considered. I am frank to say it has not been considered by the Committee on Appropriations nor by myself, having charge of this bill; but if there is a division of sentiment about it, it is at the mercy of any Senator who wishes to make a point of order. I will not make it if others do not; but if the discussion is to continue, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] or the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] can make the point of order on the amendment. It is general legislation, and therefore against the rule.

Mr. STEWART. I wish the Senator would let the amendment which I last sent to the Chair be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is to add to the amendment previously adopted the following:

Provided further, That the Postmaster-General may refuse to accept bids which he deems excessive, and readvertise routes until he can procure the service for a reasonable compensation.

Mr. MONEY. I fear that the statement made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] will lead the Senate to a misapprehension of the facts. Of course he did not intend to do that; but as to the amount of money which he says is paid to these middlemen, I deprecate that fact as much as he possibly can. I would prefer to see the man who carries the mail get the whole compensation; but what the Senator should show to the Senate is what would it cost the Government if the plan suggested by him should be adopted. I can tell him a simple way to do that. If he would take the next lowest bids on all these routes to the bids that procured the job, and then see how much the Government has saved by syndicate bidding, as he calls it, then he would know exactly how much we shall have to pay if this system is broken up in the way the Senator desires.

It is very true that there is sometimes bad service, and there will be under any possible system, but in that case not only is the remedy mentioned by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] available, but there is a further remedy, and that is that the bids of contractors who are what is called in the Department blacklisted shall thereafter have no attention paid to them at all. So there are two ways of compelling the contractor to render efficient and faithful service to the Government upon these several routes.

I have no desire in the world to press any point I have made against the amendment, except to inform the Senate that the system which is proposed by the Senator from Nevada will certainly very much increase the cost of the service. I know by personal experience and knowledge of these facts that very frequently, you may say in at least half the cases, the subcontractors are men who themselves have made bids upon these several routes and their bids were rejected because they were too high, and then they came in and did the work below the price of the syndicate bidder.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has the Senator any information or would he be willing to express an opinion from his experience in the Post-Office Department as to whether there is not collusion on the part of those who open these bids and the syndicate bidders so as to let the syndicate come just below the lowest local bidder?

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I have no idea that there is any such collusion in the Department. I know that a great many people think so, but I have been very careful in my investigation of that Department for a number of years, and I do not believe that the thing is possible; I do not believe it exists, nor do I believe it is possible.

I believe that the administration of the Post-Office Department is as honestly conducted as it is possible for any Department to be administered where there are so many employees. As a matter of fact, the bids are opened at 12 o'clock on a given day, and no bid is received after the first bid is opened. After that hour all other bids are refused and are not examined, not even opened, and the lowest bidder gets the contract, unless that man is a blacklisted bidder, or unless he fails to make good the bond which is required, and in such cases the next lowest bidder is awarded the contract. In my opinion there is no collusion or fraud.

The men who make what are called professional bids, and who secure contracts over the local bidders, are men who study the business, while it is merely an occasional enterprise with the local bidders; it is not a regular thing. These syndicates, however, make this the business of their lives. I had sent to me from every quarter of the country, a good many years ago, the circulars which they send all over the United States in order to obtain information by correspondence as to the price of horses, the price of vehicles, the price of oats, corn, forage, etc., before they will undertake to bid at all.

They know exactly what the service is going to cost them, and, of course, in that way they have an advantage in bidding over the local bidders. Sometimes they lose, as I know. I know it to be a fact, for I have examined it in my own county where a man wrote to me that he had bid $150 on a mail route for which his neighbor had been getting $250. I examined the matter and found that the syndicate had bid $100, and so secured the contract. The syndicate have these losses, but on the average they make very large gains; they make large sums of money. I do not attempt to dispute that; but I simply want the facts to be known to the Senate, that when you adopt this amendment you will increase the cost of carrying your mails through the country, and I do not believe that you will add to the efficiency of the mail service.

The local contractors, as I believe, in half the cases carry the mails under a lower bid generally than that of the syndicate which secured the award. It would be very desirable, I think, if the money could be paid to the local contractors, and if they could perform the service without the intervention of middlemen. I agree with the Senator from Nevada that the inspection and regulation of the Department ought to protect the Government, and, in my opinion, it is protecting the Government to-day; but it is not protecting these other fellows from their contracts with the middlemen.

Mr. STEWART. You can go through that whole region of the West and tell half a mile off whether the service is being performed by the original bidder or whether it is sublet. That can be told on account of the poor horses, the miserable rigs, and the general starvation condition of the outfit. The condition they are in shows whether the contractor gets all the money or whether somebody else gets a part of it.

Mr. MONEY. I, of course, have nothing to say about the condition of the service in the West or in my own State, but I know that the Post-Office Department has a fixed schedule for the arrival and departure of every mail. The mails are required to start and arrive at a given hour and minute, and if they do not start and if they do not arrive at their destination at the time fixed, it is reported by the postmaster and a fine is imposed on the contractor. It is the duty of the contractor, as well as his interest, to see that his subcontractor faithfully performs the contract.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Mississippi explain to me how it is that the syndicate man gets the job in ninety-nine out of one hundred cases, even though the local bidder makes a lower bid than he?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MONEY. Let me answer the Senator from South Carolina. In the first place, the syndicate contractors do not get all the contracts. The syndicate bidders may bid for 10,000 contracts and get 400. They cover the whole country with their inquiries and with their bids. There is no telling how many routes they bid for, and you can not form an idea from the number of contracts awarded to them. They do not get by any means all the contracts for which they bid. I wish we could get rid of them and at the same time save money to the Government.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator, as I have had some experience in this question. For the last thirty-five or forty years I have seen the working of this system. If these syndicates knew that they had to carry out the contracts, they would not bid on them; they would quit; and they ought to quit, for it is a mere speculation. That being the case, the man who could carry on the work in proper style, in a proper manner, in a particular locality, would bid; and it is claimed that only a few of them now bid.

There has not been a syndicate that has been bidding since I have been acquainted with public affairs and with this system of doing business that would pretend to carry out all the contracts they would get. They would forfeit them. They would have to do it. They would be driven out of every community, and then the local competition would keep the service within bounds and you would get a decent service. The whole country West has been for years cursed with these syndicate bidders, and they were the people who got us into the star-route scandal. It came from that class of bidders.

Mr. MONEY. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. TELLER. Just as the Senator says, the people who have the necessary means and who are willing to enter into these contracts ought not to be required to do so below the cost of the service, and the Government ought not to ask them to do the work for less than they can afford to do it. The result is a horrible service. It is true the Postmaster-General can ruin all these people if he will, but he never does that. Their neighbors do not want him to do that, because they sympathize with the contractors, and they know the contractors have been compelled to take the contracts at such a rate that they can not make anything out of them. Frequently a contractor runs behind, and he is ruined. The people do not want the postmasters to say that if the mail is five or ten minutes or an hour late the contractor shall be ruined.

Public opinion does not support that, and it is never done. The public patronize the contractor in the way of using his stage. He is helped out in his stage line by his mail contract, and the owners of many of the lines could not afford to run them unless they had a mail contract. We should eliminate this speculative syndicate, which has no business to bid for work which it does not intend to perform. That is the evil we want to reach, and it can be reached by simply saying that the man who makes a successful bid must carry out the contract, and if he does not the Government will select some other man to do the work.

Mr. MONEY. In reply to my friend the Senator from Colorado, I desire to say that what he says about this matter strongly corroborates what I have myself said, that the tendency of the amendment is to increase the cost of the service.

Mr. TELLER. I say it will not increase the cost.

Mr. MONEY. Then I will ask the Senator why it is that the local bidder does not get the contract?

Mr. TELLER. The people in a community will not bid any more than the people who now secure the contracts; but hundreds of people living in a community will not bid against the syndicate.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is an idea among the people in my section of the country that they could not get anything even if they did bid.

Mr. TELLER. The public sentiment in all the Western country, so far as I know—and I know a pretty extensive portion of it—is that it is no use for a man to bid against the syndicate. They only bid as a matter of form more than anything else, and a great many will not bid at all.

I repeat, that the adoption of the amendment will not increase the cost, in my judgment. The Government will pay to the people in the various communities what it now pays to the syndicate, and even less. I believe we could secure good service for even less, because then we could get the people to bid. They know what the service ought to cost, and what it will cost them to run a reasonably accommodating and proper service for the people as well as for the Government—I mean stage lines as well as mail lines. The people of the country desire that the Government should help out the stage lines, and the stage lines accommodate the people as well as the Government.

Mr. MONEY. If the object of the postal bill is to furnish means of transportation for citizens of the several States and Territories, that is one thing; but if it is simply to secure the most economical administration of postal affairs, that is another matter.

Mr. TELLER. There are plenty of places where the mail could not be carried for twice what it is now carried if it were not carried in connection with a passenger line.

Mr. MONEY. That may be.

Mr. TELLER. And the Government gets the advantage of that.

Mr. MONEY. That is very true; but I want to say in reply to the Senator, that if he will examine the bids that come into the Post-Office Department, he will find there is not a single one of these routes where there is not from a dozen to two, three, or four dozen bidders, and they are generally from the various localities. Of course, the professional bidders bid against one another also.

Mr. WILSON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. Supposing, which is often the case, that one of these syndicates secures a contract and then sublets it, which is nearly always the case——

Mr. MONEY. Nearly always the case.

Mr. WILSON. Is there any authority in the law to authorize the Postmaster-General to see that the subcontractor secures his pay?

Mr. MONEY. Oh, yes; the subcontractor immediately files his subcontract with the Postmaster-General, and every dollar he is entitled to goes to him.

Mr. WILSON. Is not the Senator from Mississippi mistaken about that.

Mr. MONEY. No, sir; I am not. I am correct about it. The subcontractor, if he chooses to file his contract, draws every dollar to which he is entitled. If he does not choose to file his contract, then he is at the mercy of the contractor.

Mr. WILSON. May I ask the Senator does the same rule apply to the steamboat service as well as to the star-route service?

Mr. MONEY. I do not know about that. I think the steamboats get paid for the service which they perform.

I simply desire to say that I do not want to sit down until I add that I sympathize with the object sought by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]. I have had letters and appeals to me often and often, and I do not know that I am prepared to say that I shall not vote for the amendment of the Senator from Nevada; but I simply want to give the Senate notice that events will justify the statement I now make, that if the amendment becomes part of the law, it will very largely increase the cost of carrying the mails.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to say a word or two in connection with this amendment. I have had great difficulty in hearing what other Senators have said, as two, three, or four have been speaking at the same time. Therefore what I say may be only a repetition of what may have been well said by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and, not to forget him, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. President, I hope the point of order will not be made upon this amendment. I hope the committee will allow it to go into the bill, and that the conference committee will consider whether they can consistently with the protection of the rights of the Government do something to break up the evil which exists in consequence of what the Senator from South Carolina so felicitously called "syndicate bids."

If the question was only one with the bidders of carrying the United States mail, I should not complain. I should not complain, however low the bids might be, of these syndicate bidders or of these professional bidders, because the Government would get the benefit of the lowest price, and the Postmaster-General would see to it that the successful bidders performed their contracts. But here is the precise evil which I do think ought to be corrected: In the case of a large portion of those star-route contracts the mail is carried by a stage driver. He has his little mail route; he has his horses and his wagons, and does a little express business, and he carries passengers.

Perhaps, for illustration, his gross receipts may be a thousand dollars a year, and he receives for carrying the mails only $200 a year. If that stage driver is deprived of his mail pay, it is a serious blow to him, and in most cases the amount he is receiving, as in the case I suppose, $200, for carrying the mail, perhaps a thousand dollars for other business, is no more than fair compensation for carrying the mails. But there comes along one of these professional bidders who knows that if he can take the $200 mail contract away from this little contractor he can destroy his stage route. If he takes it away absolutely, he can destroy the profits of his staging business.

He learns that the stage driver has been in the habit of carrying the mail for $200 a year, and he bids $190, which is $10 less; and then he blackmails the owner of the stage route, who, rather than lose the mail contract, rather than give up his business, rather than sell his horses and his wagons and retire from a business in which he has been accustomed to earn a livelihood, agrees with this professional bidder to carry the mails for $100. The professional bidder puts $90 in his pocket and goes off. In brief, that is the system which prevails all over the star-route country. From one end of the United States to the other where the mails are carried by horses, wagons, and stages this system of professional bidding or syndicate bidding prevails. There ought to be some way of breaking it up.

The proposition of the Senator from Nevada is a very simple one, that in every case the bidder shall either enter into the contract or make default and pay penalty, or, if he makes his contract, that he shall fulfill it himself, by himself or his direct employees, and he shall not be allowed to make subcontracts, which are generally made with bidders of this class, honest men engaged in the transaction of a legitimate business. Mr. President, that is the remedy proposed by the Senator from Nevada. I think it is a good one. There may be devised some other or better method of striking a blow at this evil which prevails in the public service, not so great as some other evils which ought to be stricken down, but still a clear, distinct evil which stands out in the administration of the Post-Office Department.

I think the Senator from Pennsylvania, who at first said that he would not make the point of order on the amendment—and I do not understand that he has made the point of order on the amendment—ought to let it go into the bill, and then there should be brought to bear upon it all the wisdom and skill which the conference committee can give to the labors upon which they are about to enter, to find some solution of this question, which is of comparatively small consequence to us here, but is of a great deal of consequence to many an honest, hard-working stage driver in some part of this great country of ours.

Mr. QUAY. I have already stated that I have no objection to taking this amendment into conference, and I am ready to accept it if the Senate is ready to come to a decision upon it. I do not want, however, to obstruct the passage of this bill by an interminable discussion of an item which was not passed upon by the committee, and I will make the point of order if the discussion is to continue further.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see the Senate is disposed to accept the amendment. I simply desire to say that it will cost the Government not less than $5,000,000 more than it does now.

Mr. SPOONER. How is that?

Mr. COCKRELL. It will result, in my judgment, in costing the Government not less than $5,000,000 more than it costs it now.

Mr. TELLER. In my judgment, if the Department will take the proper steps, the adoption of this amendment will save the Government money.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will carefully compare the two statements in conference, the one made by the Senator from Missouri, that it will cost $5,000,000 more, and the other, the statement of the Senator from Colorado, that it will save money to the Government, and try to work out that exact truth for which the Senator from Pennsylvania is continually seeking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Chair will again put the question on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. The clause in relation to rural free delivery was passed over, and it may be taken up now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Appropriations report an amendment, to strike out, on page 5, after line 3, the following:

For rural free delivery, including pay of carriers and horse-hire allowance, $300,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to expend during the current fiscal year for rural free-delivery service, in addition to the sum provided above for such service, a sum not to exceed an amount equal to the aggregate amount of the compensation paid to postmasters, for cost of mail transportation, star-route service, and mail messenger service that may be discontinued by reason of the establishment of rural free-delivery service, during the same period of the present fiscal year, as shown by the records of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department: And provided further, That no portion of the above sum provided for the support of the rural free-delivery service shall be used for any other purpose than for payment of carriers and horse-hire allowance, and necessary equipments or mechanical appliance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations striking out the language which has been read.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, with respect to rural free delivery, as is well understood by the Senate, the scheme of the Post-Office Department is to bring the mails to every individual in the country—in cities, towns, and rural districts—to his door as nearly as possible. In the last appropriation act—I think it was in the last one—an appropriation of $50,000 was made for this experiment. It was regarded then as purely experimental and the proposition of doubtful propriety. That money was expended, and expended in a way that produced results that were satisfactory to the Department, and I understand they recommend the continuance of the system.

When the present bill was introduced in another branch of Congress an appropriation of $150,000 was conveyed for the purposes of rural free delivery, and the language of the previous act, indicating the opinion of Congress that it was a mere experiment, was stricken out, so that it became, as introduced and passed in that branch, practically an established item of post-office expenditure. On the floor this appropriation was increased to $300,000, and was afterwards passed at that figure; and it came to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate in the form in which it is found in the lines that are proposed to be stricken out on page 5 of the bill—an absolute appropriation of $300,000, with the provisos which are found appended, the first proviso amounting to a considerable increase of the $300,000 appropriation.

The subcommittee in charge of the bill, while of the opinion that the adoption of rural free delivery as a permanent part of the Post-Office establishment would increase the expenditures on account of that Department to the extent of fifteen or sixteen million dollars per annum, still did not feel disposed to discontinue the experiment and strike out the provision which came from the House. The provisos were stricken out; the word "experimental" was inserted between "for" and "rural," in the fourth line of the fifth page, to reduce it to a continuing experiment, instead of an established factor in our legislation; and the appropriation of $300,000 was reduced to $200,000, which I thought at the time was a wise disposition of it.

Afterwards, in full committee—and I suppose I am not violating any rule of the Senate in stating this—the subcommittee was overruled and the entire appropriation was stricken out on the ground that it was certainly fastening upon the Post-Office Department and upon the country an expense which in the future would be more than the country would be able to bear.

Whether or not the House provision shall be sustained or the provisions of the Senate subcommittee or of the Senate Committee on Appropriations is a question for the Senate. It was my own judgment that the proposition of the subcommittee, continuing the experiment at a reduced appropriation, was the proper one.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, in the spirit of honorable compromise, in order to expedite the passage of this bill, for my part I should have no objection to inserting the word "experimental" before "rural free," so as to read "for experimental rural free delivery," striking out the words "including pay of carriers and horse-hire allowance;" retaining the sum "$300,000" and striking out all of the rest of the paragraph. That would then throw into conference the question of the conditions and limitations which ought to be imposed upon the expenditure of the $300,000. But I am very much opposed to the striking out of this whole provision. I am very much opposed to a refusal by the present Congress to expend this $300,000 another year in continuing the experiment as to rural free delivery.

This bill carries in ten lines $80,500,000 to be paid to the railroads of this country. There has been great complaint about those payments to the railroads. It is constantly asserted that the payments are too large; that when the mails are weighed for the purpose of determining the amount of money to be paid to the railroads the mails during the period of the weighing are artificially enlarged. There are those who have investigated this subject who say that $20,000,000 is enough to pay the railroads of the country for the transportation upon the cars instead of the $30,500,000 that is proposed to be appropriated by the pending bill. The Committee on Appropriations have very wisely made provision for investigating the subject of the pay of railroads for transporting the mails, and before this bill is passed the subject will be discussed by other Senators. But there is that enormous amount paid to the railroads of this country in addition to the large sums paid for star-route service.

Now, here is a proposition made by the Senate committee to refuse to go any further with this little boon, if you may call it such, this little convenience, that is being extended to the farmers and the inhabitants of the rural regions in almost every section of this great country of ours. The report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Heath, dated October 12, 1897, discusses the subject of rural free delivery and gives several pages to its exposition. I will read only one paragraph:

> The general results obtained have been so satisfactory as to suggest the feasibility of making rural delivery a permanent feature of postal administration in the United States; not immediately, or in all districts at once, but in some gradual and gradated form, the character of which might be regulated by the tenor of the reports herewith presented as to the experimental service.

I also have in my hand a letter from Mr. Heath, dated May 5, 1898, addressed to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which contains this paragraph:

> The tests of rural free delivery which have been conducted for almost two years and recent exhaustive investigations convince the Department that the service is feasible and can be successfully conducted with a reasonable net cost to the Government. I inclose you a copy of my latest report, in which the question is fully canvassed. I also inclose a memorandum which may be of service to you.

I ask that the letter and the memorandum may be inserted at the close of my present remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the papers will be inserted in the RECORD.

[See Appendix.]

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not heard any reason assigned for not continuing this experiment. I have not heard of any serious aspersion upon the experiments which have been hitherto conducted. I know there have come to me from various sections of the country and to other members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads many expressions of satisfaction with the experiment, many expressions of a desire that the experimental service shall be continued and enlarged. This question will have to be met at some time, whether or not we shall do as many other countries do—undertake the carrying of the mails to the doors of the houses of the rural population of our country. We expend for letter carriers in the cities over $13,000,000, as will be seen by the following clause of the bill:

> Free delivery service: For pay of letter carriers in offices already established, and for substitute letter carriers and for temporary carriers at summer resorts, holiday and election service, $13,085,400.

We spend $13,085,400 in the cities of this country, and it seems that we spend some of it at the summer resorts of the country. The Senator from Pennsylvania, with his usual accuracy, has figured it out to a precise sum—$13,085,400—and at the same time, in obedience to the direction of a majority of his committee, he insists upon striking down this comparatively little appropriation of $300,000 for the rural sections of this country, the people in which are quite as anxious to get their newspapers and their letters delivered at their doors as are the inhabitants of our great cities and of the summer resorts.

I prefer to be persuasive rather than condemnatory. So I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will feel authorized in behalf of his committee to accept my suggestion of a compromise of this matter and let the appropriation remain in—$300,000—and strike out all the conditions and limitations, and let those be adjusted according to the judgment of the conference committee. I have already stated, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] reminds me, that there will be no objection to inserting the word "experimental" before the words "rural free delivery," so as to show that this whole business is still experimental; and I hope this arrangement may be made.

APPENDIX.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM,
Washington, May 5, 1898.

SIR: I notice that the H. R. 9008, an act "making appropriations for the service of Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899," has been reported by the Appropriation Committee with the item for rural free delivery stricken out.

The tests of rural free delivery, which have been conducted for almost two years, and recent exhaustive investigations convince the Department that the service is feasible and can be successfully conducted with a reasonable net cost to the Government. I inclose you a copy of my latest report, in which the question is fully canvassed. I also inclose a memorandum which may be of service to you.

I hope that the item may be restored as it came from the House, excepting the proviso appearing on page 5, commencing in line 15 and running to and including line 20, as follows:

"And provided further, That no portion of the above sum provided for the support of the rural free-delivery service shall be used for any other purpose than for the payment of carriers and horse-hire allowance and necessary equipments or mechanical appliance."

The item ought to be made to read:

"For rural free delivery, $300,000."

This would leave the Postmaster-General that full discretion and latitude in its disbursement which are necessary in the inauguration of a new service. Should the Senate desire, however, to place a limitation on the manner in which the money shall be disbursed, I suggest the following amendment, to be inserted after the $300,000, in line 5, page 5:

"Provided, That the Postmaster-General may use not to exceed 15 per cent of the above sum for the inauguration and supervision of the service, and for necessary supplies: And provided further, That the persons employed to inaugurate and supervise the service shall be paid salaries and per diems not in excess of those paid post-office inspectors."

Very respectfully,

PERRY S. HEATH,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. E. O. WOLCOTT,
Chairman Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads,
United States Senate.

MEMORANDUM.

With an appropriation of only $50,000 available for the purposes of rural free delivery, but coupled with a proviso that this amount should be expended in the discretion of the Postmaster-General for the establishment of an experimental service, the Department has been able to extend rural free delivery over 150 routes, branching out from 70 post-offices, located in 30 States and Territories.

This service has been maintained without a deficiency, and successfully so in every delivery except one, and there the service was discontinued on the 1st of April last.

The distribution of the service has been as follows:

One route each in the State of Alabama, Territory of Arizona, and States of Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Kansas, Louisiana, Missouri, Nebraska, North Carolina, Oregon, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin.

Two routes each in the States of California, Illinois, Kentucky, Maryland, and Vermont.

Three routes each in the States of Michigan and Pennsylvania.

Four routes each in the States of New York, Ohio, Tennessee, and West Virginia.

Five routes in Maine and Massachusetts.

Eight routes in Indiana.

A number of new routes have been surveyed by special agents of the Department, paid out of the appropriation, in the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Michigan, Ohio, Vermont, New York, and elsewhere, and are ready to go into effect on the 1st of July next, provided Congress should so authorize. In quite a number of these routes it is found that the service can be established without any increased charge on the postal revenues, taken as a whole, by the discontinuance of star routes and fourth-class post-offices which will be rendered unnecessary by the proposed rural service. It has been the aim of the Department to put the service in operation as far as practicable:

First, in thickly settled farming communities, where the amount of mail matter handled will render the service self-supporting.

Second, in such districts where existing service, less efficient than rural delivery, and far less satisfactory to the people, but costing as much as or more than rural delivery, can be dispensed with.

In order to attain this result it has been found absolutely necessary to send out men who can devote their whole time to the examinations called for, without being distracted by other duties, and who can travel over the ground proposed to be traversed and make their recommendations with a full knowledge of the facts.

Under the discretionary power heretofore lodged with the Postmaster-General this has been done.

It could not be done effectively and promptly if the executive officers intrusted with the establishment and maintenance of this experimental service had to supervise it through other divisions than that controlled by themselves.

Mr. QUAY. I do not feel authorized on the part of the committee to accept the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, although personally it is entirely grateful to me. If the Senator from New Hampshire desires to present it to the Senate, I will not seriously antagonize it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The first thing necessary is to vote down the amendment of the committee, which is to strike out the whole clause.

Mr. CARTER. To disagree to the amendment.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator can move an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the amendment be divided.

Mr. FAULKNER. It seems to me that the best course to pursue is to take the sense of the Senate first on striking out the whole provision. If that is determined in the negative, of course then the text of the bill is subject to amendment.

As I understand, the subcommittee who had charge of this bill were in favor of striking out the two provisos, but they were in favor of retaining the appropriation for rural delivery with the term "experimental" inserted. I hope the Senate will agree to follow the subcommittee instead of the full committee and will vote down the proposition of the committee, which is to strike out the whole provision, and then amend the clause in accordance with those views. I do not think we ought to do away entirely with the rural delivery.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take the liberty to suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that if the entire language proposed to be stricken out is stricken out, there will then be nothing to amend.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is true. If a majority of the Senate strikes it out, it does not want any amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. If we can have a vote on the first two lines, to disagree to the amendment to strike those out, then the subject is presented as I think the Senators are willing to have it presented. I ask for a division, having the question first put on the motion to strike out down to the end of the words "three hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. QUAY. Let the question be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks for a division and a vote upon the motion to strike out the language which the Secretary will report.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, beginning in line 4, page 5, the following:

For rural free delivery, including pay of carriers and horse-hire allowance, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to that portion of the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania who has this measure in charge has agreed to divide the question.

Mr. QUAY. I have agreed to divide the question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the test be taken whether or not we will strike out the $300,000 appropriation.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the only question.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; then there remains——

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose the Senate strikes that out?

Mr. HALE. Why does not the Senator from North Carolina proceed?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I am willing as one of the friends of this proposition to accept the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire that after we take a vote on this provision, if the Senate shall see fit to retain it, we will insert the word "experimental." I think we should not make this a permanent system until there is a thorough and full experiment, and that is the purpose of asking for this appropriation. The Post-Office Department does not feel that it has had appropriations heretofore large enough to make a fair test. That is the whole question.

Mr. MASON. The Department approves of the plan so far as they have been able to make the test.

Mr. BUTLER. They approve of the plan, and every person living where it has been tried approves it. Every postmaster and every patron approves it. Here is the report of Postmaster-General Wilson and one from Postmaster-General Gary, both of them approving it, and they give extracts from letters and reports from every office where it has been tried. Everybody approves it and nobody opposes it—nobody either in the Department or in the country where it is tried. Everybody living in places where it has been tried is enthusiastic in support of it, and the extracts from letters show the great convenience it is to the people and how much they appreciate it.

Mr. President, this ought to be an experiment. It ought not to be a permanent thing until the experiment under the appropriation of $300,000 is made, which will cover every State in the Union. It will give the Department a chance to put the whole question to a thorough test and make a full and complete report to the Congress as to whether or not it should be made permanent, and if so under what conditions and to what extent we should start and how gradually or rapidly we should extend it. That is the purpose.

If we do not make this experiment, we throw away all the experiments we have made. The experiments have been highly satisfactory, but they have been partial. There has been only one place in my State. There should be three or four places in North Carolina—one in the mountainous section, one in the central portion, one down east—and so there should be in every State in the Union, because of the different conditions in the different territories, the density of population, mountainous and level countries. Those sections should all have an experiment, and after a fair test and experiment in every State in the Union, then we can have a recommendation from the Department that will be full, comprehensive, and then will be the time for Congress to decide whether or not it will make this feature a permanent part of our postal system.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not believe in the wisdom of what is known as the rural free mail delivery, nor do I believe that the people of the country are interested in it or ask for it. My experience, living in a sparsely settled community, is that the people are satisfied with the present methods of post-office delivery, and they do not object to going to the small post-offices to get their mail, and that this agitation is forced and is not a popular agitation. Every dollar that is expended in this direction commits the country to the final delivery to every house of the mail matter going to that house. Every step that we take will lead to that.

Give the Department $30,000,000 and the Department will report in favor of it, because it is its work, and its favorite work. Give it $100,000 and it will report in favor of extending it. Give it $300,000 and it will report in the same way, and out of it will come almost the doubling of the present enormous expenditures of the Post-Office Department, and I venture to predict that the result will be as I have stated it. Therefore, without consuming any more time I for one shall vote against any proposition extending the rural mail delivery.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, I do not understand upon what ground the Senator from Maine reaches the conclusion he has stated to the Senate. All the officials having charge of this particular service have reported to the committees and to Congress that in their judgment it should be continued in the experimental stage it now is, and the Department ask for a larger amount so as to develop the system beyond what may be considered very thickly settled sections of the country in which it has been tried.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator any doubt that if we give the Department $300,000 for this year next year they will come in and ask for $600,000?

Mr. FAULKNER. What I want to do this year is to give the $300,000 and then require the Department to make a report of the exact saving in cost, if any, or of the extra expense by reason of the experimental work on rural free delivery which they have engaged in.

Mr. HALE. Setting aside what the Post-Office officials report, has the Senator himself any doubt that rural free mail delivery will add immensely to the expenses of the Post-Office Department?

Mr. FAULKNER. That depends upon the extent to which the system may be carried. On many of the routes that have been established I am informed that money has been saved. I was informed by an inspector of the Post-Office Department two weeks ago, in a conversation with him, that he had saved money on the routes he had established. Senators must remember that, as a general rule, when these routes are established it saves the cost of a star route or, perhaps, of two or three star routes. It saves also the cost of a number of post-offices on the line of the rural delivery.

Mr. HALE. Those expenses are small.

Mr. FAULKNER. Except as to the star routes. The post-office itself is small and the cost is very light.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will find, just as sure as tides and sunrise come, that this will involve the Government in an enormous expenditure the more it is applied. Every appropriation will increase just as the appropriation this year over that of last year. We gave them last year $50,000; now they want $300,000. They will want $600,000 next year; and then will want to extend it further: and there will be no stopping it.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is a matter for Congress to determine after the result of the examination comes in. For example, there is no facility given to the people through the postal service that is not an expenditure of public money and an increasing expenditure annually. Just think of $13,000,000 for carriers in cities. What does the Department do with that $13,000,000? They have many deliveries, deliveries four, five, and six times a day, when there is no necessity whatever for such frequent deliveries.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator. That is one of the things which has been overdone, and it is wrong. It involves the expenditure of a great deal of money that we ought not to expend. The proposition to deliver mail to cities seven and eight times a day is absurd.

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course it is.

Mr. HALE. It ought never to be done.

Mr. FAULKNER. Why, then, is not the Senator from Maine willing to cut that down?

Mr. HALE. I am.

Mr. FAULKNER. And give to this experiment the comparatively small appropriation of $300,000.

Mr. HALE. I would cut that down and keep this appropriation down, too.

Mr. FAULKNER. Let the experiment be fully tried and the Senator may favor it next year.

Mr. HALE. After the Post-Office Department has agitated the subject constantly there has grown in the mind of men in the cities the idea that they must have the mail brought to them every hour. The Government ought not to do it, but we have done it. That appropriation ought to be cut down one-half.

Mr. FAULKNER. And just as soon as the gentlemen who are engaged in business in a city go to the seashore resorts, where they go, as we understand, for recreation and rest, there is still a demand that they shall have the carrier service almost as frequent as when in the city. Yet whenever those representing rural constituencies ask that even a small appropriation shall be made in order to experiment upon this service and bring to Congress the information upon which they can form a definite and satisfactory judgment as to what is proper for the future, the cry is made, "If you give here for experimental purposes, it will become a permanent system." I think the Senate ought to give to the rural constituencies this comparatively small appropriation for the purpose of experimenting in reference to this character of service and for the purpose of giving information to Congress upon which future action can be based.

Mr. PASCO. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to ask the Senator what facts in regard to the service are not already well known? It seems to me it is proposed that a very large amount of money shall be expended for merely experimental purposes. There has previously been an appropriation, I understand, from year to year for the same purpose.

Mr. FAULKNER. Only a very small sum.

Mr. PASCO. What was the amount appropriated last year?

Mr. FAULKNER. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. PASCO. What additional facts can be ascertained by expending six times that amount?

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state the additional facts. The Department, having only a small amount, proceeded to establish free rural delivery in very thickly settled communities, and they now want a larger amount to extend the service. It has worked admirably there, and they have approved the system thoroughly as far as it has been established, but they are not themselves satisfied that an extension of it into more thinly settled communities would prove beneficial to the public and in the interest of the public service.

Mr. HALE. When the Senator says it has worked admirably, what does he mean? In what way has it worked admirably?

Mr. FAULKNER. I mean in giving satisfaction to that element of the community who have been served with these conveniences, just as the carrier service has worked admirably and given satisfaction to the cities.

Mr. HALE. My experience among my own constituents is that the people do not ask for this service and do not care for it, but if the Government will go into a country district and spend money, employing men and employing horses to distribute the mail at every man's door, they will accept it; they will not revolt against it.

Mr. FAULKNER. The employment of men as carriers and even with the horses they use in the carrier service is the most economical.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. How long has it been since the carrier system in the cities has been adopted?

Mr. FAULKNER. It was established about eighteen years ago.

Mr. TILLMAN. Was it not begun experimentally, just as this service has been begun, and has it not been extended experimentally to cities of smaller and smaller population?

Mr. HALE. Exactly; it was done in an experimental way. At first it was limited to very large cities, and then we kept cutting it down and finally gave it to cities of 10,000.

Mr. TILLMAN. You mean rather extending it, not cutting it down. It was extended to communities of smaller population?

Mr. HALE. All the time.

Mr. FAULKNER. The law has been the same all the time. It applies to all cities over 10,000 population or where the receipts are over $10,000. But the appropriations have not been sufficient to cover all of the cities that come within that provision of the law.

Mr. HALE. At one time the limit was to cities with a population of 50,000. Then it was cut down to 25,000, then to 10,000, and, as the Senator from South Carolina suggests, it kept going on, and it is extending and ramifying all the time.

Mr. FAULKNER. The question is why should not the smaller communities be served by the system as it is developed. The carrier system has increased the mail receipts immensely, as shown by the Department report. Why should not cities of smaller population gradually come in and have the benefit that the larger cities enjoy? I see no reason why they should not.

Mr. PASCO. The Senator speaks of the success of the experiments already made. Have they resulted in a reduction of the clerical force in any post-office, or reduced the expenditures of the Government in any other direction, or have they simply enlarged the expenses of the Government in a new direction?

Mr. FAULKNER. Unfortunately we have no definite information from the Department as to the relative cost, and for that reason I would be unwilling to fix it in any way as a permanent system upon the Government. But there is no question that on a number of routes it has saved expense to the Government by doing away with the star routes and the post-offices. The Senator from Florida knows as well as I do that in many of these post-offices there is no one except the postmaster himself; that he has no clerical force. They are all small offices which are served by this carrier system. I thought, and the subcommittee thought, we ought to make the experiment for a year longer with an appropriation that will give the Department an opportunity to fully test the system.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, it seems to me that we are expending a great deal of money, in one way and another, in enlarging the operations of the Post-Office Department, and I have yet to see any result, so far as the reduction of expenditures in any direction is concerned. We have seen during the last year or two a lot of white cars running all around the streets of our city on the railroad tracks, but I have never seen a statement as to any reduction because of this car service of the clerical force in the post-office here or in the number of carriers who collect letters.

It seems to me that these matters ought to be investigated, and that extensions of the service in new directions ought to based upon some idea of economy. There should be some compensating reduction of the clerical force or other advantage if we are to enlarge the operations of the Department in new experiments.

For one I am unwilling to see this large increase from $50,000 to $300,000 for the purpose of experimenting further with reference to rural free mail delivery. It appears to me that the Department ought to be able to gather the results that are sought from the experiments already made without the expenditure of further and larger sums of money. If by increasing the number of the delivery clerks and carriers and sending them out into the highways and byways and the small country towns there can be any reduction of expenditure elsewhere, then there may be some good reason for the proposed appropriation of $300,000. But I think as the Senator from Maine does, that there is no popular demand for sending carriers out to deliver the mails in the rural districts. I regard it as a very doubtful scheme to enlarge our operations upon.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, in reference to the point the Senator from Florida makes as to expenditure, of course the net result of the introduction of this system throughout the United States is all a guess. The Department officials could give us but a guess. But in answer to the question as to the net result to the Treasury, it was stated before the subcommittee that balancing the benefits to accrue from the abolition of offices, of star routes, and other reductions against the increased expenditures under the rural free-delivery system, the balance against the Government would be from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000; that is, with universal free delivery, as nearly as the Department officers could guess, the Post-Office appropriation would annually be from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 more than it is now. That was purely an estimate, a guess, based upon the universal extension of the system.

Mr. PASCO. Can the Senator from Pennsylvania state what saving has been accomplished by the establishment of the cars on the street line railroads? They must be very expensive. I see two or three clerks in each of them, and I am unable to see what work they perform that can not be performed by the carriers that go around with vehicles and gather mail matter from the boxes. It seems to me that it must be a large additional expense, and I am unable to see any advantage to the Government that is derived from it. It would be well for us to look into matters of this kind when we consider that there is a constantly increasing deficiency in the Post-Office Department.

Mr. QUAY. I can not give an answer to the Senator from Florida, as my attention has not been directed to it, but I understand that there is not a material increase arising from the employment of the electric lines at any rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2680) amending "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine-Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893.

Mr. QUAY. I ask that the regular order be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

PRESIDENTIAL, VICE-PRESIDENTIAL, AND CONGRESSIONAL TERMS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I also ask that the special order for 2 o'clock to-day, being the joint resolution (S. R. 83) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, may go over until Monday next with the same privilege it has to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9008) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the provision for free rural delivery, on page 5 of the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask whether the scheme of the rural free delivery contemplates abolishing the country post-offices?

Mr. QUAY. As far as practicable, I understand.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The proposition, then, is to distribute from the large mail centers?

Mr. QUAY. As far as possible from central post-offices.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have not given this subject very much consideration, but it seems to me that the argument in favor of rural free delivery is not sufficient to justify the expenditure. I do not believe the farming communities of the West desire rural free delivery. I believe they would rather have the country post-offices. It seems to me that about as far as we will get with rural free delivery, if we adopt it, is to distribute the mail to suburban towns, to cottages along the sea in summer, and to farmers who farm for fun. The farmer of the Western prairies, the farmer in Illinois, in Iowa, Minnesota, and the Dakotas does not spend his time writing letters; and while he does write and receive some mail, I believe the farmer's boy considers it a privilege if he can be allowed, when his turn comes, to go to the post-office.

I do not think that the establishment of this system is justified or that the expense is warranted by the adoption of the rural free delivery, and neither do I believe the people want it. I have never, during my service in the Senate, received a single letter from any constituent of mine, from any resident of the State I in part represent on this floor, demanding rural free delivery. I doubt if the demand comes from the farming people of the country. The farming people of this country demand something else. They demand a fair share and a fair show in the struggle for existence. They demand laws which will give them an equal opportunity. They demand that the railroads shall be controlled in the charges made for the transportation of their products. They demand an even, unvarying measure of value by which their products shall be measured. They can not be satisfied with any humbug of a rural free delivery. It is not an issue. It is unnecessary and unwarranted, in my opinion.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota usually takes a correct view of matters pending here, but he is away off this morning. He is usually in touch with the people, but he is not on this occasion. Certainly he has not read the reports of the Postmasters-General, from Postmaster-General Wanamaker down. The Senator from Maine has not read those reports, for he says there is no demand from the people for this service. The Postmaster-General, in his report for 1897, states that when the first appropriation was made at once there were requests from people over the whole country to give them the service in this section and that section and have the experiment tried in their locality. He has been flooded with applications ever since for more places than the appropriation could supply, and the service never has been located at a place where they have not had piles of letters asking the Department not to discontinue it, but to continue it.

The report is full of extracts from letters to the Department from citizens of the State of Maine, although it gives extracts from but a very small part of the letters received, and it gives piles and piles of names when it can not make extracts any longer. The public sentiment in the country never was clearer, never was more unanimous and emphatic. It is true that where they have not had the system they do not know what it is.

Mr. HALE. It is a singular thing, if that is true, that some of us who represent rural communities—and I do—have not heard of it. The State that I in part represent is a rural State; it has no large cities; it is a country population. In all of the years that this subject has been agitated by the Post-Office Department sending out circulars and inviting requests I do not remember to have heard it mentioned by a single man, woman, or child in the State of Maine. They do talk about other things.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the Senator ever heard of the action of the granges in his State?

Mr. HALE. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. CHANDLER. When the Senator has carefully perused the statements of the granges to find out what his farming population want, has he omitted to read that one of the things they say they want is rural free delivery?

Mr. HALE. I know all about that. I know how those things come about. Our people talk about things that do interest them. They are intelligent; they know what their wants are, and they make them known. They do not write to the Post-Office Department alone, but they let their Senators and Representatives know what they want, and they do not want free rural mail delivery in Maine. There is no demand for it there, and I do not believe there is anywhere, notwithstanding what the Post-Office Department says.

Mr. GEAR. There is a strong demand for rural free delivery in the State in which I live, in Iowa.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly there is. I have here a report from the State which the Senator from Iowa represents. They are an agricultural people; they are a progressive people, and they want better mail facilities. So the constituents of the Senator from Maine want better mail facilities, and some of them are getting it now, but he does not seem to know it.

Mr. GEAR. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me to make a statement?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. GEAR. I have had rural free delivery established in two or three districts in the State I live in, and everywhere it has given satisfaction, and there is a constantly increasing demand for it.

Mr. BUTLER. The statement just made by the Senator from Iowa practically represents—I might say accurately represents—the condition of the whole country where the people know anything about it. There are three post-offices to-day in the State of Maine where this system is being tried. They are Maple, Gorham, and Sebago Lake. Those three places make reports to the Department, and every paper at those three offices has joined in a petition to the Department to have the service continued. There are bushels and barrels of letters at the Department here.

Mr. HALE. I know those regions very well; I have been there a great many times, and it is a sort of laughing stock in the country round about. The other towns do not want it. The Post-Office Department goes out and selects a place and gives them rural free-mail delivery. It tries the service, and it looks attractive, and people will write letters in favor of it; but the surrounding community do not ask for it, they do not expect it, and the thing is looked upon rather as a laughing stock.

Mr. GEAR. If it is the fact that the surrounding community have not asked for it, it is only because it is a limited experiment.

Mr. HALE. But the same rule ought to apply, if there is a demand for it, that applies to any other subject-matter. Let a public building be erected in a town and the citizens of every other town of its size go right in at once and ask for a public building, because that is a need they can appreciate. This is not so. The whole thing is forced.

Mr. GEAR. I have letters from my own county begging and urging the establishment of this service.

Mr. BUTLER. Instead of this being forced, there is nobody who has ever raised his voice for it except the people who will get the benefit of it and who have been denied the benefits that the cities now get. They are the only people interested. Nobody ever proposed it until action was first taken by the organized farmers, the Farmers' Alliance, and the granges, and clubs, and wherever the experiment has been tried the sentiment has been unanimous in its favor. Of course, people do not know what it is in some places, but there is not a community in the United States where it has been tried that you can get a single individual to oppose it or to say anything but that it is a great blessing to the community and that he strongly desires it to be continued.

Mr. President, for the information of the Senator from Maine, I will ask permission to insert in the RECORD the report of the free rural delivery experiment in his State, published in the last annual report of the Postmaster-General. I will read the last two paragraphs. The agent of the Post-Office Department says:

After a careful study of each of these experiments I am of the opinion that the system is highly expedient, very practicable, and exceedingly convenient for a much overlooked element in our civilization—the farmer.

That the system meets with uniform public approval can not be doubted. The people served are unanimous in their indorsement of the scheme, and are looking forward with fond hopes—

The Senator from Maine would blast those "fond hopes," it seems—to its permanent establishment. Moreover, the press of New England—

The Senator from Maine evidently does not read the rural papers in his State—has treated of the subject rather freely and no sign of disapproval has yet been noticed.

The comment in the press of the State of Maine has been favorable. The metropolitan press have had their attention attracted to the free-delivery system. If the Senator from Maine will read the rural papers published in the county seats he will find that there is not a paper published in a county seat, in the United States where this service has been tried that has not approved it.

I will ask that the whole report from the State of Maine, covering about a page of the report of the Postmaster-General, be put in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from North Carolina will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MAINE.

Five free-delivery routes have been in operation in Cumberland County, Me., four since November and one since December, 1896. Immediately after the establishment of these routes a numerously signed petition from residents of the same county not included in the service was presented to the Department asking that like benefits be extended to them. Cumberland County is situated in the southernmost part of the State, and extends from the coast to the New Hampshire line. Outside of the city of Portland the industries of Cumberland County are almost exclusively agricultural, with numerous towns and villages scattered over the country. In each instance, as in the case of four similar routes established in Franklin County, Mass., the free delivery begins 1 mile from the postal town, and is extended only to those who can be classed as rural residents. The carriers travel from 19 to 35 miles a day each.

Brunswick, Gorham, Naples, North Deering, and Sebago Lake are the distributing points. The route from Sebago Lake traverses a rough and broken country. Nevertheless the youthful mail carrier manages to make his 19 or 14 miles a day on his wheel with regularity and promptitude. The four other carriers use horses. Some portions of the territory served are 14 miles or more from a railroad, and the residents of those sections keenly appreciate the unaccustomed facilities for communication which free delivery has opened up to them and afford every facility to the carriers. On the Gorham route many persons have erected neat letter boxes, bearing on the inside cover the names of those for whose mail they are intended, and on the outside there is a contrivance for hoisting a small American flag as a signal to the carrier that there is mail within the box to be collected.

Of the service as a whole in Maine and Massachusetts reports received by the Department say:

"After a careful study of each of these experiments, I am of the opinion that the system is highly expedient, very practicable, and exceedingly convenient for a much overlooked element in our civilization—the farmer.

"That the system meets with uniform public approval can not be doubted. The people served are unanimous in their indorsement of the scheme, and are looking forward with fond hopes to its permanent establishment. Moreover, the press of New England has treated of the subject rather freely, and no sign of disapproval has yet been noticed."

Mr. BUTLER. There are in the report of the Postmaster-General letters from nearly every State in the Union. I will read one from Colorado. It is an extract from a letter written by a farmer who lives 10 miles from the delivery office:

This removes one of the disadvantages of country life, as we can now have a daily paper. I believe if the system were continued it would induce more people to live in the country.

One of the great evils in our present civilization is the tendency of the farmer's boy to push to the cities to try to find a job behind the counter of a store or as a street-car driver. We must make country life more convenient and attractive. There is no greater problem to-day before the statesmanship of this country than to cause our people to live on their farms, where they grow men, where we have to breed men and raise them to keep the cities of the country from degenerating. I continue reading from the letter from a Colorado farmer. He says:

It would also increase the circulation of newspapers and tend to educate people up to the times. Education is the foundation of our Government, and the free distribution of mail is a long step in the right direction. The expense can cut but little figure. It simply will put the money in circulation among our own people. I am a farmer, living 10 miles from Loveland, and naturally very much in favor of free delivery.

Now, what does that mean to every farmer living within 10 miles around the office to whom the mail has been delivered? Every farmer must stop a horse and send a man 10 miles, or 6 or 7 or 8 miles, to get his mail, while one boy living in that community, a boy probably who is to-day hunting work, will for $15 a month become the mail carrier around that whole community. The expense to the people would be ten times as great without this system, for every man to stop his work and lose half a day or a whole day. It amounts on an average to about four or five hours to the people who go to get their mail from country post-offices. Take 100 men, and that means fifty days lost.

Mr. President, there is economy in this system. The farmer can afford to be taxed specially to hire and pay for a man to deliver his mail rather than have every farmer stop his work, stop a horse in the plow or a mule in the wagon to send for his mail. The farmers of the United States would pay the expense if Congress saw fit to put it on them, because it would be a great saving if they footed the bills out of their own pockets and nobody else paid a cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first clause of the amendment submitted by the committee.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, I do not propose to debate this matter at any great length. I had not expected to take any part in the discussion, but there is more than one side to this question. The establishment of these lines of rural delivery means the abolishment of the country post-offices, and in my section of the country I am satisfied the people do not desire to see that done. It is a place where people gather together to hear the news and exchange views with one another upon questions of public interest; and people have to be very busy when there is no one to go to the post-office for the mail.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Florida pardon me?

Mr. PASCO. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like the Senator from Florida to state what is his authority for saying that this is a wholesale policy as to the fourth-class post-offices? Of course we all know in arranging this system that here and there it will be economy to abolish an office; but as to any wholesale abolishing of the post-offices, it is absurd, because that would not be economy. There would be one or two post-offices, for instance, within 1 or 2 miles of each other, where a man going his circle around and delivering the mails could deliver around two offices as well as one, and do it more economically and quickly. The people would in such a case petition that such offices should be abolished in order that they might get the free-delivery service; but there is no wholesale scheme of that character contemplated.

Mr. President, there is not a fourth-class postmaster in the United States who would protest against this system. In every place where it has been tried it has been recommended by every postmaster; and even if they were afraid they were going to lose their offices, they would have favored the system, and thus have shown their patriotism. This would show that they have an interest in the good of their communities above their interest in a little office. But, Mr. President, there has not been one who feared that he would lose his office who was so selfish that he would report against the system.

Mr. PASCO. The Senator asked me a question, and I will attempt to answer it. The scheme comes from the House of Representatives, and is found on page 5 of the bill. I will read a paragraph which clearly develops the ultimate purpose of this plan, which is now in its experimental stage:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to expend during the current fiscal year for rural free-delivery service, in addition to the sum provided above for such service, a sum not to exceed an amount equal to the aggregate amount of the compensation paid to postmasters, for cost of mail transportation, star-route service, and mail-messenger service that may be discontinued by reason of the establishment of rural free-delivery service.

So it is evident from the very words of the proposition as presented in the House bill that it is contemplated to discontinue postmasters, and that means the abolishment of the post-offices.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think there is a report by the Post-Office Department, in which it is shown what the saving would be from abolishing such offices.

Mr. PASCO. I was going on to state that.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well.

Mr. PASCO. I understand that one argument used by the Department in favor of establishing this rural-delivery service is, as the Senator from South Dakota suggests, that the post-offices can be discontinued. I had supposed the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] was better acquainted with this scheme than he seemed to be when he stopped to ask me what authority I had for suggesting that there would be a discontinuance of country post-offices.

This whole idea is based upon the theory that we can get rid of the country post-offices, and the money thus saved is to be used as far as it goes in paying for this rural-delivery service. I have lived in the country myself, and, as I was saying, I know what an agreeable place the post-office is for the people to get together and to talk with one another while waiting for the mail to arrive and at odd times, and on Saturdays when work is not pressing. The country post-office is one of our social institutions where people meet their neighbors and loiter and loaf, as we call it, and collect items of news to carry home to their families. And I am sure that the people throughout Florida do not desire to see those offices discontinued.

I do not wish to see rural mail delivery substituted for them. The present system is well enough. If I had my way, I should reduce the number of free deliveries rather than extend it. I think, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] suggested, that the expenses of the Department have too largely increased by reason of the large and frequent delivery service in the cities; and I do not think it will be compensated for by having free rural delivery in certain sections of the country. We have seen no experiments of this service in the part of Florida where my home is, and there is no demand for it among the people.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PASCO. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is there not a great deal more demand for an increase of the number of mail routes weekly, and having one mail a day instead of one or two a week?

Mr. PASCO. A very large portion of the correspondence of the people of my State with the Post-Office Department is for such additional mail facilities as that. They are continually applying through their Senators and Representatives for additional accommodations of this sort. Where they do not have a daily service they desire to have the service extended to an increased number of days in a week; and if additional money is to be expended by the Post-Office Department for the benefit of the country people, it should be by giving them better and more frequent service upon the routes already established, and by new routes and extensions wherever they are required.

On many routes the mail is delivered only twice or three times a week, and the requests are frequent to have a daily mail established instead of such service. If this amendment were in that direction, I would very cheerfully favor it; but to carry the mail to each man's door among certain favored people in certain favored localities, and to spend this appropriation of $300,000 in that way is not, in my opinion, desirable. If this system should be carried out all over the country, it would occasion an immensely increased expense, and it must be remembered that at last the people have to bear this expense.

So, in view of these circumstances, the proposed abolishment of the country post-offices, the need of the expenditure of the money in other and better directions, and the largely increased expense that will be imposed upon the people by the general extension of the service, I think it is not wise to move any further in this direction.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, if this scheme of rural free delivery contemplates abolishing the country post-offices I have been made first aware of it to-day. I can understand very well that here and there a very small office may be abolished in consequence of the establishment of free delivery. That would be an incidental economy connected with the new system; but that the fundamental principle of the system is based upon the abolishment of the country post-offices is a mistake, I think.

I wish only to call attention to what is done in other countries in the way of rural free delivery. I have here a printed letter of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Heath, to Postmaster-General Gary, dated February 7, 1898, which states the condition of the rural free-delivery service in other countries. I will read an extract.

Mr. BUTLER. I will say to the Senator that that statement is in relation to the leading countries of the world.

Mr. CHANDLER. This, as the Senator from North Carolina says, is the information from the leading nations of the Universal Postal Union. I read:

In Great Britain the free delivery of letters was begun about fifty years ago. All mails are delivered at the residences of the addressees without extra charge.

* * * * * * *

Rural delivery was established in France in 1830. An extra charge of 10 centimes (2 cents) was at first exacted for letters delivered in communes having no post-office, but this charge was abandoned in 1848. Now, even the most outlying hamlets of France receive at least one free delivery a day.

* * * * * * *

In the German Empire a small charge of from 10 to 20 pfennigs (2 to 4 cents), according to weight, is made for the delivery of mails in rural districts. Part of this extra charge goes to the carriers and part to the Government.

* * * * * * *

In Austria-Hungary a small extra charge, ranging from half a cent to a cent and a half, is made for delivering letters and small packages in the rural districts. The service is not self-supporting, and is not expected to be so by the Government.

* * * * * * *

Rural free delivery prevails all over Belgium.

* * * * * * *

In Switzerland, the home of the Universal Postal Union, there is at least one free delivery a day in every hamlet. This system has been in operation since 1848.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. President, that the experiment is worth continuing. The appropriation which is contained in the present bill the friends of rural free delivery advocate to-day as an experiment. Some Senators think the people do not want it; other Senators think the people do want it. That depends upon the point of view to a considerable extent and upon the eye with which one looks.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do you think, even if we were to increase the appropriation to $200,000,000, that it would be possible to deliver every man's letter in the United States to him or to deliver to one-half of our population?

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator ask me whether I think we ought to do that?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I ask whether it would be practicable or possible?

Mr. CHANDLER. To give rural free delivery for what amount?

Mr. TILLMAN. For $200,000,000 to the people of this country, if we should devote that much to carrying letters and papers to every man's house?

Mr. CHANDLER. Two hundred million dollars is a sum so large that I do not think the Senator's question is a serious one.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is asked in absolute good faith, taking into consideration the extent of the area of this country.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will answer the question as the Senator has asked it. I think we could do it for less, and will let that stand as an answer to the Senator.

Mr. President, the present postal system is full of abuses, in my judgment. There are investigations to be made and reforms to be instituted. The carrier system of the cities has grown up by degrees until, as has been shown, it now amounts to $13,000,000. That is all an extra payment. We never used to pay it. The people used to go to the post-office, stand about, and wait there to have the good time which the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] seems to think they have, talking gossip, talking politics, and finding out what their neighbors were about. That was the old universal system, which the Senator from Florida does not like to see encroached upon.

Mr. PASCO. They settled all the affairs of the community.

Mr. CHANDLER. They did; and there was a great deal of good in those friendly little gatherings, but the Government is not bound to furnish a post-office for that kind of business. Indeed, the tendency of postal reform in recent years has been against making post-offices of any class public resorts where the people could congregate and read what is on the backs of the postal cards. That is understood now to be the sole privilege of the men and women and children who actually tend the post-offices.

Mr. PASCO. That is the privilege of the postmaster.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; that is the privilege of the postmaster. The cause is going on along these lines in Maine and in Florida alike; and all that the friends of this movement ask is that it may be ascertained whether, when we have come to spend $13,000,000 in the metropolitan delivery in cities, there may not be $300,000 at least spent this year in experimentation, to see whether a system of rural free delivery can not be devised, going along with some of the reforms which ought to be made in the Post-Office Department, which would tend to reduce the other expenses of the Department.

Mr. President, I make no rash assertion on this subject, but I do think the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is mistaken in saying that the people do not take any interest in this subject and make no demand for it. I know that the granges of my State and the granges of his State, and I think the united granges of the country, have over and over again discussed this subject in their meetings and have expressed their opinions in their resolutions, and that there is a public interest in this question. I say how great that may be depends upon the keenness of the observer.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] thinks that the people are terribly in earnest on the currency question, and demand that the currency system be changed; that silver be rehabilitated, remonetized. I think myself there is something in that. I think there is a very great and widespread demand for something of that sort. The Senator from Maine does not see it at all. His eyes are closed to that demand. He does not think the people care much about that. It is all, Mr. President, a question of personal equation. One man sees a thing and another does not see it. Men are very apt to see what they look for and to ignore and not see what they do not care to see.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems it is too early to dogmatize on this experimental question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to go a little further before the Senator asks his question, and then I will listen to him.

Mr. TILLMAN. As a member of the Post-Office Committee, could not the Senator from New Hampshire present some reforms in the shape of extending post routes or making the post-offices nearer together and reducing the number of times that letters are delivered in the cities per day to a reasonable number, say twice, or at most three times, so as to give some practical relief to the country people in that way, rather than to give them a pretended, or at least an impossible, reform or scheme of free rural delivery in a country as extensive as this and as sparsely settled as this?

Mr. CHANDLER. To answer generally, I would say no. The rural free delivery as now being experimented upon, I think, would be better than the system which the Senator demands, which he says is pretended and delusive. But I say that this whole question of the reform of post-office abuses is one of the subjects which needs very careful investigation. Whether it is made by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which does not have much to do, or by the Committee on Appropriations, which has a great deal to do, the investigation ought to be made; and I believe that when it is made it will be found that we can save enough from railroad transportation and from the expenses of free delivery in the cities to give a very satisfactory free rural delivery throughout the country, and possibly, even with the reforms that can be accomplished, reduce the rate of postage from 2 cents to 1 cent. I look forward to the day when these results will be accomplished after the war is over, into which the Senator from South Carolina has helped hurry this country.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire, I believe, helped in that business of hurrying us into war, if there has been any hurry about it; but it looks to me as if we had been rather leisurely getting into it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I admit it, Mr. President, but I was not certain that the Senator from South Carolina would admit it. I am very glad that I have got the admission from him. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I read in the papers yesterday that it was said in the House of Representatives that the Democratic party had taken the Republicans by the scruff of the neck and dragged them into this war. I do not claim that, but I am willing to shoulder my share of the responsibility and uphold the dignity of this country. But we have got clear off from the postal delivery matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think we have.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to ask the Senator if he actually believes that with our sparse population and the vast area of country to be covered by our postal system in order to even give a man within 4 or 5 miles from a post-office an opportunity to get his mail, which comes once a week, it is possible to extend this free delivery to any except a few favored communities, where the people are as thickly settled as they are in Belginm and Switzerland?

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from South Carolina was familiar with the experiments which have been made, he would know that they have been made on the recommendations of the representatives of the people who favor free rural delivery. They have not been put around to a few favorites, as the Senator insinuates.

Mr. TILLMAN. I said a few favored communities.

Mr. BUTLER. No; it has not been to a few favored communities. The Senator from South Carolina can no doubt have the experiment tried in any part of his State he will recommend to the Department. I have requested that trials should be made in my State in certain places which I have indicated.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should be glad to have it extended all over my State, but I know it will cost forty times as much as we will ever be able to get from it.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator takes a great deal for granted. The Post-Office Department has made an estimate of that, and has furnished it to the Post-Office Committee. Nobody wants to go into this thing blindly; we want this experiment made for one year more, so as to have a final test and have a report from the Post-Office Department.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then next year there will be no extension of it unless it is demonstrated that it is not only practicable but economical?

Mr. BUTLER. Next year we will make it an economical system or discontinue the system. That is what the appropriation is for.

Mr. HALE. I am very glad this discussion has taken place, because it discloses what is the object and end of this whole scheme. It is not for a moment contemplated by the Post-Office Department that this shall be an experiment tried for one year and then dropped. The experiments are not being tried in populous localities, as the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] has indicated he believed. They are tried in sparsely settled communities for the purpose of extending rural free mail delivery to those sparsely settled communities. The experiments that have been tried in Maine are not in the large towns; they are in the little, sparsely settled towns, because the object of the Post-Office Department, of the projectors, the founders and agitators of this scheme, goes to the entire extent of delivering every man's letter at every man's door.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] has frankly admitted that and brought it out. He has stated that wherever a man lives 10 miles from a post-office or from a neighbor, he should have his mail brought to him every day. That is the purpose. The increased appropriation that is asked for is not experimental, Senators; it is intended to bind this system upon the country and to oblige future Congresses, as this is saddled upon the country, to embark in the entire scheme.

Now, Mr. President, it is not what can be done in Belgium, where men are so thickly settled that they are almost herded together; it is not what can be done in Great Britain, where its whole territory could be placed in the middle of one of our great States and never reach its borders; it is not even what can be done in France, where the population is thick, where 40,000,000 of people are found in a territory smaller than the State of Texas; it is to saddle upon the taxpayers of this country, in order to carry out the scheme of enthusiasts in the Post-Office Department and elsewhere, a system of delivering mail to every man, woman, and child in this country, and will never stop until it reaches that.

I say the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] was not erroneous or extravagant in his estimate of what it will cost. The Post-Office Department has already, because it has not been scrutinized enough and watched and guarded closely enough, increased its expenditures at such an alarming rate that to-day it expends, or soon will expend, $100,000,000 a year.

It has three times as many deliveries in the large cities as it ought to have; and because we have not met the enthusiasts and schemers in the Department as they should have been met, at the door, and prevented these increased deliveries; but they having got that done, and having given to the cities eight and ten and sometimes more deliveries a day, that field being exhausted, the schemers and enthusiasts of the Department have turned their attention to what they believe is popular—free mail delivery everywhere. They mean by virtue of increased appropriations and experiments tried in the most sparsely settled communities to fix upon us this whole scheme. Let us in voting upon this matter bear that in mind. There is no intention of stopping at the end of a year. It was $50,000 last year, it is $300,000 this year, it will be a million the year afterward, and soon it will be $50,000,000.

I do not believe the people of the country desire it. I do not believe there is any popular demand for it. If so, I have never heard of it. I do not believe to-day, when we are in other directions spending money as free as water, that we ought to take one step in the way of spending money in this direction.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. KYLE. I would say to the Senator that he is clear behind the times.

Mr. HALE. Quite likely.

Mr. KYLE. The class of men to whom the Senator refers are already advocating that the Government do the washing for the people, print all of the papers, and keep all the stores, and they have their bills for those purposes introduced into Congress.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is correct about that. It is only one of many schemes that come from what I call these enthusiasts and uneasy people in the Departments.

There is another scheme that has been crowded upon us, and that is that every city should have pneumatic tubes to deliver mail matter; and there is a great company organized for the purpose of crowding and forcing that upon Congress. It is the business of Congress to watch these Departments, and to watch every step in every direction. They do not appropriate the money. We appropriate it and are responsible to our constituents; and you will never find a Department, no matter how sound the men are at the head of it, no matter how good a Postmaster-General there is, where these schemes will not be worked out in the busy brain of ingenious men, and every session of Congress they will come here and ask us to embark in a system that means immense expenditures in the future. I can not vote for this proposition under these conditions.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am very strongly impressed with the views of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. There is another view of this question which has not been presented, however, and I desire to suggest it. Going to get the mail is one of the most convenient excuses the boys, and sometimes the old men, and sometimes the girls, have to go to town, and they look upon it as a privilege. They sometimes have a little contest with each other to see who shall have the horse and go to get the mail. It is a visit they make. They meet their friends there, and it is one of the most agreeable social gatherings, around the post-office, where the neighbors all meet and talk over the affairs of the week, that they have. Sometimes it is only a weekly mail. They go there, and there is a pleasant levee about the post-office, and it is regarded as a pleasure to go and get the mail and not a burden.

It seems to me this kind of legislation, so far from being beneficial, takes away one of the pleasantest customs you find in all the country. Those who have lived in the country and have seen this system hardly want to break it up and leave no excuse for going to town. Now, this thing is quite important. It is really a social benefit to them, and I dislike to see it broken up. It is a matter of education. There is nothing more educational than getting together and hearing all the views once or twice a week. I hope the Senator from Maine will be sustained, for it is folly to talk about carrying the mail to every house. It ought not to be indulged in. There are enough ways to expend money where it would be more beneficially spent.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if we enter upon this scheme of rural delivery, we must understand that it means rural delivery in every part of the United States, the populous and nonpopulous sections. It would not be fair to introduce it into the populous East and not into the somewhat sparsely populated South and West. So it will extend everywhere, and it will be equally costly.

I agree with the Senator from Maine and the Senator from South Carolina that nobody can tell the amount; but it will certainly double the post-office expenses of this country if we undertake to do this. I do not believe there is any demand for it. I represent a pretty intelligent, reading community, and I think, in proportion to population, they have more mail than almost any other section of the United States.

I have a relation with my constituents such that when many of them want anything, they feel at liberty to ask me about it, and I never yet have had a demand from the State of Colorado for rural delivery. I do not believe that anywhere there is a real desire amongst the people for it. As the Senator from Nevada says, there is a desire on the part of the farmer boy and the farmer himself to go to town. They must go occasionally, and they go and get their mail. It is no hardship upon them, and it will be no relief from the burdens they are bearing to deliver the mail to them, even if it were delivered every day.

I was brought up on a farm. I know something about one of the best rural districts in the world, where the people are among the very best—in the State of New York. We had a mail in those days once a week. The mail came usually, in my day, Saturday afternoon. There was a store, or two stores perhaps, with the post-office in one of the stores; and everybody went there Saturday evening to get his mail. Nobody felt that it was any hardship. The same thing exists there to-day, or at least it did a year ago. Perhaps they get mail oftener now. I do not know about that.

They are off from the line of railroad. There is no railroad in the township, I believe; but no complaint is made that I know of.

Mr. President, we are entering upon a vast expenditure of money, and not only for the present moment. Evidently we are to enter, when we shall get through with the condition that is now particularly dragging money out of the Treasury, upon an era of very large expenditure, and necessarily so. We must increase our Navy; we must increase our fortifications; we have to do things that will cost a great deal of money to put this country in a respectable condition so that we shall not feel as we have been feeling for the last ninety days, when a little seventh-rate power was threatening to bombard our coasts and make us a good deal of annoyance, if nothing more. We have got now to provide for the defense of the country. It will add millions and many millions, Mr. President, to our expenditures, and it is not worth while to try this experiment which, as the Senator from Maine says, is not an experiment. The Department has spent money enough to know whether they can do it or not.

You can find plenty of people who will say they want it done, and you can not devise any scheme for spending where there will not be people prepared to indorse it. The question is whether there is any demand for it. Is there any necessity for it? Is there any advantage to be derived from it? I do not believe there is. I do not believe the farmers will be any better off by having their mail handed to them than they are by going to town to get it, or by going to the post-offices, which might be multiplied, if necessary; and if we have money to expend we can spend it in some other direction; we can better spend it in post-offices, in my judgment, by giving more frequent mails.

If you stop a moment and think about it, you will see it means a tremendous expense. You must have a vast number of people. There is no end to the expense, and, in my opinion, there will be no compensation whatever for it. When we get rich enough, when the population averages two or three hundred to the square mile, as in France, then perhaps it will be economy to deliver the mail instead of as it is at present conducted; but until that time comes there is no reason why we should increase our expenses indefinitely almost on this subject.

For that reason, as a member of the committee, I voted to strike out the House provision, knowing full well that it did not mean simply to spend two or three hundred thousand dollars for experiments, but that it means if we keep on that we shall enter upon what will run way up into fifty or a hundred million dollars in a very short time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the constituents of the honorable Senator from Colorado take a very different view of this question from that which he takes. He is generally very close to his people, but he is certainly not close to them on this question. Here are sentiments which I will read. This book is full of them. There are two pages of commendations from the Senator's State.

Mr. TELLER. You can get certificates. I am not saying that you can not. I looked that over myself. I understand that. I venture to say that if anybody has anything at heart very much in the State of Colorado, he will write to me about it, and people have not done it and they do not do it.

Mr. BUTLER. I will challenge the Senator to find a single one of his constituents who is enjoying this benefit who will give it up if he can help himself and who would not most strongly urge it. They expect it to continue and are simply hoping that other people will have extended to them the same privilege.

Mr. TELLER. If it is continued anywhere, it must be continued in Colorado, of course. I shall insist that if there is any beneficent act, we shall have the benefit of it; but I am willing, and I think my constituents are, under the circumstances, to forego the privilege of free delivery just now and to spend our money in a better way.

Mr. BUTLER. The man living in the city near the post-office can better afford to take the time to walk to the office for his mail than the man who is busy and who lives 5 miles from the post-office and must stop his work to go. If we are to economize, let us strike out the $13,000,000 for the cities.

Mr. TELLER. There is some sense in the delivery of the mail in large cities, where it is utterly impossible to deliver it at the post-offices, but we are delivering it in many places where it is not necessary to deliver it and are spending large amounts of money that ought to be cut off. We are delivering, as it has been said here, more mail to the people every day than we ought to deliver. A morning mail and an evening mail and an opportunity for the business man if he wants to go to the post-office in the interim is all that is necessary. Instead of that we are delivering it in some places as high as seven times a day, and that in towns where every man could walk to the post-office and back to his place of business in twenty minutes. That is one of the abuses which started out little by little, and this will be another, if it is to be continued. I will join the Senator in cutting off fully half of that $13,000,000, or even more.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina to prepare an amendment and let the Senate vote upon it, limiting the delivery in any city in the United States to three times a day. Let us cut off one abuse before we add another on the plea that we want equality.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will prepare an amendment of that kind.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not on the Post-Office Committee, and I have not given this matter so much attention as have the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from New Hampshire. They could prepare such an amendment in three minutes and let us vote on it.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from South Carolina were on the Post-Office Committee, he would know that we have mighty little to do with it. There is one committee which runs this body and everything in it—the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TILLMAN. I judge from what I see in this body that the Post-Office Committee consumes its time passing upon the qualification or disqualification of postmasters.

Mr. BUTLER. That is about all we are allowed to do, and we expect the Committee on Appropriations to take that away from us at any time.

Mr. President, the argument of all the Senators who have opposed free rural delivery might be appropriate one year from now. The question is not now before the Senate whether we will embark on a permanent system of free rural delivery, even permanent in certain localities, to be extended as rapidly as possible. The question is whether or not we shall give the matter a thorough test, so that every Senator can act intelligently. Those Senators who seem to be afraid that if this appropriation is made they never can stop it simply confess that they know it will be very popular in every place where it is tried. The experiments are now being made in but few places. This appropriation will enable an experiment to be made in three or four different places in every State in the Union. That will give a fair test. Then Senators can decide whether or not they want to continue it. Then we will have a complete experiment. Then we will have a recommendation of the Post-Office Department.

The argument of the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Colorado will be timely and proper then, but their argument does not apply to this experiment. We have made a limited experiment. The Post-Office Department refuses to make a recommendation. Their reason is that they can not make one on such a limited experiment. Shall we waste and throw away what we have done, or shall we let the experiment continue, as recommended, with this increased appropriation? And then when the experiment has been tried in every State in the Union, with the recommendation of the Department before us, let us decide whether we will make this a permanent feature or not. That is all there is in this question, and to say that we can never stop if we make this appropriation is to admit that it will be so popular that there will be no way to stop it.

Mr. President, this bill carries immense appropriations that ought to be smaller. Here is $13,000,000 for city free delivery. Here is more money proposed to be appropriated for pneumatic tubes than is asked for the rural free-delivery experiment. Why do we select this place to make a little picayunish economy? We certainly can afford to appropriate this money to make a fair test.

Now, in order that Senators who may not have had this experiment made near their homes may know just how it has worked, let me read what the Department says about one place in my State—and I know every foot of ground about it. Just hear the report from China Grove. That is one of the places where the experiment commenced a year ago. The Post-Office Department says:

> China Grove, in the center of China Grove Township, Rowan County, was selected as the most suitable testing ground. The main line of the Southern Railway passes the town, delivering mails at an hour which renders possible the dispatching of carriers in the forenoon. Two carriers have been appointed, each traveling over 24 miles of rough clay roads daily, visiting nearly forty boxes each—

They have an arrangement there by which three or four neighbors put up a box at the end of the lane. In some places the carrier goes to the house. These things have been adjusted all over the country. They either have a box at the end of the lane or the carrier goes to the house, as the Department inspector recommends—> and delivering and collecting mail from some portion of between five and six hundred people. The district is not thickly settled and the community is not excessively addicted to letter writing. Nevertheless—

This is important, because the Senator from Maine claimed to have information upon which he made just the directly opposite statement—

> Nevertheless, after the service had been reorganized in November, 1893, the number of pieces of mail matter handled perceptibly increased, and the friendly interest of the people in the service became manifest.

It is the opinion of the Post-Office Department that this will greatly increase the amount of mail. That goes into the merits of the question when you come to make it permanent. The question is whether or not you will give it a fair test; whether or not you will give the Department a chance to make a recommendation. Then every argument which the Senator from Maine and the other Senators have made will be pertinent. They are not pertinent now.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that illustration tells the whole story. Here is a little community with forty boxes, who used to get their mail at the post-office. Your experiment set on foot, or on horseback, I do not know which, two men employed by the Government, who did up the business of these forty boxes by going around and delivering the mail and collecting the mail. The Senator might talk until midnight. He could not furnish an instance of the infirmity of this whole scheme better than he has in that; and when it is adopted, that is what it will be. For every forty or fifty boxes there will be one or two men employed by the Government, in the Government service, mounted on horseback, in many cases, going around to collect the mail and deliver to every box. There is no limit to that expenditure. There is no limit to the horde of Government employees that will be employed under this system, traversing the land, making themselves useful in many ways in which Government employees ought not to make themselves useful.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Maine yield for a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine whether it is not quite probable that these expressions so favorable to the free-delivery scheme resulted from the persistent canvass made by those persons who secured appointments to go about the country and deliver the mail?

Mr. HALE. I do think it quite likely.

Mr. CARTER. I have never known a mail carrier who could not get pretty nearly everybody on his route to sign a petition to increase his salary.

Mr. HALE. There will not be a man appointed who will not make himself busy first about his business in delivering and gathering the mails, next in gossip, next in politics, and then in everything else. We ought to hesitate long, Senators, before we take another step in the direction of saddling this vast scheme and vast burden upon the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Take the case of the forty boxes. The case now is that forty men, women, or boys go from their homes to the post-office to get the mail. Then they come back home. Under the system of free delivery, if it is adopted, one person takes all the mail and carries it and delivers it to the houses.

Mr. HALE. Paid by the Government.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; paid by the Government. That is done to the extent of $12,000,000 in the cities. The people in the cities have a shorter distance to go to the post-office than the people in the country. Now, if this Government, by paying a carrier to carry the mails to those forty families in one trip, can save forty trips to those forty families, it is a fair question whether the Government should not do it to those people in the rural regions the same as it does three or four or five or six times a day to the people of the cities.

Mr. BUTLER. I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that there are more than forty families. A number of families join in one box. There were 2,892 pieces of mail delivered by those carriers over 40 square miles of territory, and that is one of the most sparsely settled sections in the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. The progress of the postal service does not go backward. It will have pneumatic tubes, if pneumatic tubes will transfer the mail from one city to another or from one town to another. The new system will go forward. We shall have pneumatic tubes. We are experimenting in that direction. I think the system in the great cities has passed beyond the stage of experiment, and the wave of progress in that particular will not go backward. We shall have more pneumatic tubes. So the experiment of rural free delivery is being tried, whereby some of the money of the Government, some of the receipts from the postal service, that is being expended so largely to pay the railroads for transporting mails and to pay the letter carriers of the great cities for carrying the mails will be expended for the benefit of the country regions of this land; and we shall in the end, I hope and believe, after the experiment is fairly tried, have these rural carriers carrying the mails to the owners of the forty boxes in existing post-offices in the State of Florida and in the State of Maine and in the State of South Dakota and all over the rural regions of this country.

Mr. President, we are spending too much of the money of the Government in the cities and too little of it in the country, and there is going to be as time progresses an equalization of that expenditure, and nowhere will that equalization in the future be found more evident than in the mail service in the country, where the cities now get more accommodations than they need and the inhabitants of the rural regions get fewer accommodations than they need.

I move to add the word "experimental" before the words "rural free delivery," in line 4, page 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to insert the word "experimental" before the words "rural free delivery," in line 4, page 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first clause of the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. QUAY. I do not understand that.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not understand the result.

Mr. TELLER. What is the question?

Mr. QUAY. It seems to me the first vote should be on the committee amendment striking out those two lines. If the committee amendment striking out those two lines is defeated, then the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will come in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that in that he is wrong, as the rule specifically provides that if the amendment to strike out is agreed to it would not be amendable. It must be first amended.

Mr. QUAY. Then I have further amendments to offer. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "delivery," the words "under the direction of the Postmaster-General."

Mr. PETTIGREW. What was done with the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was adopted.

Mr. QUAY. That was the insertion of the word "experimental."

Mr. PETTIGREW. Simply the insertion of the word "experimental?"

Mr. QUAY. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, after the word "delivery," in line 4, to insert "under the direction of the Postmaster-General;" so as to read:

For experimental rural free delivery, under the direction of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. HALE. These amendments are not objected to. They do not touch the real question. I do not object to them. They do not make the provision any better or any worse. Under the agreement the question will be on striking out the appropriation of $300,000.

Mr. QUAY. On striking out the entire provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. I move, in line 5, to strike out the word "three," after the word "allowance," and insert "two," thus reducing the appropriation for rural free delivery, up to the period in the fifth line, to conform to the report of the subcommittee.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the amendment?

Mr. QUAY. It makes the appropriation $200,000 instead of $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, after the word "allowance," it is proposed to strike out the word "three" and insert "two;" so as to read "two hundred thousand dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The amendment simply cuts down the appropriation $100,000.

Mr. QUAY. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HALE. And leaves it four times what it was last year. It is just as objectionable at $200,000 as at $300,000.

Mr. QUAY. It simply conforms the provision to the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the clause as amended.

Mr. QUAY. This is certainly going to be a bone of very serious contention between the two Houses, and I think I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, in order to have a decisive instruction to the conferees.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the proposition to be voted on.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is to strike out the two lines as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Precisely.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following two lines:

For experimental rural free delivery, under the direction of the Postmaster-General, including pay of carriers and horse-hire allowance, $200,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to strike out the clause as amended.

Mr. HALE. Those against the proposition will vote "yea" to strike it out of the bill.

Mr. PASCO. That is the committee's proposition, I understand?

Mr. QUAY. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. HALE. To strike out the clause as amended.

Mr. QUAY. The Senate will understand that the effect of an affirmative vote is to halt the free rural delivery at once.

Mr. HALE. Striking it out of the bill, as the Committee on Appropriations reported.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Chair please state just how the vote is to be taken? Is a vote in the negative for the $200,000 appropriation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out the words read from the desk. Those who vote "yea" will vote to strike it out. Those against striking it out will vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER. Those in favor of retaining the appropriation of $200,000 will vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. He does not seem to be present, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], and vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], with whom I have a general pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY].

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], and withhold my vote.

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I observe that he is not in the Chamber, and I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted. I propose to my colleague [Mr. PRITCHARD], who is paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN], that we transfer our pairs, so that we both can vote, if that is agreeable to him.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That arrangement is perfectly satisfactory. I vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER. I have already voted "nay."

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have agreed to pair on this question with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I would vote "yea" if he were present, and I suppose he would vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is absent, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENNEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I am informed that he has not voted, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. BACON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I inquire whether he has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the senior Senator from Rhode Island has not voted.

Mr. BACON. In that event I will withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON], who has not come into the Chamber. I suggest to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] that we transfer our pairs. In that case I will let my vote stand.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is agreeable. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Bate,	Heitfeld,	Money,	Stewart,
Carter,	Kyle,	Pasco,	Teller,
Cullom,	Lodge,	Pettigrew,	Tillman,

So the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out the first clause of the paragraph on page 5 was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. The vote just taken being the decision of the Senate, of course the rest of the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. The action upon that will be merely formal.

Mr. HALE. The remainder of the paragraph will go out, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the committee striking out the second clause of the paragraph on page 5 is agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 10, after the word "dollars," insert:

Provided, That no delivery shall be made in any city oftener than three times daily, and any amount thus saved shall be covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. QUAY. I think I will make the point of order that that is general legislation and not in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rise to speak to the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized to speak to the point of order made by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHANDLER. I take it for granted that in making an appropriation of this size and character for free-delivery service in cities, it is perfectly competent to limit the purposes for which the appropriation is made. The point of order can not be well taken under those circumstances.

Mr. QUAY. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved by the Senator from Pennsylvania to lay the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina on the table.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow me, before he makes that motion, just to call the attention of the Senate to the situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraw the motion temporarily?

Mr. QUAY. I withdraw it for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to lay the amendment on the table is temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the discussion which has been had here during the absence of possibly half the Senators on the floor has brought out the fact that a large number of Senators believe that the deliveries in cities are excessive. I understand that in some of the larger cities they deliver mail six and eight times a day. The amendment in which we have just agreed with the committee was to the effect that free rural delivery shall stop, that we shall make no more effort in that direction. Being myself a farmer and knowing the practical effect of that, I voted against retaining the provision, because I deemed it impracticable and, in fact, impossible, unless we are going to double the appropriation bills for the Post-Office Department.

Now, the question is, Shall the people in cities have their mail brought to their doors oftener than three times a day? If so, why? Is it not enough that any business man or anybody else shall have his mail brought right to his house three times a day? That is all there is about it. The Senate can vote down the amendment or agree to it, as it sees proper.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that by the fifth section of the bill, which will undoubtedly be adopted by Congress, a commission is raised for the investigation of all these questions.

Mr. TILLMAN. But why put off striking at one abuse right now on the pretense that you are going to investigate a whole lot of others?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of Senators to the rule which requires that the Chair shall be addressed and consent granted by the Senator having the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I took it for granted that the Senator from Pennsylvania would not object to my answering his question without undertaking to appeal to you. But I shall try to obey the rule hereafter, sir.

Mr. QUAY. The reason simply is that Congress ought not to act without knowing what it is doing, and in undertaking without consideration and investigation to strike down one-half of the free deliveries in the great cities of the Union it certainly would act without knowing what the effect was going to be. Therefore, I renew the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish the Senator from Pennsylvania would allow me to make a remark after he has made his own little speech. I wish he would allow me to make just one remark.

Mr. QUAY. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I give notice that if this amendment is adopted I shall move to reduce the appropriation from $13,000,000 to $10,000,000, which would be ample, and would be a saving of $3,000,000. We might as well save that as to strike out the rural free-delivery system.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if that amount would not build us another battleship, and if it would not be better to spend the money in that way rather than in sending mail to people's houses so often that they do not even have time to open it before another mail comes in? I mean there is really no use for it. That is all there is about it.

Mr. QUAY. I insist on my motion.

Mr. HOAR. What has become of the point of order?

Mr. TILLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay my amendment on the table.

Mr. HOAR. What has become of the point of order?

Mr. QUAY. I withdrew the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed the point of order was that it was general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the point of order was withdrawn.

Mr. QUAY. The point of order was withdrawn because it was stated, and I think correctly, in objection to the point of order, that the amendment merely limited the use to which the appropriation might be applied.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read from the desk. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania will see that it is liable to the point of order.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of line 10, page 4, the following proviso:

Provided, That no delivery shall be made in any city oftener than three times daily, and any amount thus saved shall be covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. That is a change of the general law.

Mr. QUAY. That was my suggestion.

Mr. HOAR. I renew the point of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rise to speak to the point of order. I thought it had been disposed of.

Mr. TILLMAN. The amendment is in the interest of economy if it is a change of law.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no law that I know of which provides that the cities of this country shall have more than three mail deliveries a day.

Mr. GORMAN. There is none.

Mr. CHANDLER. The number of deliveries a day is in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and here is an appropriation of $13,000,000 for letter carriers, including substitute carriers and temporary carriers at summer resorts, holiday and election service. The Senator from South Carolina, imbibing the spirit of economy and reform from the Senators who are in the majority on the recent vote, simply proposes to carry out those principles of limiting the number of deliveries a day in a city to three. It is absolutely, it seems to me, a proper limitation upon a particular appropriation, and the Senator from Massachusetts, upon reflection, will see that I am entirely right.

Mr. HOAR. Undoubtedly an amendment limiting the expenditure of a particular sum of money appropriated, and doing nothing more, would not be liable to a point of order, but this is liable to the point of order in that it changes general law. There is no such law now. The law is that this matter is in the discretion of the Department. The amendment proposes to enact for the first time a law taking it from the discretion of the Department and making it an absolute rule. It is, it seems to me, with great deference to the Senator who has just spoken, as clear a case of a violation of our rule as can be put into words.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts that he can not find a precedent in the conduct of the affairs of the Senate where such a point of order has been held to be good. I submit that there is not a single instance in the history of legislation where such a point of order has been made and has been sustained. In the very essence of the thing, the only way in which this body can in any way effectively supervise an appropriation is by amendments of this character. This appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department differs from any other appropriation bill which we have.

It makes practically a lump appropriation for the different arms of the service without estimates being made in detail in the matter of the mail transportation. It has been held that that course is necessary for the conduct of the affairs of that Department; but I trust and hope to see yet that Congress will require even from this Department, specific estimates for the various branches of the postal service. The matter that is pending, brought up by the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, has been provided for by a lump appropriation made from year to year and increased from year to year without any knowledge on the part of Congress as to where the money is to be expended and how much the service is increased in the matter of deliveries in any of the cities. You can not know, except in a general way, whether there is any uniformity or justice in the expenditure of the appropriation.

But there is one fact that stands out. The administration of the Post-Office Department, efficient as it has been in the past, has been more extravagant than any other Department of the Government, until it has reached a point in the last three or four years where its revenues are much less than the expenditures of the Department. Congress and the Postmaster-General, and all who are in authority, should take up the question seriously, with a view not of crippling the service, but of reducing the expenditures, which have grown more rapidly than the population or the business of the country demands.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GORMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask for information. Upon what ground is it that the Post-Office Department has been, as to estimates, an exception to the other Departments? Has it been deemed impracticable?

Mr. GORMAN. In the beginning it was almost impossible to limit the Postmaster-General; for instance, in the matter of mail transportation upon star routes. New offices and new lines came up from year to year and the Department had to act promptly to meet the growing demands of the country. That was unquestionably the case when all the Western country was being rapidly settled and new towns quickly sprang up.

The Postmaster-General will always have to have discretion to some extent in an item such as the one we are discussing; but it can be just as well ascertained how many men are necessary and what the expenses ought to be in Philadelphia, Baltimore, or New York from year to year as for the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain how many men he will have to employ in collecting the customs. But the fact is that under the pressure of business people, under the desire, probably, for an increase of offices, the number of deliveries has been so rapidly increased in the cities until now they employ not only carriers on bicycles and in wagons, but the street railroads are used and special cars are put on them. The deliveries have run up in some instances, I understand, to seven or eight a day. Except in some extraordinary cases, possibly like the small business centers of the great cities, a service so frequent is utterly useless; nobody wants it.

Mr. TILLMAN. They do not have time to open one mail before another mail carrier appears.

Mr. GORMAN. There ought to be some limitation. Whether the amount mentioned in the amendment is the exact amount or not I do not know. I would very much have preferred, as the Senate has inserted a general clause for the investigation of all these questions, that this question could have gone over until we had some report, so that we could act upon it intelligently. I do not know what data the author of this amendment has to show that $3,000,000 would not be an excessive reduction, and possibly destroy the service.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that there is no sum fixed in my amendment, but the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] gave notice that if my amendment should be agreed to he would offer one reducing the amount from $13,000,000 to $10,000,000. The amendment I have offered simply provides that any money that is saved shall be covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. GORMAN. I thought it covered the latter part. As a matter of course, it would be covered back into the Treasury. As to the point of order, I hope that that will not be pressed. The Senate would not for the first time, I think, in its history hold that such a point was good. The Senate ought to have an opportunity, at all events, to vote upon the question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, one word more as to the point of order. Suppose that, under the discretion which the Postmaster-General has hitherto had to expend this large sum of money, he employed, we will say, 100,000 carriers in the United States, and the appropriation being made as a lump sum again this year, a proposition was made to amend by providing that there should be no more than 90,000 letter carriers employed by the Postmaster-General, would not that be a limitation, I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts, upon this specific appropriation which it would be perfectly within the province of the Senate to put on under its rules?

Mr. HOAR. May I ask a counter question?

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will wait one moment while I finish my own question.

Mr. HOAR. I will answer your question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not put my whole question, but I am willing that the Senator shall answer it in installments after he gets the whole of it. I admit that if the existing law provided that there should be 100,000 carriers, then it would be a change of existing law to provide that there should be only 90,000. But there is no law whatever on the subject. The Postmaster-General takes $13,000,000 and employs as many carriers as he chooses. He employs, we will say, 100,000. Now, we choose to economize by saying that, taking this gross sum of money, he shall not employ more than 90,000 carriers. That is the question I ask.

Mr. HOAR. The answer to the Senator from New Hampshire and to the Senator from Maryland is very simple. An amendment would be in order which provided that the particular money proposed to be appropriated should be expended only in paying a certain class of officers or a certain number of officers or for a certain kind of service; but the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from New Hampshire think the existing law is wrong, the existing law being that as many of these officers may be employed as the Post-Office Department in its discretion shall think fit, and they propose to substitute for that lawful discretion a permanent law, not affecting the next year, not affecting the expenditure of this appropriation, but a permanent, perpetual, and new law that there shall be no more than so many officials of a kind. That changes the existing law; and the Senator from Maryland, with entire logic and consistency, advocates the amendment because he says we need a new law on the subject. The bill provides that there shall be an inquiry into the whole matter, and that the new law shall then be proposed. My proposition is that a law, a provision, an enactment which takes away an existing legal power, a legal discretion, and, instead of that, substitutes a fixed and perpetual rule enacted by Congress, is a change in the existing law.

Mr. President, to say one word in further reply to the Senators who have spoken, it may be true that there ought to be fewer letter deliveries in our large cities, but I wish to say to those Senators that there is a great deal to be said on both sides of that question, and that these frequent deliveries in our large cities are in the main deliveries for the benefit of the rural communities outlying and to enable persons whose families dwell in those rural communities to live there instead of forcing them into the cities.

Persons who live 10 or 20 miles out of Boston, Mass., or of Concord, N. H., or wherever these frequent deliveries are, instead of traveling at the cost of half a day's time and half a day's earnings to do their shopping, their marketing, their purchases of dry goods, or their purchases of family food, can send a postal card, which will be delivered in two hours and answered in two hours more. That is the function which these frequent postal deliveries are performing. It is not in the interest of the man who is in the compact population, who gets these frequent mails, that the practice has grown up. It is in the interest of the man living in the rural district outside, where he can, instead of taking his horse, as one Senator said, and going himself with it or sending a messenger at the expense of a half day's work, that he can do the same thing with a penny postal card.

That is what makes civilization; that is what makes progress; that is what makes the rural community habitable and convenient for the men who reside there. These things that grow up in our legislative practices and our executive practices under all parties will generally be found, as a rule, not to be based in some greed or some favoritism or some desire to benefit the cities against the country or the rich against the poor, but they have a solid value and support in the reason of the thing, and this is one of them. You do not want Concord, N. H., to be a place where all the workingmen who are in its factories shall live in garrets and in seven-story or ten-story flat buildings, piled up there close to the place where they do their work.

You want the workmen in those towns—and I live in a city which is a model city of the kind, and I know how that is impossible—you want the people in those towns to spread out over an area of 5, 10, or 15 miles; you want them served by the street cars, so that they can travel across the extent of a large township for 5 cents; you want them to have their communication by telegraph and by telephone where they can afford the telegraph and the telephone, and by the postal card where they can not afford them; so that they can live in the country, where they have free air and open spaces and gardens, where their children can be brought up in healthful conditions.

Mr. President, the great death rates in this country are the death rates of children between 1 year and 6 years old in crowded populations and spaces of the manufacturing cities; and the problem of all statesmanship, State and national alike, is to spread out, where the air is pure, where the land is cheap, and the surroundings are healthful and tasteful, the populations that are gathering into our cities. This penny postage, this free and constant delivery and exchange by postal cards, instead of the costly travel to the center to attend to their business, is one great benefit of all others which our modern civilization and our modern administrative improvements have accomplished for the benefit of the poor; and those gentlemen who are standing here striking at this thing are striking at the very class of men for whom they believe honestly and sincerely they are standing.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOAR. It is not the great merchant, it is not the great grocer, it is not the great dry-goods man, to whom it is, as the Senator from South Carolina says, important whether he has one delivery of his mail or four or five deliveries a day. It is the poor fellow who, if he can not have his answer within three or four hours, has got to spend half a day in traveling to the center to do business for himself.

Now I will hear the question of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has been addressing himself so very much more to the merits of the question than he has to the point of order that I thought he had given that up. Do I understand the Senator to withdraw his objection to the amendment on the point of order?

Mr. HOAR. How can I tell what the Senator from South Carolina understands? Mr. President, there is not a man on this continent who can penetrate his understanding.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. If he will allow me, I think I have a little common sense.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has, undoubtedly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I leave it to the Senate if the Senator from Massachusetts has not addressed himself more to the merits of the proposition than to the point of order.

Mr. HOAR. The reason I did that was that Senators who spoke on the point of order addressed themselves to the merits of the proposition. I restated the point of order, and I will state it again. The point of order is that, the present law being that these expenditures may be made at the discretion of the Department, it is proposed, not to say alone that this money shall not be paid for a certain class of officials or a certain number of deliveries, but it is to substitute for that lawful discretion of the Department a general and permanent law.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator state the language of that law?

Mr. HOAR. It was moved in the amendment. The amendment is that it shall hereafter be the general law of this country for all time that there shall be no more than three deliveries.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. If he will have the amendment read, he will see that it does not provide for that.

Mr. HOAR. It has been read.

Mr. TILLMAN. We will have it read again to see who is right, the Senator or myself.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is familiar with Rule XX, which says that all questions of order shall be decided without debate; but he is very glad to have the question elucidated by Senators on both sides. He is likewise familiar with the provision in Rule XVI, that no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill. The present occupant of the chair, however, is of opinion that ordinarily a proposition to amend which proposes simply to direct how an appropriation shall be carried out might properly be considered in order; but taking the two views of the case and considering them together, the present occupant of the chair freely admits that he is in sufficient doubt to warrant him in submitting the question to the Senate under clause 2 of Rule XX, and the question is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, that motion is debatable, I suppose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is debatable.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the point of order under those circumstances.

Mr. QUAY. I renew the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to lay the amendment on the table, which is not debatable.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator to withdraw that motion for a moment, so that the Senator from South Corolina may modify his amendment and make the number of deliveries four instead of three.

Mr. TILLMAN. If we are having too much money spent and wasted in delivering mail in cities, and if Senators want more than three daily deliveries, they can vote the amendment down.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator that he make it four deliveries.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let me appeal to the Senator. We have got to get this economy slowly; we can not get all the economy we want at once.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am willing to accept the suggestion of four deliveries instead of three. I believe that will be a reduction in some of the cities.

Mr. CHANDLER. Perhaps next year we can start rural free delivery again.

Mr. TILLMAN. Next year I hope we will get it down to two deliveries again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on laying the amendment on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the motion in order to make the number of deliveries four?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question first is on the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the question was put upon the amendment as modified by agreement.

Mr. BERRY. No; the question put to the Senate was to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from South Carolina has modified his amendment so as to make the number of deliveries "four" instead of "three." The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move, in line 9, on page 4, before the word "million," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "ten."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the clause making appropriations for "free-delivery service," on page 4, line 9, before the word "million," it is proposed to strike out "thirteen" and insert "ten;" so as to make the appropriation "$10,085,400."

Mr. FAULKNER. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], as the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], which has been already adopted, controls absolutely the question of expenditure and requires any surplus to be turned back into the Treasury, which would be the case without the amendment, that to be on the safe side in every respect it would be better, without an investigation, not to fix or cut down the amount.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from West Virginia will allow me, he knows the legislation of Congress is done in conference committees. No one is better aware of that than he is, because he is frequently on conference committees on appropriation bills. By a very small majority, two or three, we have stricken out the whole appropriation for rural free delivery, and we have adopted an amendment on motion of the Senator from South Carolina which, in my judgment, will save at least $3,000,000. I may be wrong about it. It is the duty of the committee of conference, of which I suppose the Senator from West Virginia will be a member, to see whether the $3,000,000 reduction is enough; but in sending this bill to the House of Representatives, as we have struck a great blow for economy here to-day, I wanted to send it to the country. I do not want to have to argue that a reduction to four deliveries a day will be a great economy and result in a great reduction of expenditures, but I want to put it on the face of the act, and let the committee of conference take the two amendments and do what they think best with them.

I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I agree with every word that he has so ably said, except as to what he said about the point of order. The Senator has delivered a magnificent eulogy on the postal system of this country, and has shown that the benefits of it ought to extend out into the rural regions and not be confined to the cities. If the Senator from Massachusetts had been here a little while ago, when we had the amendment before us for rural free delivery, I have no doubt we should have had him on our side, and we might have had his vote, and his vote and the one or two others which would have been carried along with it by his eloquence would have saved the appropriation for rural free delivery.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I am in favor of extending rural free delivery all over the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was only calling attention to the fact that we lost the appropriation a little while ago, when, if we had had the Senator here and he had made the speech (with every word of which I agree except as to the point of order), we should have undoubtedly carried the provision.

Mr. HOAR. I did not vote at all, although I was in my seat. If I had voted, I should have voted with the majority of the Senate at that time, for the reason that I understand there is nothing in this bill which provides for a carefully devised and economical system of rural free delivery, which ought to be done, especially in this time of great expenditure for other reasons, and great deficits in the Post-Office Department. Besides, I understand there is in the bill a scheme for a commission on that subject, and I prefer to wait for the establishment of that important improvement, until we can get a well-devised system.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, I think the better way when you are for a thing is to vote for it rather than to postpone it. The world never makes progress in the way of reform or in any other way when the friends of progress are always voting against progress.

Mr. HOAR. Well, Mr. President, I do not suppose it is worth while spending a great deal of time about the opinion of the Senator from New Hampshire as to my shortcomings in this case. They are altogether too numerous, and I doubt whether it would be an economical expenditure of legislative time to do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has been very concise.

Mr. HOAR. I rather think we shall spend more millions of dollars than we shall save by this last vote if the Senator from New Hampshire takes up the time of this country by lecturing on what he conceives to be my mistakes.

Mr. CHANDLER. One word more. The Senator directed his argument at me very largely, when I agree with nearly every word he said. I thought I was apologizing to him, but as he does not take it kindly, I withdraw the apology. [Laughter.]

Mr. FAULKNER. I simply desire to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that I voted with him on both propositions he is favorable to; but I do not like to see the Senate—I do not care whether the bill goes to a conference committee or not—arbitrarily decide to cut down appropriations without knowing whether they will affect the service, even under the law as it has been agreed to, or not.

I do not think that is the way to do business in a great body like this; and as the same result is accomplished by the amendment which has been adopted by the Senate, and not a dollar can be expended to increase in any way the deliveries over four a day—if that remains the law, I do not think we ought to go to work and arbitrarily, without any information or knowledge, say that we will cut down the appropriation one million, two millions, three millions, four millions, or any other amount. It will be utterly impossible, in my judgment, for a committee of conference to receive from the Department the information upon that subject which will enable them to fix definitely the amount of the reductions which ought to be made.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia whether it is proposed to cut down this appropriation by the amount the Senator from New Hampshire proposes, of $3,000,000. What information is there, or has there been before the committee, which will show that there will be any reduction in the mail carrier service of the country? Is it not a fact that, with the exception of a few large cities, like New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Chicago, and San Francisco, in all the smaller cities throughout the country, like Spokane or cities of 40,000 people, the free delivery is only twice a day, and in some places three times a day?

In most of them I think it will be ascertained upon investigation that there are not over two deliveries a day in the residential portions and perhaps three times in the business portions. That covers a large multitude of cases throughout the country. Therefore, the reduction, if any, must be of a limited character; and, if any, in my judgment it will not be over a million dollars.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think I can make a suggestion——

Mr. FAULKNER. I can not give any information upon that subject.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me——

Mr. CHANDLER. I was appealing to the Senator to let me make a suggestion.

Mr. WILSON. I yield to the Senator, of course.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was going to make a suggestion like this, first replying briefly to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]: That is, if the committee of conference find that this reduction will reduce the gross amount of the appropriation unless an amendment is made in the Senate, they can not reduce it properly. If we agree to the thirteen millions, it stands there. So I suggest to the Senator from Washington that if it shall be found by the committee of conference on inquiry that the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina does effect any reduction, there shall be some amendment reducing the gross amount; but I am inclined to think the reduction too large, and therefore I will say, as the Senator kindly yielded to me, that I accept his suggestion.

Mr. WILSON. I could not resist yielding to the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I will move to make the amount $12,000,000 instead of $13,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be stated.
